In making the awards in the annual competition of the Peterborough Horticultural Society, the Judge, Mr. Fred Adams of Toronto, writes as follows:

Dear Mr. Williamson:

I beg to enclose herewith a summary of the results of the judging in the various sections in your annual competition, and trust that it will meet with your approval and also be satisfactory to the exhibitors.

Your society is to be congratulated on the general excellence of the work accomplished by its members and I was agreeably surprised at the extent to which home beautification has been carried out by the citizens generally. From my observations I think it quite within the mark that you should have a hundred or more entries in the competitions instead of twenty-five. Some of your best kept lawns and gardens have not entered the competition and it is just possible that these people have only to be invited and they will get into line.

In arriving at my decisions I might mention several points which any judge will always take into consideration. In properly keeping up lawns evenness of grade is very important, careful weeding necessary, and the turf must be of good texture and the grass a good color. It appears to me that a number of your people are afraid to use the rake as it should be used. Grass responds wonderfully to a vigorous combing, first one direction, then the other. It is next to impossible to injure a lawn with a rake. Flowers have not necessarily to be present in large quantities in order to win a prize. Bushy compact plants of any description, except possibly Cannas and Tuberous Begonias, are only obtained by careful "pinch-

HOLE CUT IN THE PAVEMENT

Roots of Tree Blocked McDonnell Street Sewer

A maple tree adorning the boulevard on the south side of McDonnell street near George street is directly responsible for a large gaping hole that had to be cut in the McDonnel street pavement. Roots from the tree found their way into the sewer and blocked it up causing a temporary suspension of the service. The root was removed from the pipe this morning.

SIR SAM IN ACTION.

A report from Ottawa hints that Sir Sam Hughes has resigned the post of Minister of War to accept command at the front. After filling Kitchener's shoes for awhile he is perhaps aiming to replace General Haig, or at least, give him some pointers as to the unwisdom of holding the Somme front. Sir Sam is a wonder, he goes on in the even tenor of his way regardless of the sniping of the home foes, in his own political household, and if rumor is correct he is aching to do a little active service—if only to show that even without "his man, Turpin" he can round up the enemy. Persiflage apart, Sir Sam is a soldier, a brave man, and a good fighter, and we should be glad to see him have his chance. If he could only lose his personal identity and allow full play to his fighting spirit, he would no doubt achieve in the field a greater glory than he seems, according to some of his political friends to have won at home. Sir Sam is a complicated compound; to a painfully patent self-conceit, he adds an indomitable energy and enterprise. He is brave and would perhaps shine more in fighting "off his own bat" than in helping others to fight. Anyway, give him a chance at the front. If he will, in a position of considerable responsibility, do as well as the Canadian soldiers have done, we shall be proud of his martial deeds.

THE DRY WEATHER.

Peterborough pronounced against prohibition, as represented by local option; and the weather man seems bound that we shall have full justification of our convictions. We voted against a dry city and he is showing us what a deplorable thing a dry city is. We are suffering to the point of calamity by the dry weather. We seem to have been singled out for scorching. For nearly two months there has been no rain to speak of —none any way that reached the spot. But all around us there have been substantial and beneficial showers, and even downfalls that may be called rains. There lies our hope. If we have incinerated fields and gardens in Peterborough we shall be able to supply our wants from the outside.

In the city the condition of drought has created a serious situation; gardens are, as a rule, a total failure. Potatoes will be as nothing, and vegetables, generally, a mighty short crop. It was a painful sight, in a market garden, last night, to see long rows of tomato vines, well laden with fruit, but with the unripened fruit literally roasted and destroyed on the vines. Table corn is a very uncertain crop, and the hot weather has blighted the general run of garden fruits.

The drouth is a serious thing in another way. Excavation to a depth of three feet has shown that there is no moisture whatever in the soil. It is no wonder that even well-established trees are suffering—shedding their leaves untimely. Unless rain in reasonable abundance comes soon we shall see many of our trees die. This will be a bad thing for many of our streets. Only plentiful watering can save many of these. The owners of street trees should see that they are saved by liberally watering them wherever hose can be made to carry city water. The water commissioners will certainly wink at a little stretching of their regulations if it will save our street trees. If we lose them it will take years to replace them; but we can plant potatoes next year and get a crop in a few weeks.

A CONTRAST.

There is a great difference in the standards required to measure the responsibility of cabinet ministers and that of people who work for a living and have to earn their wages. At a meeting of the Ontario cabinet yesterday an order-in-council was passed giving effect to the change of name of Berlin to Kitchener, voted for by the people of that city last January. Nearly eight months had elapsed and in the interval the dormant members of the government had done nothing to give effect to the wishes of the people of Berlin. The inconvenience and uncertainty the latter have suffered from seems to have counted for nothing.

The reason given for the delay is that the members of the cabinet were so scattered —"peradventure, sleeping or gone on a journey"—that it was impossible to get a quorum. The Premier and Minister of Education were sky-larking in Great Britain and the other ministers busy losing another by-election contest. Of course the excuse is made that they are absent on public business, with their salary still going on and their travelling, and incidentally their pleasuring expenses, paid.

Of course it is necessary to have ministers take a rest. After the strenuosity of a session, after the labour of passing a prohibition measure that won't hold—whiskey under a ban—a rest was necessary. It is not to be held that ministers of the crown should be deprived of reasonable recreation. But the point is the difference in the standard of responsibility set up for ministers of the crown as well as ministers of the gospel, and that by which ordinary citizens are required to be governed. Ministers have free run and little limit is placed to their wanderings and absence. If public duty is neglected, if a responsibility is evaded, not much is made of the shortcoming. But if a private employee, the man who earns his wages, is absent from the post of duty an hour, half a day or a day, there's close reckoning and the pay-check is clipped accordingly.

One is not so much concerned with the propriety of action or result in either case, but the contrast suggests that the ideal condition of democratic equality of treatment and regard of responsibility has not yet been reached. As it was in the beginning, is now and, apparently, and ever shall be, the homely proverb applies, "them as has gits" the full are made fuller, the lean are skinned to the bone. There is no such thing, however, as equality in its largest sense. It is not true that one man is as good as another, unless he is as good. But there is a possibility of, and demand for, equality of treatment, equality of condition and equality in the demand of personal responsibility.

The sting of the hardships of human conditions does not consist so much in the hardship itself as in the relative conditions that doom one man or one class to perpetual toil, whose every cessation involves loss of reward, while another man or class is not only better paid for actual discharge of duty, but is not penalized for neglect of duty or evasion of responsibility or loss of "time."

There does not seem to be any hope visible in the outlook that things in these regards will be radically changed or even sensibly ameliorated, but if some miracle should bring in the golden age of the golden rule in human relations; when every man should do his duty with equal zeal and fulness in his sphere of life, when every man has equal sense and equal requirement of responsibility, the world would witness more than a "sea-change into something rich and strange"; it would see a moral and material revolution. Justice as between man and man and class and class would obtain, and the inevitable result of such a condition would expand in greater human happiness. Material revolution would also result. It would cost less to govern the country; there would be less waste of resources; governments would be held individually and collectively to an equality of responsibility. There would not be tolerated reward of neglect of duty. In fine, it wouldn't take a government eight months to do the eight minutes of work required to pass an order-in-council changing the name of Berlin to Kitchener in token of repudiation of a name that stands for injustice and disregard of human right for one that stands for a man who did things—when they should be done; a man who stood up to his responsibility and squared his actions by his conscience. If all of us in the world of action and human relation could measure up to the standard of Kitchener, he animated by his spirit, especially our highly paid governing officials, only the good Lord Himself could foresee what the change would be.

BRITISH SOLDIERS ARE NOT DOWNCAST OVER SEVERE LOSSES

Officers Declare That Nation Is Exacting Big Price From Enemy —Compares It to Buying and Selling.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—To the civilian who notes the figures in the casualty lists issued every twenty-four hours, and sees fresh convoys of wounded arriving daily at the big London railway stations, it seems that England is paying a terrible and ghastly price for whatever she is gaining by the "big push."

On that point the opinions of the fighting men themselves are of interest, especially of leaders who are habituated to a somewhat larger purview than is possible in the ranks. Chance afforded a London reporter an opportunity to obtain the views of two such on the question of casualties. It was when a hospital ship laden with wounded reached the landing stage at Southampton, and he was permitted to go aboard.

"What do you think of the British casualties?' he asked the wounded second-in-command of a battalion which played its part at Fricourt, Montauban and Buzentin. He was sitting with another officer, the adjutant of a battalion which fought its way through La Boiselle to Contalmaison. Both were "walking cases' — one with two machine gun bullets in shoulder and arm, the other with bomb splinters in his left side. One had the experience of Loos for a standard of comparison; the other, the adjutant, has been at the front since the early days of 1915.

"Well, there's a good many of them, of course. Seeing the whole lot in a narrow funnel, as you do here, it must seem tremendous. There are a good many, of course. You can't move hand or foot on the western front without casualties. But I'm bound to say it wasn't the number, but the fewness of them, that impressed me out there. I mean, of course, for the fire we've had to face. What do you think?' He turned to the adjutant.

Just Buying and Selling.

"I think the proportion of casualties is pretty much the same as it's been in all offensive on this front; but the balance will prove totally different. This war is just buying and selling. Fifty thousand pounds is a lump of money to spend; but in business, people don't worry about the laying out of fifty thousand, if they see a good and safe return to it. It's always a good investment, if you can buy sixty or seventy, or a hundred thousand for it, isn't it?"

The major of the other battalion nodded and said: "Perhaps you've heard of those documents, or some of them, found on different prisoners, sent by German companies in the line to their different headquarters in rear, begging for reinforcements. Company reduced to nine men and one officer; battalion reduced to twenty men and three officers, and that sort of thing. That's worth paying for, you know, and, what's more, it can't possibly be got without paying. The whole thing is very different from Loos; I know that. We're getting an infinitely better run for our money.

"We are gaining in ground, but that's a small thing to the enormous gain in man-power and morale. You take it from me, our new armies can stand a lot of this — a deuced sight more of it than Germany could possibly stand. Our chaps are in better heart to-day than they've ever been since 1914.

"In the early days it was a case of pitting flesh and blood again metal. The Germans had the overwhelming advantage of use at every turn, and in every mortal way—except in the spirit of the men. He could never beat us at that. But in numbers, in preparation, and, above all, in guns and munitions, it was heads you win and tails I lose. But the boot's on the other leg now, and will be still more on the other leg when we've got a few more German positions. For, in addition to "everything else, mind, they had us beaten out of sight in the matter of relative positions, fields of fire, cover from fire, field of view, and all that. But the greatest difference is in the batter of guns and ammunition.

"Why, it wouldn't worry me much if our casualties were twice as heavy as they are—no, nor three or four times."

"Nor me, not a bit," agreed the adjutant. "We all know there must be big fighting, and lots of it, to finish this war; and there can't be big fighting without proportionately big casualties. On the basis on which we're fighting just now, I wouldn't care if our casualties were ten times as numerous; and do you know why? Because, on the present relation of gains to losses, of what we sell to what we're getting for it—if our casualties were ten times what they are, the war would be over before the summer is over, and Germany would be down an I out.

"And I'll tell you another thing," said the other officer. "A rare lot of these present casualties will be fighting fit again within a month from the time of landing, and you watch their smoke, when they get out again."

ROCKY ROAD FOR BURGLARS DOWN FAR ROCKAWAY

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—After having caused a night of excitement, bordering on terror, in the cottage and hotel colonies at Far Rockaway, two men, caught through the bravery of the residents of Claredon Hall, gave to the police about $10,000 worth of silver and other valuable articles which had been stolen from summer homes in Forest Hill, Kew Gardens, Woodmere, Lawrence, Cedarhurst and Far Rockaway. Therefore the police believe an end had been put to the many burglaries in these places.

Mrs. Michael Yacker was awakened in her cottage at No. 500 Broadway, Far Rockaway, at midnight by two men who were searching a dressing table. She screamed and the burglars fled, taking with them Mr. Yack's trousers, containing his watch and a roll of money. The police were notified by telephone.

Less than an hour later the same two burglars caused the commotion in Clarendon Hall, a large hotel in Central avenue, which is the summer residence of many New York families.

TWO WOMEN IN PURSUIT

Mrs. Rae de b. Henkle, asleep in her room on the third floor, was awakened by the burglars searching the drawe of a bureau. Although small, Mrs. Henkle was brave, and she sprang from bed, demanding to know what the intruders wanted.

As the burglars ran she called for help, and pursued them. Her cries awakened most of the persons in the hotel. As Mrs. Henkle followed the two men to the second floor she was joined by Mrs. Harry Houghey, who found the electric flashlight held by one of the men burned into her face. She knocked the pocket lamp from his hand and struck at him.

By the time the burglars reached the main floor most of the men residents were in the halls in their pajamas. Harry C. Gunther, proprietor, pursued the two through the dining room into the rear yard, where they separated. Mr. Gunther followed the man who climbed a fence and plunged through a window into the kitchen of the Arlington Hotel. Before Mr. Gunther could get over the fence that man had emptied the several purses and handbags he had gathered in Clarendon Hall and has escaped through another yard. But his "call" there aroused all the residents of the Arlington, adding to the excitement

TRY TO ATTACK PRISONER

In the meantime several men of the Claredon, including Frank Potters, owner of motion picture theatres, and George Macey, assistant to Theodore P. Shonts, had pursued the other man down Lockwood avenue toward Broadway. Mr. Macey caught a man a block away and returned him to Claredon Hall. There several men tried to attack the prisoner, but Mr. Gunther held them off while they waited for a policeman.

Half an hour later another man was arrested at the Far Rockaway station of the Jamaica trolley, and he and the man caught by Mr. Macey were identified by Mrs. Henckle, Mrs. Houghey, Mrs. Yacker and others. Herman Schrader said they were the same men to whom he had served drinks in his hotel, opposite Claredon Hall, between the time the burglars fled from the Yacker cottage and the time they entered Claredon Hall.

BIGGEST FREIGHT CAR TIE-UP IN THE HISTORY OF AMERICA

The shortage of freight cars is due in a large measure to the shortage of labour. If there's a day's delay in loading and another at the other end of the particular route, there are two days lost. If one thousand cars are being handed at a busy centre, it simply means in terms of days that 2,000 days are lost. And any railway man of either the passenger or freight departments will soon make it plain to you that all lines are heavily handicapped by the gaps that simply can't be filled under the present conditions. A great deal of last year's grain is still unshipped. In this respect the situation is regarded as record that one year's crop should be treading on the heels of its predecessor. The greatest car shortage in the history of America is the prediction recently made of the difficulties that are gathering about the railways. In the United States the handling of munitions is an exceptionally heavy branch of the freight business and the conditions across the border materially affect the Canadian situation which is up a tree of its own. Hence you will notice few empties on the local sidings. Certainly the G.T.R. are using everything that can pass the censor of freight cars.

THE GERMAN LOSSES.

A correspondent in an American paper has totalled up the German losses since August, 1914, and finds that these (including dead, wounded, and slightly wounded) are about equal to the population of the following cities: San Francisco, Detroit, Providence, St. Paul, Denver, Minneapolis, Washington, D.C., Milwaukee, Indianapolis and Rochester. Another way of putting it is that the losses would wipe out the whole population, men, women, and children, of Berlin, which is a city in Prussia.—Montreal Herald.

The Dollar Bill Is Not Iron Man It Used to Be

Prices Keep Advancing so Steadily That a Dollar's Purchasing Power Grows Proportionately Less—Recent Market Changes.

CANNED GOODS HIGHER

The old folks have told us that in their day the dollar bill was a regal piece of currency. Nine of them represented for a long time the maximum weekly wage, and not a few of the old toilers brought up large families on a dollar a day and with the help of a Jersey cow and three or four pigs. Then, the dollar bill was familiarly called an iron man; in the cost of living race it was a centipede, so far could it extend itself over ordinary demands.

But in these times it's a lame duck, a piece of tin, scarcely the equivalent of a shirt for the baby. The dollar mark has lost its magic; it is no longer an open sesame in the shops of the butcher, the baker, and the shoemaker.

Canned Goods Very High.

Recent advances in prices illustrate the waning influence of the dollar in the various marts of trade. The canning magnates have announced the opening wholesale prices of peas, tomatoes and some other lines at the present retail price. Peas have been selling at ten cents a tin. They will henceforth retail at two tins for 25 cents. Tomatoes may be purchased for 15 cents. Small fruits, such as raspberries, strawberries, etc., were 15 cents a tin; they will now be 20 cents, and possibly 25 cents.

An Effect of the War.

In other words, a dollar is a piker in the canned goods department of the provision and grocery shops. The canners explain the increased prices quite convincingly. Prices are generally ascending, and they have swept the canning business all along the line from the cost of raw tin to the cost of field labour. The war is bound to take its toll from the patriotic and the unpatriotic alike. Those who evaded the patriotic funds, will find the grocers' prices inflexible, or rather the business men among the trade. The others will give all kinds of credit, and more than that, may continue selling at the old prices and wonder why both ends never meet.

Lemons Hit the Top.

Lemons that used to sell wholesale at $2.00 a box are now $9.50, and the wise retailers are charging 60 cents a dozen for them. This advance is due to the high cost and the precariousness of shipping from Messina through the "sub" infested Mediterranean.

Flour is Dearer.

Bread flour that sold for $3.40 a cwt. a short time ago is now quoted at $4.25, and the pastry grade, formerly $2.75, is now up to $3.50. And there are indications that the worst is yet to come. Chicken feed, horse feed, bran and other kindred products are all in the same "flivver," with the muffler open.

Coming back to vegetables, tomatoes, just now, are as high as 75 cents a basket, and in other years they were high at 25 cents. Locally the crop suffered under the scorching of Sunday and Monday. In the words of Mr. Robert Bestard, of North Monaghan, they were literally cooked.

Potatoes 60c a Peck.

Potatoes are 60 cents a peck, listen to that—a peck, not a bag, and the prospects—but spare the details.

Grocers report that the biscuit manufacturers are so handicapped by the labour problem it is almost impossible to produce the finer lines, those that are made by hand. Hence, in some factories the bulk of the product are the machine-made goods. Throughout the province grocers report that they rarely receive completely filled orders.

SALES OF ANTIQUES INCREASED BY WAR

Many of the Landed Gentry of Europe Forced to Sell In the Slump That Preceded the War.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The effect of the war upon the landed gentry of Europe and upon those who have acquired wealth because of the war is peculiarly emphasized in the growing market for antique furniture and art objects within the last few months.

In London, nearly every other day, so says Frank Partridge, who is regarded here and in America as a preeminent authority, there occur auction sales that reflect an abnormal demand in America, as well as in the European countries, for antiques.

While during the first twelve months of the war the market for antique treasures sagged to nearly nothing, it has picked up to such an amazing etxent, according to Mr. Partridge, that within the last four months more than $10,000,000 worth of furniture and objects d'art have been bought by eager connoisseurs in Europe and Ame rica. Of the aggregatae sales of antiques, America has absorbed 60 per cent..; in other words, America has put $6,000,000 in the hands of London's antique dealers since last week.

Although prices dropped sadly just after the war, until the antique dealers preferred to keep their stocks intact rather than let things go without profit, they have picked up within the last six months, until now they are, in most instances, as high as before the war began. And as the demand keeps on, the prices keep going up.

"Every week, yes, I might say every day, big auction sales of antique furniture and objects d'art are going on in London and high prices are prevailing," said Mr. Partridge.

"When the war came, most Americans who wanted to buy felt they would hold off until the dealers would feel obliged to sell for next to nothing. It was a natural impulse and one shared by many buyers throughout Europe.

"On account of this tendency, at the beginning of the war there were a few bargains to be picked up, of which the Englishmen took advantage. The Englishman has always been a buyer of antiques, and he saw his opportunity when the market was glutted with rich treasures. It must be borne in mind that, although America buys 60 per cent. of the antique furniture over here and an equal percentage of other objects of art, still the Englishman himself is always in the market.

"With the war there came an entirely new class of people looking for antiques; they were those who had acquired sudden riches through supplying Great Britain and her allies with things needed in running the war. They are the ones who have been supplying ammunition, clothes, everything, in fact, to the belligerents. In Germany as well as in England, France, Holland, and the United States, fortunes have sprung up as a result of the war.

"Now, it's just this class of people who have been the big buyers. Naturally we don't get any of the German demand here, and little, comparatively, goes to France right now; although France is buying, while waiting until the end of the war for its antiques to be shipped on.

"While America waited in the earlier months of the war for prices to drop, if found, because Englishmen and others in Europe were dipping into the market, that it would have to buy, itself, if it hoped to get any of the rich treasures the market afforded. So America has now plunged into the market, and every steamer carries over immense shipmnts of antiques.

"So far as the likelihood of a slump goes, it may be said it doesn't exist at all. The whole question hangs upon supply and demand. Where does the supply come from? Europe. And from what class? The aristocracy. In the general slump that seized Europe for the ten years before the war, the aristocracy let go of much of its store of antiques. The market became filled with it.

"The war has not hit, thus far, any but the landed gentry of Europe, and it is their stuff that is going into the auction rooms; although it must be said that large part of what is now being sold on the market reached there in the time just before the war.

"Yes, the war has hit the landed gentry and people with fixed incomes who have no working business. Therefore, the supply must come from this source more and more as the months go on. But right here I want to say that the tenacity of the Englishman in holding to his treasures as long as he can, although at a deprivation is amazingly manifest. His disposition to wait and not become panicky, keeping what he has until actually forced to part with it, is one vital factor in the spirit of the English in his war. It is that element that will count as much as anything else, in enabling the Government to push the war through to a conclusive end.

"One auction room in London is now selling $5,000,000 worth of antique furniture a week, of which 60 per cent. is going to America. This house sells half the antique ware in London. Six months ago it hardly had a sale worth the telling, excepting to Englishmen.

"The sales now consummated every week—every day, one might say—in antique furniture that goes to America, embraces Chippendale, Queen Anne and all Gregorian furniture and early English styles. America is getting the pick of the market now and is taking advantage of it."

Slashed Woman Across the Face With His Razor

MONTREAL, Aug. 24.—With six razor wounds over her face and hands, Mrs. Josephine Papineau, a waitress living at 180 Cadieux street, was taken to the General Hospital, where it required sixteen stitches to sew up the wounds. The woman, though suffring from loss of blood, is not in a serious condition. Jimmy Marino, alias Mariano, an Italian, of no known address, or occupation, was placed under arrest, charged with committing the stabbing. Shortly after 7 o'clock yesterday morning, Constable Chouinard, who was about to awaken slumberers on Champ de Mars, heard a woman's screams and saw a man running away along Craig street. The runner turned at St. Agathe lane and led the constable a merry chase through St. Dominique, Vitre, Black Lane, Legauchetiere, St. Hubert, to Vitre, where he was caught.

The prisoner, who gave his name as Marino, was taken to headquarters, and will be arraigned this afternoon.

An ugly looking razor was picked up by a passerby and handed to the constable. Marino is charged with carrying the weapon.

GREECE'S ROLE IN THE WORLD WAR

Her Offers of Co-operation Having Been Rejected, She Will Bide Her Time—Then Will Join Entente

Her Sole Ambition to Unite the Greek Peoples Under One Flag.

ATTITUDE OF M. VENIZELOS.

Reasons Why Electors Are Wide Apart on the Questions of War and Neutrality.

By Adamantios M. Polyzoides.

After all that has been said and written, there remains the positive and undeniable fact that Greece forms the centre of the Balkan situation. Roumania, no doubt, is a no less important factor, but her geographical position is such as to make any movement, this or that side of the war, extremely difficult and risky as well. The Russian menace from the east is just as serious as the Austrian from the west, and as long as the war situation on the Moldavian frontiers does not enter a decisive stage Roumania wisely abstains from any attempt that might compromise her attitude with either of the belligerents.

If we take into consideration the aims and purposes of the national policy of Roumania, as regards her "unredeemed provinces," we will find that the Roumanian people have at heart just as much the question of Bessarabia as that of the seven provinces occupied by the Austrian Crown. One might even go further and say that the whole nationalist movement in Roumania is rather a political issue than a widespread sentiment. And when to this is added the fact that German influence in Roumania has been supreme in the last five decades, while relations with Russia had to suffer the Bessarabian sting, it is not difficult to understand why it is only natural for the Roumanians to favour peace and continuel neutrality, inasmuch as by this stand they seem to reap bountiful financial benefits as long as this war lasts. As regards her post-war position Roumania feels secure, whatever the outcome of the European conflict.

Aims of Greece.

With Greece the question is altogether different. There the Nationalist movement forms the Credo of the whole people. The existence itself of the Hellenic State has no other reason, no other purpose than to put the whole of the Greek nation under the same flag. If Greece to-day is deep in a national debt that surpasses 2,000,000,000 francs, while she lacks many and in some instances essential internal improvements, this is due exclusively to the fact that the largest part of her resources always has gone to the army and navy and other incidental expenses of a continued preparedness. The history of the Cretan revolutions and successive Greek mobilizations and the subsequent three wars in the last twenty years is too well-known to warrant any repetition.

When the European war broke out Greece was the first country to offer the Allies her services, which were rejected by the Triple Entente, which did not want to have any Balkan complications at the time, and it is interesting to note that when Greece made her proposals early in October, 1914, there was not one among the Allies to favour Greek intervention. England for one wanted everybody to let Turkey alone, France did not care to have any more participants in the war, while Russia absolutely objected to any movement on behalf of any one of the Balkan States at that time.

The reason of Greece's eagerness to join the Entente Powers at the beginning of the war lay in her desire to forestall any similar movement on behalf of the other Balkan States and to win an early recognition of her national claims by the Entente Powres, to be used at the proper time.

When Turkey finally joined the Central Powers, Greece for the second time offered her services to the Entente, and was again disappointed by the flat rejection of her terms. Greece at the time offered to attack Turkey, provided the assistance or if not that, the benevolent neutrality of Bulgaria was secured. Great Britain, answering the Greek proposal, found that the whole thing was premature, and needed further consideration; Russia absolutely objected to any Greek troops acting against Constantinople, which was to be the objective of the campaign, while France accepted Greek co-operation only with the proviso that Greek troops would ben sent not only against Turkey, but wherever most needed by the supreme command of the allied forces.

BUCKED AT DARDANELLES PLAN.

When the Dardanelles expedition was decided upon, chiefly by Great Britain and then by her allies as well, the Greek Government, represented by M. Venizelos, thought that the opportune moment had come, and immediately declared for war on the side of the Entente. To that King Constantine and the Greek General Staff objected, on the ground that the expedition was ill-conceived, badly planned and therefore doomed to failure beforehand. Later on this stand of King Constantine and the Greek Staff was approved by the late Lord Kitchener himself on the last visit he made to Athens last November.

How M. Venizelos resigned, and how he came back to power, and how he was again forced out of office when he insisted that Greece ought to have stood by Serbia after her attack by Bulgaria, are facts well known. M. Venizelos, according to statements he has made on various occasions in the last few months, did not expect war with Bulgaria when he mobilised the Greek army on the day following the Bulgarian mobilisation. On the contrary, he was of the opinion that were Bulgaria convinced of the Greek resolve to attack her immediately King Ferdinand's troops attacked Serbia, she would demobilize her army, after which Greece might also demobilise hers.

Bulgaria, according to M. Venizelos, could not have stood a simultaneous attack from the Serbian and Greek forces, no matter how much assistance she might have obtained from her Teuton allies. She would, therefore, have had to submit immediately, and to have continued neutral to the best advantage of Serbia, and her allies. While M. Venizelos insisted on this course on purely military motives, on the other hand, he felt himself in duty bound to keep the faith in the matter of the Greek-Serbian agreement, which he considered as a very substantial asset from a political standpoint.

To this view was opposed the opinion that the Greek-Serbian Treaty, when conceived, contracted and signed was a strictly Balkan agreement, which contemplated an attack by either Bulgaria or Turkey on Serbia or Greece, but which never took into account the case of a European war in which either of the contracting parties might be involved. Greece in no wise would have consented to assist Serbia against a combined attack by Bdlgaria, Austria, Germany and Turkey; such could never have been the spirit and the letter of the Greek-Serbian Treaty. Greece, therefore, was perfectly honest when refusing to assist Serbia with her army, while on the other hand she was willing to extend any other help to a friendly and in certain cases an allied nation.

From the military standpoint, however, the position of Greece was more serious, according to the view of the opponents of M. Venizelos. Bulgaria when mobilized has massed on her Serbian and Greek frontiers an army of nearly 400,000 men, assisted by nearly 200,000 German troops, which were coming from the north in order to effect a junction with the armies of King Ferdinand. To these forces an entire Austrian army 250,000 strong, was added, making the whole force opposed to Serbia and Greece 850,000 men. To these Serbia and Greece could at best oppose less than 600,000 troops to battle on three fronts. The Allies had to furnish a contingent of 250,000 to equal the Bulgar and Teuton forces, the latter being able to have also the assistance of at least three Turkish divisions of a total strength of 50,000 men.

The Allies landed at Saloniki the following forces early in October, 1915: Firstly, 3,000 troops, and then by gradual stages a force of 60,000 to 70,000 men. By the middle of November the Allies had in Saloniki 140,000 men, of whom only 58,000 had time to take part in the campaign before Serbia was crushed. In the opinion of the opponents of M. Venizelos, the Bulgar and Teuton forces did not use all their strength against Serbia, but always held behind a reserve equal to the Greek Army for any emergency, so that had Greece joined her resistance would have been broken long before the Allies could have been of any assistance to her.

M. Venizelos did not refuse this argument. He simply pointed out that it would have been more glorious as well as profitable for Greece to suffer Belgium and Serbia's fate than to have incurred the enmity of the allied powers of the Entente.

Thus Greek public opinion was divided, and subsequent events helped only to widen the gap separating M. Venixoles, as representing the war party, and his opponents, who favoured continued neutrality as the only means of Greek salvation. The Venizelists objected to take part in the general election of December, 1915, when the question of war or peace was flatly put to the electorate. Did M. Venizelos honestly believe at the time that the Greek people favored war? Then there was no reason why he should have abstained from the polls. Was he afraid that the people would vote for neutrality? Then there was no reason why he should have insisted on his former policy.

There came shortly afterward the oppressive measures on behalf of the Entente Powers, who suspected that Greece was actually following a pro-German policy. This stand on the part of the Allies was attributed by the anti-Venizelists to the instigations of Venizelos himself, who is considered to be the Entente's man in Athens. The measures took the form of the occupation of Greek territory in Corfu, Milos, and Cephalonia, in addition to Mudros and Tenedos and other points of the Greek Macedonian forts of Kara-Bournou and Dova Tepe; the blowing up of the Demir-Hissar Bridge, and other arbitrary acts, and finally the blockade of the Greek ports, and the delivery of the latest note which resulted in the fall of the Skouloudis Ministry, and the demobilization of the army. All these things helped to create an atmosphere of distrust, and the fear that the Entente, after all, might be converted to German methods, as concerned the treatment of the small and feeble nations which only wanted to be let alone.

One could hardly expect Germany to remain idle in the face of such blunders committed by her enemies in Athens; the allied Ministers themselves, in subsequent meetings they had in the Greek capital, came to the conclusion "that it was unfair to punish the entire Hellenic people for an attitude of which only their own Government might be held responsible." To the activities of Baron Schenk—who played Dr. Dernburg in Greece—the energies of M. Salancon, Athens correspondent of the Agence Radio, were opposed.

After all, however, the conclusion remains that the Greek people never for a moment became pro-German, because it is the Greek nature not to change their sympathies, even though disappointed through the old ones. The only result, therefore, of the present crisis seems to be an increased love and devotion to Greece herself on the part of her sons, and the continuance of a neutrality, always benevolent, to the Entente, and so it will be until the day when the interests of Hellenism show in a clear way that the duty of the nation is to fight. On tha day Greece's place will be nowhere else but at the side of her old friends and protectors, France, Great Britain and Russia, against Bulgaria, against Turkey and, furthermore, against all comers.

HAS ANYBODY HERE SEEN DAVID?

David McDonald Broke Away From Patrol Sergeant Kidd While on His Way to The County Gaol

David McDonald is a much wanted man in local police circles. He was one of two brothers who were sentenced to six months in gaol on a vagrancy charge. While being removed from the police station to the county gaol, a distance of about three blocks, the fugitive slipped the handcuff from his wrists and was soon lost in the jungles that skirt the edge of the C. P.R. property along the water front at the east end of Simcoe street. This tragic little scene was staged at the corner of Queen and Simcoe street last evening. Patrol Sergeant Kidd was in charge of David and John McDonald, two brothers of Scotch descent with a long prison record. The two men were handcuffed together when David made a quick twist with the above result. The police are of the opinion that this was not his first attempt at slipping a bracelet from his wrist. He had a very small wrist and the handcuff was closed almost as far as it would go.

Information re McDonald has been sent to the various police departments throughout Ontario and the man's apprehension is looked for at an early date.

LONDON PREPARES FOR AIR RAIDS

Expects Resumption of Zeppelin Attacks as Days Shorten, Says London Newspaper Man

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—Preparations for the repulse of Zeppelin attacks of hitherto unprecedented scope are now almost complete in London because a bitter resumption of the Prussian "campaign of frightfulness" is expected by the British authorities when the daylight hours are shortened. This information was obtained from Mr. Gordon Bruce, of the London Daily Mail, who arrived in New York on board the Saxonia of the Cunard line. Mr. Bruce said he came to this country on a special assignment for that newspaper.

As an American Mr. Bruce deplores the lack of aerial defences in this country, and remarked that by proper employment of their aerial observers the naval forces of almost any one of the greater European nations could reduce our Atlantic harbour defences.

"Concerning aviation defences I have had a few opportunities to observe the splendid efficiency of the British," said Mr. Bruce. "I have been carried in one of the warplanes above the battle lines in France and I also made a trip in an aeroplane across the Channel with an officer of the Royal Flying Corp. The aviation squadrons are England's strongest bulwark to-day. Such defence, in the light of new conditions of warfare, is the most important factor in the preservation of any country's territorial integrity.

"While the European countries number their aeroplanes by the thousands, America numbers hers by the scores, and from what I have been able to learn the army or navy has no machines that could be utilized to any appreciable degree in actual warfare. The bomb dropping capacity of several of the British machines is enormous."

Mr. Bruce said that the people of Great Britain were supremely confident in the matter of the war's outcome. The Prussians, he said, are expected to retreat in the autumn, and the termination of hostilities is looked for in a year.

On board the Saxonia also was Mr. William Phillips, European manager of the Canadian Northern Railroad, Mrs. Phillips and their three children.

The Saxonia brought back to this port the crew of twenty-five men of the Charles F. Mayer, a 1,200-ton steamship which was sold by the Consolidated Coal Company of Philadelphia to the Hudson Bay Company. The vessel is now being used in British waters, one of the men said.

The Saxonia, under the command of Captain Ernest G. Diggie, of the Royal Naval Reserve of Great Britain, cleared from Liverpool on August 12 with 184 passengers, of whom 129 were in the cabin.

This man evidently thinks he has a problem, but no doubt after the 16th it will solve itself.

Oh the water, the dirty unhealthy water,
The Doctor says if you drink it,
It is sure to make you queer,
We're in a funny position,
If they bring in Prohibition
It's death if we drink the water,
We'll die if they cut out the beer.

IN A QUANDARY.

OFFENSIVE STARTED IN THE BALKANS—Map shows the Struma River district northeast of Salonika between Butkova and Tahines lakes. The territory is in Greece just south of the Bulgarian border. It is expected this territory will be the scene of some big battles when the Allies take the offensive against the Teutons and Bulgars.

BUD FISHER WINS IN STATE SUPREME COURT

Establishes His Complete Right to the Celebrated Funny Cartoon Which He Created

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—Harry C. "Bud" Fisher, creator of the comic cartoons "Mut and Jeff" gained a complete victory in the Supreme Court to-day, when Justice Greenbaum decided that he, and not the New York American, had the right to use the title as applied to the "strips".

"Mutt and Jeff" comicalities have been known to Journal readers for some months, the Journal being the only newspaper in Ottawa to publish them. Other papers throughout the country obtain them from the Wheeler Syndicate, which has a contract with Fisher.

A year ago after Fisher left the American and signed a contract with the Wheeler Syndicate, an effort was made by the cartoonist's former employers to prevent the artist from using the words "Mutt and Jeff" in connection with his strips of these fanciful characters. A suit was brought against the syndicate. Thereupon Fisher and the syndicate brought individual suits against the Star company, publishers of the American.

in his decision Justice Greenbaum dismisses the Star Company's suit, finding for the syndicate. In the other suits he finds for the plaintiffs, so Fisher and the Syndicate win all three and Journal readers will no longer be deprived of "Mutt and Jeff" at their supper tables after the artist recovers from his recent automobile accident and is again able to use his right hand.

The justice says Fisher first created "Mutt" in San Francisco in 1907 and that year entered into a contract with Hearst's San Francisco Examiner whereby he was to receive $200 a week for the first year, $250 a week for the second, third and fourth years and $300 a week for the fifth year. In 1909 he created the character "Jeff". Later he came to New York and worked for the American, also controlled by Mr. Hearst. When his contract expired he accepted an offer from the Wheeler Syndicate. By the terms of this he receives $1,000 a week and shares in the profits of the sale of the cartoons.

When the case came up for trial the American admitted it had employed artists to continue the strips and asserted it had the right to use the title "Mutt and Jeff". The strips were to be executed as nearly like Fisher's handiwork as possible.

"In the opinion of the court," says the justice "the Star Company is not entitled to the trade name or mark "Mutt and Jeff", the right thereto being now vested in the Wheeler Syndicate under its existing contract with Fisher, subject to such rights, if any, reserved herein by Fisher."

SATURN'S ECLIPSE ON AUGUST 25TH

The moon will pass between earth and the planet Saturn, blotting out from view entirely the latter, at exactly three minutes past 3, mean time, during the morning of August 25th. This is really an eclipse, resembling an eclipse of the sun to a great extent. At five minutes past 4, Saturn will serenly emerge again, having been hidden from view for over an hour.

ST. JOHN'S S. S. PICNIC ON 29TH

A well-attended meeting of the officials of St. John's Church and Sunday School was held last night in the Guild Room, the Rev. Canon Cornish presiding. The picnic for the Sunday School to Bewdley will be on Tuesday next, August 29th, by the "Geneva," and a hearty invitation is extended to the parents to come along and spend a happy day with the children.

The children's tickets will be given out on Sunday next, when the winter session opens at 3 p.m.

CENT A MILE FOR THE SOLDIERS

GENERAL LOGIE IS AFTER RAILROADS FOR CENT A MILE.

CAMP BORDEN, Aug. 23.—Officers commanding Western Ontario units have been asked to give their opinion on a leave of four days once a month for their men instead of every fortnight. The matter was brought up some time ago and dropped when some of the units closer to the camp than others showed some opposition on the suggestion.

As now, the idea then was to allow a brigade to have four full days' leave each month. At present the training is seriously injured by the leaves of the men from Western Ontario. From what can be learned tonight it seems more than likely that the four days' leave will be decided upon.

To obtain a rate of one cent a mile each way for soldiers, Major-General Logie has written to the Dominion Railway board. Because of the fortnightly leave and assigned pay, a private from London or points farther west has 20 cents a day to spend. Each month $8,400 is given by the 142nd to the railroads in exchange of transportation.

TWENTY-FOUR BANDS AT C.N.E.

Twenty-four bands from Camp Borden, including all from Western Ontario, but the 118th, will play at the Canadian National Exhibition on the evening of September 5. On that date H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught will be at the exhibition.

Thirty cases of ivy-poisoning have been admitted to the camp hospital since Saturday, a state of affairs not unexpected. Many men slept among the weeds on the night of the manoeuvres. There are also many men in the lines suffering from the inconvenience.

Major Stewart, 149th, who is suffering from typhoid, is reported to be in a good condition.

EXCHANGE OF WAR DERELICTS MAKES HORRIBLE PAGEANT

Stockholm Sweden.—The great task of exchanging wounded prisoners between Russia and Germany through Sweden will be continued throughout the summer. The exchange applies only to those prisoners totally unfit to serve again. One glimpse at a train load of these miserable war derelects leaves no doubt as to their disability. Missing legs, missing arms, sightless eyes, shattered jaws, twisted spines, and here and there the glassy stare which tells its own story of a burned out brain—these are the evidences the Swedish people see of the war around that surrounds them.

The transfer through Sweden is handled entirely by the Swedish Red Cross or "Roda Korset," of which Prince Carl, brother of the King, is the actual and active head. The German prisoners are received from the Russians at Haparanda at the Swedish-Finnish frontier, only a few miles south of the sweep of the Arctic circle. In trains specially fitted for their use the maimed and twisted wrecks of men are taken south through the entire distance of Sweden, a distance of three nights and two days, the pace of the train being timed for the utmost of comfort.

At Trelleborg, the southermost part of Sweden, the one time soldiers of the Fatherland are placed upon German hospital transports for the short sail across the southern reach of the Baltic to the German port of Sassnitz. From there they are taken to Hamburg and held in detention for one month as a guarantee against the importation of any infectious disease. This quarantine period ended, the men, most of them dependents for life, are returned to their relatives and homes.

In the case of the Russian prisoners the operation is just reversed. They are received from the German ships at Trelleborg and are taken to the north through the glowing sunshine and the mysterious nights of the Arctic latitudes, where soon the days will fade one into another with only a shadow of twilight in between.

The rate of exchange is now about 3,000 prisoners a month. As the percentage of "totally unfit" among the men must be comparatively small some idea may be gained as to the total number of prisoners held on both sides of the Russian-German battle line.

The first train started north from Trelleborg with the burden of 230 physical and mental deficients — a ghastly assortment of parts of men As they bobbled or were carried down the gang plank of the hospital steamer at Trelleborg the procession seemed like a veritable outpouring from the depths of an Inferno. It was plain to be seen that each man there had come to grips with Death and had fought his way out of that grim clutch only at a terrible cost of wound and scar.

The debarkation from this strange ship of broken men had been under way for ten minutes perhaps when there suddenly appeared among the human fragments a man who had been entirely lost sight of as he made his way to the shore. Both of his legs were gone and his head scarcely showed above the gangway rails as he swung the remnants of his body along between two stubby little crutches. It soon developed however that he was not alone in his misery for there were several others like him.

GERMAN WORKING CLASSES BITTER AGAINST PRINCE

London, August 23.—The Berne correspondent of the London Daily News ascribes to an "eminent neutral" the narration of a conversation he had with a prominent official of the German Foreign Office.

"The situation is not brilliant but certainly not bad. We cannot be beaten and the chances of winning are still favorable. We obviously have had some disillusionments. We thought we could crush Europe in three months, and we came very near doing it.

"There have been miscalculations—diplomatic miscalculations. There have been military errors also but the situation to-day is not unsatisfactory. It is a sheer physical impossibility to beat us. Mind you, I do not say we are going to dictate peace in Paris, or even going to dictate peace at all, but I do say no one shall dictate peace to us."

CROWN PRINCE UNPOPULAR

The "neutral" who was in Berlin in July, said that while confidence in the Kaiser remained absolutely unabated and amounted almost to a cult, on the other hand the unpopularity of the Crown Prince has lately reached remarkable proportions.

The working classes especially are bitter against him and firmly believe that the failure to take Verdun was due to his blunders. They blame his egotism for the unavailing sacrifice of more than 300,000 German soldiers.

Among these same working classes the desire for peace is widespread, but there is no indication of any revolutionary tendency which might compel the governing classes to make peace. The commercial and professional classes share these peace sentiments. Allied threats of an economic war are described as bluff.

Father and Son Commit Murder

SUNDANCE, Wyo., Aug. 23.—After L. H. Hampton, a prosperous ranchman, had been shot without warning and mortally wounded by George C. Russell, 24, a deputy sheriff, John D. Russell, 50, President of the Black Butte Lead and Marble Company, pushed aside persons who went attempting to succor the dying man and deliberately sent a second bullet into Hampton's body.

The shooting took place at a ranch twelve miles from Sundance, early Sunday morning, while a dance was in progress. Hampton died four hours later. The Russels fled to Sundance, where they gave themselves up. They are held without bail. Public feeling is intense.

The motive of the shooting of Hampton by George Russell is said to have been the latter's alleged failure to secure the position of forest range superintendent which his victim held. The stockmen of the district hire or recommend the forest range superintendent and they are said to have turned a deaf ear to Russell when he sought Hampton's job.

The Russels, George and his father, John D. Hampton and others from miles around were attending a dance at the Chalmers rapch. As Hampton walked from the porch into the dance hall, George Russell stepped from a nearby doorway with a revolver in his hand and without a word sent a bullet through Hampton's breast. Half a dozen dancers ran to Hampton, who had fallen across the dance hall floor, and attempted to lift him. As they did so the elder Russell, John D. shouldered them aside, stopped, apparently to ascertain whether Hampton still was living, and then sent a second bullet through Hampton's hand, which was clutching his first wound, and into his body.

Several men leaped upon the elder Russel, but he tore himself free, and with his son, fled into the night. Later they rode into Sundance and surrendered.

MEMORIAL FOR JOHNNY POE.

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 22. — When the tens of thousands of American football enthusiasts who annually visit Princeton step from their trains this fall they will pause for a moment to pay tribute to Johnny Poe, football star, class President and "good fellow," who died on the field of honour "somewhere in France."

Shortly after Poe's death while fighting with the "Black Watch" in France last September Princeton alumni started a contribution to a memorial, and, with the class of 1916 leading, several thousand dollars were raised. Now a large plot of ground has been setaside south of the university campus, and this week the work of grading and preparing this field for student athletics will be well under way. To the college student it may be only another baseball and soccer field, but to Princeton alumni and the other thousands who cherish Princeton history it will always be "Poe Field," a memorial spot.

The field is in the path of those visitors to Princeton who arrive at the lower yards and go to the Stadium, and it is on this account that the field will be the first corner of the campus which they will pass. It has been proposed to erect some kind of formal memorial on the field, but plans for this have not yet been completed.

GERMANY REDUCES MEAT FOR SOLDIERS

The German military establishment has now brought down its meat allowance for the fighting troops in the front line to 10.5 ounces for six days in the week. On the seventh day no meat can be served or eaten. For the troops not of the first line the six days' meat ration is only 7.7 ounces.

This information disclosing for the first time cutting down of the food supplies of the fighting soldiers of the Kaiser, is contained in an order issued to the 14th German Reserve Corps by its commander, General von Stein, on May 31st last, a copy of which came into the possession of the British forces in France about two weeks ago.

The order was found on a captured German officer. Subsequent to the issuance of this another order was issued dated July 6, calling upon the troop commanders to report back to headquarters how their men take the cutting down of their rations.

1. By order of the director of supplies of the army in the field, there will be for the army in future one day of the week on which no meat ration will be issued. (This measure is necessary in order that our stocks of cattle may suffice.)

2. The Army Command has fixed the meat ration for the six days of the week to be issude as follows: (a) For the fighting troops in the front line: 300 grammes (10.5 ounces); (b) for other troops: 220 grammes (7.7 ounces.)

Ration strength under (a) to be fixed by the division. Under (b) are reckoned the higher staffs, administrative authorities in the field, second line transport, ammunition columns and the train (the last named when not employed at the front), as well as the troops withdrawn from the first line.

In the future the Divisional Corps troops and the commanders of the ammunition columns and trains will report on the 3rd, 13th and 23rd of every month the ration strength of the troops in the first line as well as the total ration strength. In accordance with their report the Army Command will fix the ration every ten days.

3. To make up for the reduction of meat owing to the meatless days and the new scale of meat ration, an additional issue of 75 grammes (2.6 ounces) per head per day of wheat flour will be granted.

Strict care is to be taken that an even distribution is made in order that each man has sufficient nourishment, even on the meatless days.

4. Fish as a substitute for meat on the meatless day is inadmissible, as fish food comes under the head of meat rations. It is further not allowable to issue in place of the reduced meat ration sausage, cheese and other provisions to make up for the meat ration on the meatless day.

Von Stein, G.O.C.

The order calling for information as to the way the original order was received by the soldiers, reads as follows:

Headquarters, June 10, 1916. Twenty eighth Reserve Division, 1 Tageb No. 2,788:

4. The troops will report by June 17 what the experience has been of the meatless days on which 175 grammes (6.1 ounces) of flour and 66 1-2 grammes (2.3 ounces) of dried fruit are issued instead of the meat and vegetable ration.

On a German captured on the eastern front a few weeks ago by the Russians the latter found an unmailed letter dated July 1, in which the German soldier wrote:

"The Austrians are a constant annoyance to us; they never hold their ground. There is another example of it in Galicia."

On a soldier of the Guard Fusiliet Regiment of the German army the British found a letter in which the German soldier wrote:

"How is everything at home? Is nothing heard about peace? I am still well but am full up with the whole business and a long time ago gave up believing in peace. This war will never be settled by weapons, and even if we win ten times over and England closes up our overseas trade, we are nothing but fools. I cannot understand the reason for the useless sacrifice of so much human life, for we shall never be able to arrive at a definite peace."

On a soldier captured in the Posieres sector, the British found a post card comparing the fighting in that sector with that which the soldier had previously experienced before Verdun —he said that bad as was Verdun it was not "one bit worse than here at Posieres."

Light Thrown on Russian General

Much has been said about General Brusiloff, now the commanding Russian figure, but apparently, says the Buffalo Courier, not much is known to the outside world. An attempt has been made to fit him to the following part of Tolstoy's prophecy of a coming war: "About the year 1915 a strange figure from the North—a new Napoleon—enters the stage of the bloody drama. He is a man of little militaristic training, a writer or a journalist, but in his grip most of Europe will remain until 1925."

These words however cannot appropriately be applied to Brusiloff, who is not a "strange figure from the north;" he was born in the Caucasus; he is a man of long military training, and years before the war he was a notable figure in the Russian army. He had frequently witnessed the military manoeuvres in France; he had been Emperor William's guest at the autumn manoeuvres in Germany, and he had taken a prominent part in the Russian manoeuvres. He was regarded as a military enthusiast.

It is related of Brusiloff that as commander of a cavalry corps he used to take his command on long jaunts, night and day, fair weather and foul; that mammas protested to papas, and papas to the court, and the court to the Tsar, and the Tsar to Brusiloff, and Brusiloff is represented as saying: "Very well, your Majesty, I will discontinue these dires if your majesty will guarantee that the enemy will attack us only in sunshine."

Three years befoer the war Brusiloff was in command of Warsaw. It is said that, believing that war was coming, he, at his own request, was transferred to Vinnitsa, near the northeastern end of Galicia, because he was convinced that in this region Russia could make the quickest and most effective thrusts at the Teutonic forces. Here he was at the outbreak of the war and he headed the Russian troops that first trod the enemy's sod, and he was on that sod for nearly a year and until the failure of the ammunition compelled the Russians to retire. He is now returning in a way that is attracting world wide attention.

Brusiloff is described as a short, thin faced man, wiry, strong, indefatigable, deeply religious and the idol of his soldiers, who fervently respect his general instructions: "Hold out—whatever happens."

Special to The Examiner:

Germans, However, Deny That Battleship Was Sunk by British Torpedo.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The German battleship Westfalen was hit and slightly damaged on Saturday by a British torpedo, it was admitted in a semi-official telegram from Berlin yesterday, according to Reuter's Amsterdam correspondent. The Westfalen, however, it is declared, continues capable of manoeuvring and will shortly be repaired.

FISH COLLIDED WITH A DIVER

RIDGEWAY, Pa., Aug. 24.—Patrick Deering and a trout measuring twenty-four and three-quarter inches, the largest ever seen here, occupied an ambulance together Tuesday morning on their way to the local hospital. Deering sought treatment for a dent in his head, while the trout, which apparently was the cause of Deering's injury, was intended for use as food of the hospital patients.

It happened this way: — Deering, while diving in Laurel Mill Pool, came in collision with the big trout. The fish stunned by the blow immediately rose to the surface and was captured by other swimmers.

"Pat," sorely hurt, was pulled from the water. An ambulance was summoned and the strange companions in distress wer taken to the hospital.

Admitted Two Drinks But Denied Having Been Drunk

It Was His First and Would be His Last, so He Said, Appearance in Police Court—Neglected to Tie Their Horses.

Albert White, a peripatetic mender of umbrellas and sewing machines, protested that this morning witnessed his first appearance in a police court. Charged with being drunk, he admitted two, but asserted that he could walk as straight as a "bee line." This was not only his first appearance, he said, but it would be his last. Magistrate Dumble discharged him on the understanding that he would keep moving.

Reinhold Huer, an employee of the Colonial Weaving Company, was charged with having left a horse and buggy unattended and untied on George street contrary to a city by-law. The magistrate pointed out that wind-blown paper or a sudden fright might have caused the horse to run away, and possibly to have injured some one. Huer's accent reflected the influence of the German sibilants.

"German?" queried the magistrate.

"I was born in Switzerland," Huer replied.

In view of this being Huer's first offence he was discharged.

He stated that while he owned the property, his tenant, Mr. Dan Donaghue, was responsible, and that the latter had cut the weeds two weeks ago.

Horse Ran Away.

P. C. Blade testified that Lynch's horse bolted from the Grand Hotel yards on August 16th, turned up George street, the buggy skidding and turning over on one side. Witness caught the horse at the Charlotte street corner. It was fortunate that here was no traffic on George street at that time for the horse and buggy were swerving from side to side and covering nearly the whole width of the street. The lines were around the whip and a tie line was in the back of the buggy.

Lynch wished to go into the box, stating that he could get proof that he had tied the horse before leaving it.

Magistrate Dumble replied that the horse had not been tied securely or it would not have reached the street, and imposed a fine of $2.00 and costs, amounting to $7.10.

Arthur Walstrom, a Swede, who claimed to be a foreman in the Longford quarries at Orillia, was fined $2 for being drunk in a public place. A previous offence was a "toot" on July 12th.

MRS. MIDDLETON WAS THE WINNER

Made Closest Estimate of Number of Stitches in Pair of Socks

The knitters had a great time calculating how many stitches it would take to make a pair of socks similar to those shown in Elliott's window yesterday.

There was a very wide difference from the lowest to the highest estimate.

One lady estimated the number as 1,908,642, while another lady estimated that they contained just 81 stitches, the correct number was 18,362.

Mrs. Middleton, 176 Brock street, estimated nearest to this number, her estimate was 18,160.

The coat will be duly delivered to Mrs. Middleton.

The total claims by the Entente Powers was second with 18764.

Mankind in the Re-making in England

BY CANADIAN OVERSEAS

One man on his way to the front was heard to say: "The only thing I dread is losing a limb, I'd rather be killed"

This thought must have been in the minds of thousands of our men, who while willing to do their share, naturally shrank from the terrible prospect of a helpless existence after.

But after one has visited Queen Mary's Convalescent Auxiliary Hospital, at Rochampton, London, for soldiers and sailors who have lost their limbs in the war, they can reassure these men on this point, for the progress of science in the creation of artificial limbs has been marvellous.

In the peaceful Rochampton House, generously lent for the purpose, with its lovely grounds, our mutilated men can obtain a new lease of life. They receive there the best possible artificial appliances and instruction in their use. These artificial hands are taught to grip; the men learn to walk with their new legs as well as they ever did. One Australian who had lost both legs at Gallipoli remarked to me with a smile: "I used to suffer fearfully with gout in by old feet, but these new ones treat me proudly!"

The hospital has been open a year and in that time over 2,000 cases have been treated and discharged fitted with artificial appliances. Over 2,000 men from the Mother Country and the overseas Dominions, who entered the hospital regarding themselves useless cripples and mentally placing themselves "on the shelf' of life, have after a brief period, varying between four and six months, passed out re-created! Men who have had both legs amputated and never expected to walk again have walked out with the aid of a stick alone! Five hundred and fifty beds are always occupied and the waiting list is in the hundreds.

The great rooms with their handsomely painted wall and ceilings are now bright wards. Over each bed is the name of the donor (£50 maintains a bed for a year, and many are taking advantage of this as paying a fitting tribute to some dear one who has fallen in action.)

At the foot is posted the name and rank of each temporary occupant. They are all so cheery, some waiting for their new appliances, while others proudly display the wonderful adaptability of theirs.

As I looked out of the long windows overlooking the lawn, where grey-clad men were playing croquet, it was difficult to realize that many of these men were moving about on legs cunningly built of light wood encased in hide, for the springs with which they are fitted at the knee, ankle and toes almost defy detection.

Well appointed workshops have been fitted up in one corner of the delightful grounds. Here the patients are instructed motor and electrical engineering, carpentering, accounting, shorthand and typewriting. Through the medium of a employment bureau which has been established, many of the men obtained good situations immediately upon leaving the hospital. Recreation rooms have been built and fitted with billiard tables and the like. Everywhere there are evidences of the many kindly thoughts that have been expended to ensure the happiness of the patients.

Both tea and supper are served in the garden when the weather permits. This adds much to the enjoyment of the men.

Down the long shady Rochampton lanes seats are placed at frequent intervals with the words, "for wounded soldiers only" written upon them. Judging from the long distances the men venture, anxious to try their new limbs, these seats are a blessing. It is strange that the only gloomy people one meets are the civilians, these fellows with bodies mutilated remain whole and dauntless in spirit.

CENSOR'S REPORT IS SHARP AND TO THE POINT

By Hal O'Flaherty.

London, August 24.—"The censor is not the damn fool you take him to be."

The above line was penned by a British censor upon a letter from an officer at the front to his wife in which an ingenious code was discovered. It meant to disclose to the anxious wife just where her husband was fighting, but it was spoiled by the censor and an order was issued by the war office prohibiting such practices.

Before the officer, who wrote the code letter, left for the front, he secured two maps showing the entire British fighting line. The maps were identical. One he left with his wife and the other one he took with him.

Thereafter each time that he wrote a letter he placed the stationery on his map, struck a pin through it directly over Paris, another directly over Brussels, and a third at the point where he was stationed. Upon receiving the letter his wife would superimpose it on her map, adjusting the extreme pin holes over Paris and Brussels, and her husband's whereabouts would be indicated by the middle hole.

ONE OF MANY CODES.

This is but one of a score of codes and secret signals discovered by the censors recently. England does not censure the relatives of men at the front for wanting to know the locality in which they are fighting and perhaps dying but such disclosures become a menace. No one knows how extensive Germany's espionage system may be, and England is taking no chances.

Another code system used by a certain officer was more elaborate than the one pointed out by the censor, with his "damn fool" notation. It was arranged by the officer with his wife just before he sailed for France, and consisted of two charts of the battle line, one of which he retained while the wife kept the other. Each map was laid out in blocks an inch square; each square could be identified by combinations of letters indicating each line of squares from left to right. Down the left hand side was another row of letters.

In writing home, the officer would say: "Give my regards to L. A Smith." Being a fictitious name, the wife would know it as a key to her secret code. Putting her finger on the "A" line of the squares on her chart, she would follow along under the "L" squares, in which was her husband's position at the front.

It is improbable that any information contained in these code letters has ever reached the Germans, but there is a possibility of such a mischance and England is losing no opportunity to defeat a spy system that has made Englishmen gasp.

The Ontario Crops Will Average Well

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

TORONTO, Aug. 24.— The Ontario crops, despite the unusual weather conditions, will average up well this year says an official report of the department of agriculture compiled from the most reliable government correspondents all over the province. Fall wheat is the best cereal crop this year and although short of last year is above the yearly average. Spring wheat is also above average in yield per acre though barley and rye are below the yearly average. There is of course a bumper crop of hay and clover, running at two point five tons per acre.

ANNUAL PRIZE-WINNERS HAVE BEEN ANNOUNCED

ing" and attention. Border plants must be kept a uniform size. Judgment must be used in placing certain plants in the best positions. General tidyness is imperative, beds should be nicely edged, climbing plants properly trained, dead foilage carefully removed an the walks kept free of weeds and raked. These are all points which the exhibitor has got to consider.

I would like to make a suggestion which was prompted by a situation which came to my attention in Class B. This section is for back garden. The one entered by Mr. J. C. Elliott, of 93 Aylmer, could not be classed as such, as he is growing his vegetables on vacant land in the rear of his back garden proper. He has done excellent work and is entitled to some recognition by your society. Can you not see your way clear to create another class for next year to be known as the "Vacant Lot Cultivation" section? It would be necessary to make the prizes worth while. Competitors could acquire vacant land near their homes, work it, and be practically independent of an outside vegetable supply for a year. They are doing this in Toronto with great success, and I do not know of a single instance where the owner of a vacant lot has charged the user any rent.

Land becomes more valuable when cultivated than when lying idle, and the landlord has been keen enough to recognize that fact.

Should you require any information or suggestions as to rules covering a vacant lot section I would be pleased to help you out.

Wishing you and the Society every success, I remain,

Yours very truly,
FRED W. ADAMS

George Bushman Arrested in Toronto on Charge of Theft from Montreal Jeweller

TORONTO, Aug. 24.—George Bushman, a private soldier, belonging to an overseas battalion, now being raised in Northumberland and Durham counties, was arrested yesterday and held for the Montreal police. Bushman is wanted in the Royal City on a charge of throwing a rock through a window of a jewellery store and stealing two trays filled with jewels. The robbery occurred about four days ago. While Detective Newton was walking past a jewellery store on Queen street Tuesday afternoon he noticed a soldier wearing a serjeant's chevrons trying to dispose of a gold ring. The officer thought this nothing unusual, but no sooner had he passed than the soldier made a rush for the door and sped down the street. The officer gave chase and his shouts attracted the attention of a traffic officer, who captured Bushman. At the police station about forty solid gold rings were found in the prisoner's possession. He could give no plausible explanation for the possession of such a hoard and as there had been no robbery recently in Toronto the detectives immediately connected him with the Montreal crime which had been heard of through the press.

Subsequently Bushman is said to have admitted his connection with the crime. He stated that he came from Montreal to Toronto a few days ago, having previously enlisted with the Northumberland and Durham Battalion. On coming to Toronto he sewed the stripes on his arm.

STIFFER SENTENCE FOR DR. KARL LIEBKNECHT

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 24.—The result of Dr. Karl Liebknecht's appeal against his sentence for war treason has been the imposition of a new and severer sentence of four years and one month penal servitude and expulsion from the army, according to a despatch from Berlin.

In addition to his prison sentence, Dr. Liebknecht is deprived of his civil rights for six years.

WEDDING BELLS

FISHER—HOWDEN.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized in Trinity Methodist church yesterday afternoon when Miss Pearl Howden, daughter of Mrs. W. Howden, 194 Sherbrooke street, became the bride of Mr. John Fisher, also of this city. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Wilson in the presence of a large number of friends. Miss Irene Hayes of this city was bridesmaid while Mr. Albert Lightheart also of Peterborough was the best man. After the ceremony a luncheon was served at the home of the bride after which the young couple left on the 3.43 C.P.R. train on a honeymoon trip to Toronto, Niagara Falls and Buffalo, taking their departure amid showers of confetti and rice The bride wore a pretty dress of blue silk with white hat. The groom's gift to the bride was a mesh bag, to the best man a pair of cuff links and to the bridesmaid a cameo ring. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher will take up residence at 194 Sherbrooke St. on their return.

OBITUARY

MRS. P. DAVIS.

On Monday, Aug. 21st. Peterborough was deprived of another of its oldest and most highly respected citizens, in the person of Mrs. J. P. Davis. The deceased lady was born at Halderman, east of here, and is a last relic, with the exception of one sister, Mrs. R. T. Milburn, of this city, of the old and well-known Kelly family, Bridgenorth. Deceased was a true member of George Street Methodist Church, a faithful worker and servant of Christ till her health failed her some three or four years ago. Although having no family of her own she was a good mother and aunt to many and in and around the family circle will be missed much, likewise by her many old acquaintances. Having been bedfast for some five months previous to her death those who were acquainted with her terrible suffering would not wish her back.

The funeral took place yesterday, from the home of her nephw, 518 Wolfe street, to the Little Lake Cemetery. The floral tributes were beautiful and many.

MISS RUBY OLIVER WON THE BURNHAM WATCH IN HARVEY

Miss Ruby Oliver, of the Public School at Nogey's Creek, won the J. H. Burnham gold watch for making the best showing of the Harvey Township scholars in the recent entrance examinations. Last night the school was crowded for the presentation, which was made by Reeve Ingram, in the absence of Capt. Burnham, of the 93rd Battalion. Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., made a very acceptable chairman, and Mr. Robert Ruddy, K.C., and Mr. E. M. Elliott, county treasurer, also made bright, appropriate speeches.

Mr. Gillespie explained the nature of the Burnham gifts to the children who make the best showing at the entrance examinations, and spoke of Mr. Burnham's absence overseas with the Peterborough battalion.

A feature of the programme was the presence of a number of clergymen, some of whom were visiting at Bobcaygeon. Each of them responded to the chairman's introduction with a sparkling speech. In fact, it was generally commented that the addresses were of a specially high order, brief, helpful and witty.

The programme was as follows:
Chairman's address—Mr. Gillespie.
Chorus by the School.
Presentation of Burnham watch by Reeve Ingram.
Speech—Robert Ruddy, K.C.
Reply by Rev. Mr. Neville, of Bobcaygeon.
Vocal solo—Miss Wilma Jupphin.
Speech—Rev. Mr. Lawrence, of New York.
Recitation by Mary Boeckh.
Speech by Mr. C. E. Moore, of Smith.
Speech by Rev. Mr. Smith.
Recitation—Miss Greta Richmond.
Speech by Mr. E. M. Elliott.
Speech—Rev. Mr. McKay, of Nova Scotia.
"God Save the King."

The principal theme of the addresses was the value of education and what the schools should strive to do for the children.

ISSUE MEAT CARD THROUGHOUT EMPIRE

Berlin to Restrict Weekly Allowance Per Person to Slightly More Than Half Pound After October Next

BERLIN, Aug. 24.—The Government has issued a decree providing for the intrpduction of meat cards for the whole Empire on October 2. The maximum amount of meat provided for under the new card system will be 250 grams (slightly more than half a pound) weekly.

Prepare Fatherland For Reverse in West

German Correspondents With Troops in France Magnify Horrors of Fighting Against Allied Artillery—Soldiers Homesick and Without Shelter

ROTTERDAM, Aug. 23. — Max Osborne in a despatch from the Somme front to The Vossische Zeitung, says:

"Day and night the British and French guns continuously hurl their murderous lead. Shells burst all around, many exploding before positions where masses of dead are lying. They fling sand and stone splinters over the defenders. They fling, too, torn-off limbs, so when day comes and the men are able to eat the very sight of meat is horrible to them.

"The noise tears to pieces all nerves and senses. It continually drums in one's ears. Not a few find their hearing completely gone. The worst of all is the effect of the heavy mines. True they can be seen coming and one can get out of the way, but if one runs to the right there is a hostile flyer above the trenches who directs the fire of the guns so one has to run to the left.

"So it goes on, and one is hunted up and down like a wild beast. There are times when our men curse and are homesick, but in the moment of fighting all their feelings disappear. The sense of duty and discipline holds them together and they are ready with iron decision and bitter courage."

George Wagener, in a despatch to The Koelnische Zeitung, says:

"The present line held by the Germans consist only of a chain of shell holes instead of the girdle of strongly-built and fortified trenches. Immovable men crouch in these holes with no cover from the sun or rain and not the slightest protection against the shells from above.

"Hostile flyers cover the positions at a low height. They see the men in the holes and direct the Anglo-French fire with a deadly certainty upon them or else they fire themselves with machine guns.

DO ALL WORK AT NIGHT.

"Everything has to be done at night; the bringing up of reinforcements, removing the wounded and burying the dead. To procure warm food for the men lying out in those horrible conditions is seldom possible. The want of drinking water is one of the most terrible trials, even leading the men to drink dirty water out of the shell holes where there are human bodies and other things.

"When an attack begins the terrors of these places are beyond description. Like the fire rain in Gomorrah the drum fire of the enemy pours from heaven. The little shelter that there is in the trenches or holes is quickly flattened out. With thundering roar of heavy shells from the gigantic mine wipe out everything in the neighborhood with their explosion. At the same time a rain of shrapnel falls and poisonous gases roll forward."

A Change For Worse

Railway Situation in the United States is Very Serious

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24. — Since midnight the situation has taken a change for the worse, declared a member of the railway presidents subcommittee before the sub-committee left for the White House at their own request. The situation is very serious he added.

SUNSTROKE FATAL TO MAN IN CHATHAM

A LONDON BRICKLAYER WAS TAKEN SICK AT NOON, DIED LATE AT NIGHT.

CHATHAM, Aug. 24.—James Passons of London died here, as a result of sunstroke. He was employed as a bricklayer on the new plant of the Dominion Sugar Company, and was taken sick about noon yesterday. The remains have been taken to London for interment. This is the only death here from this cause, although the official record shows Chatham has experienced the longest hot spell on record. The highest record was 102½ on Monday. The majority of the days in July and August showed a temperature of higher than 90, and many days it went higher than 95.

ELIMINATE PATRONAGE IS THE INDIANS' PLEA

Chiefs Interview Department Seeking Definition of Reserve Rights.

OTTAWA, Aug. 24.—Chief A. S. Smith of Brantford, accompanied by Chief Harry Morton and William Loftall of the Six Nations Reserve, are interviewing the Indian Department, asking for a definition of the rights under which they hold their reserve granted them in 1784. Chief Smith stated that politics and the patronage evil had entered largely into the administration of their reserves. They will ask that patronage be eliminated as much as possible.

STRIKING POLICE DISMISSED.

SHERBROOKE, Que., Aug. 24.—Six policemen of Sherbrooke, who went on strike a few days ago because their demand for a wage increase of one dollar per week was not acceded to, have been dismissed from the force. Chief Couture announced to-day that he has filled their places.

At a military church service during the South African war some recruits were listening to the chaplain in church saying, "Let them slay the Boers as Joshua smote the Egyptians," when a recruit whispered to a companion:—"Say, Bill, the old bloke is a bit off; doesn't he know it was Kitchener who swiped the Egyptians?"

A Source of German Alarm

How the Press Views Compulsory Service in England.

One of the features of the lengthy reviews of the second year of the world war published in the German newspapers on the last Sunday of July is the serious comment upon the adoption of compulsory military service in England. The Cologne Gazette as quoted by The London Times, said in its review:

"Among the surprises of this war is the fact that it has brought England to the introduction of universal military service—the greatest internal revolution in England's modern history. Even those who knew England well clung to the last to the belief that it would not be possible to force upon the English people this institution so antagonistic to its fundametal convictions. A just judgment will appreciate the full extent of this sacrifice and measure thereby the seriousness of England's intention to make Germany harmless for English purposes. Nothing more plainly shows the immense seriousness of the united will to destroy us than this conversion of the English people to universal service."

The Gazette goes on to say that the adoption of compulsion has nevertheless "been in vain." The Frankfurter Zeitung also emphasizes the importance of compulsion in England, although it says that "hundreds of thousands are surely tolerating it only with gnashing of the teeth."

The Frankfurter Zeitung, in a leading article, declares that it is not Germany that bears "the terrible guilt of every fresh day on which thousands die." Germany can only "hold out until the hour at which the strength of her enemies is devoured in their own fire, and until the day when reason finally masters arrogance." The journal says that Germany's victory will consist in "self-maintenance."

In a long article on "War Finances" the Frankfurter Zeitung claims that German methods have proved superior; but the writer does not say that the situation is sound. Dealing with the belligerents generally, he says that as long as confidence can be maintained "the technique of war finance holds out, especially as paper and the printing press are not only able to produce "money" for the time, but are admirable means of producing a brilliant deception regarding the actual impoverishment of artificially producing buying power and artificially creating an apparent war 'boom.'" The Zeitung says that the German Empire has thus far been able to finance the war "almost without having recourse to the printing press." It says that the circulation of large quantities of German paper money in Belgium, Northern France and Poland constitutes "a serious problem of the future." Elsewhere in the same article the Zeitung says:

"It would be a folly unworthy of a grown-up people to try to conceal the extent of the sacrifices for us and our Allies if the conclusion of peace were not to bring us a large war indemnity. But for the period of the war—which is what matters as regards our strength in financial readiness to make sacrifices and in economic capacity—we can be satisfied."

which are compelled to dispense with the services of a junior major before proceeding overseas, and by giving these men commands, it will retain in the service, officers of ability, who would otherwise be thrown out by the new regulation.

For Hastings and Prince Edward counties, the name of Lt.-Col. Barragar has been mentioned, but it is confident that Ottawa would never consent to this most capable officer giving up the important position of commandant of the Infantry School of Instruction.

With the new battalion, the 247th, authorized for Peterborough, and the authorization of which was published exclusively in The Standard of last Saturday, with Lt.-Col. Johnston in command, it will mean that the Third Military District will have five overseas battalions in existence and training next winter, and with a change in recruiting methods and a thorough recruiting staff, there are no doubts expressed among the officers in camp about getting the men.

The Kingston Whig says:

In Tuesday's paper issue was taken with the Chief Recruiting Officer over an alleged statement that this military district was to have ten more battallions to raise this winter. Major G. I. Campbell when interviewed stated that the report was wrong, inasmuch as his actual statement was to the effect that there would be ten battalions in this district in the winter, that number including the five already authorised. The remaining five will be allotted probably as follows. One to Lindsay and Haliburton, one to Hastings and Lennox and Addington, one to Frontenac and Leeds, one to Greenville and district and one Dotu soifwa and district and one to Dundas, Stormont and Glengarry.

The Millbrook Record says: Sergt.-Major Thos. Miller of the 93rd Peterborough Battalion sends a very satisfying evidence of good fare and accommodation on the C.P.R. steamer Empress of Britain, crossing the Atlantic, a complete refutation of some "kickers" who wrote of their "rotten" eats on the same trip. He encloses a Bill-of-Fare: Soup, Boiled Cod, Veal Cutlets, Tomato Sauce, Roast Lamb, Mint Sauce, Roast Turkey, Plum Pudding, Ice Cream, etc. Sergt. Major Miller was chairman at a grand concert given on the Empress.

The Ennismore stage driver loaded up with butter this afternoon at the Peterborough creamery. And it was 37 cent butter, too. The price and the incident are ominous portents of the future of the butter market.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie stated that the supply of milk is decreasing by thousands of pounds every day. This condition has obtained for some time, and even with immediate heavy rains it would be weeks before a resumption of the normal flow would be noticed.

One doesn't need to travel far into the dairy sections to be impressed with the baked and burned condition of the pasturage along the roadside and in the fields. At least one case is reported of a cow having died from eating dried up grass, and there may be others.

The production of milk has certainly received a serious setback by the long dry midsummer, with a result that butter that sold for 36 cents yesterday is 37 cents to-day and the end is assuredly not yet.

So heavy has been the export this year that the usual cold storage supply has been depleted almost to the vanishing point. It is only a slight exaggeration to say that the reserve stores of Canadian butter are but a negligible quantity. The significance of such a situation is only too evident. During the long winter months the cold storage stocks have supplied the demand, but the report is now made that these stocks have been already drained, leaving a blue and cheerless prospect for the winter.

Greece Gives Her Consent To An Invasion of Macedonia

Hungary Fears Roumania Will Enter War on The Allies' Side

Newspapers are Pessimistic, and Military Expert for One of Them Comments on Importance to Russia of Free Access to This New Territory—"Roumania Bribed" the Cry of Berlin—Country is Flooded With Agents and Spies.

ROUMANIA IS A SPHINX

LONDON, August 25.—The Hungarian newspapers are being flooded with the most pessimistic information concerning Roumania, and that country's possible action is absorbing the press and public, according to a Budapest despatch to the Morning Post. The Hungarian public believes, says the despatch, that the liberty they enjoy at the hands of the censor is designed to prepare the people for the worst.

The military expert of the Pesti-Naplo says:—"The entry of Roumania into the war will not at first affect the military situation in the Balkans, for the Roumanians will have to adhere to the united strategic plan of the Allies and will not be permitted to go straight for Transylvania. Dobrudja and Bulgaria will be their immediate aim. Five hundred thousand or six hundred thousand men of the Roumanian army are not the chief factors for the consideration of the Central Powers, but rather the problems presented by the new territory whch the Russians will be allowed to use freely in the invasion of Hungary."

Meanwhile the anxious hours of waiting are not being spent in idleness in Transylvania, whence every able-bodied man suspected of Roumanian sympathies is being shifted to other parts of the country. The Roumanian newspapers in Transylvania are under the strictest control and Roumanian priests and churches are under military supervision. All along the Roumanian frontier the military forces have been reinforced, defences strengthened and every precaution taken against Roumanian intervention.

"ROUMANIA BRIBED,' THE CRY OF BERLIN.

BERLIN, August 25 (by Wireless to Sayville)—Roumania has not decided whether she will enter the war, in the opinion of a person characterized by the Overseas News Agency as "a distinguished diplomatist who is especially conversant with Roumanian affairs." On being asked by the news agency as to the present situation he said:—

"Roumania's attitude is due to her geographical situation. The country is virtually surrounded by belligerents. Roumanian statesmen therefore are guided by the desire to spare their country the injury which would be unavoidable if it were to become a theatre of war.

"Since the beginning of the present conflagration the Entente Powers, particularly Russia, have been extremely active in Roumania. The country is flooded with Russian agents and spies of all descriptions. The Entente uses money lavishly to bribe politicians and influence the press.

"This agitation reached its height at the beginning of the last Russian offensive. At the same time the Entente announced that an offensive campaign would be inaugurated on the Macedonian front—a move purely for political purposes. Now the sudden and successful Bulgarian advance has brought a quick change in the situation, and the Russian offensive also apparetnly is slackening.

"At present Roumania is still undecided. She probably will not give up her adroit policy of neutrality, which up to the present has given to her an enormous gain in power, unless she believes that the really decisive turn in the war has been reached. Meanwhile trade relations between Roumania and the Central Powers continue to be normal and active.

"Roumania has been a sphinx and is still shrouded in a mysterious veil, behind which political passion and agitation, not only of the Roumanians but of the Entente agents, reach their highest pitch."

Serbs Take Bulgar Trenches Northeast of Salonica, But There is a Lull in Fighting

London Newspapers are Keenly Interested in the Balkan Situation, Rich With Possibilities Now That Russians and Italians are Present and Roumania Reported Ready — Imminent General Offensive Against Bulgaria is of Great Importance—Greece Consents to Invasion of Macedonia.

GREEK TROOPS CALLED OUT

LONDON, August 25.—Greece has consented to an invasion of Macedonia by the Bulgars, and mutiny is rife in the Grecian army.

A successful operation by Serbian troops in the Morichovo sector, about sixty miles northwest of Salonika, is also reported in a despatch from Athens. The Serbians captured 150 yards of Bulgarian trenches near Kaimakcalam.

The Bulgarian troops, who advanced in Northeastern Greece recently, seizing positions in the valley of the Struma River, are entrenching on this line. No heavy fighting is under way on the Macedonian front at present, so far as is indicated by the official statement concerning this theatre of war. The announcement follows:—

"On the Doiran front (in the centre) about two battalions of the enemy were seen in the neighbourhood of Dautli. Their advance troops were driven in by us.

"An attack on French troops holding Komarjan bridge was repulsed.

The new Bulgarian entrenched line roughly parallels the Struma. Apparently the Bulgarians have sent forces of considerable size to occupy this natural defensive line against attempts of the Allies to invade their territory from Greece or to flank the old battle line by a thrust northeast from Salonika.

Developments in the Balkans take first place in both news and editorial columns of the newspapers. The newspapers display keen interest not only in the landing of the Italian and Russian troops at Salonika, but also in possible action by the Greek and Roumanian governments and in the new Russian offensive which is developing in Bukowina.

According to unofficial despatches the Russians are pushing ahead with the greatest energy in Bukowina close to the Roumanian frontier and already have gained "a very brilliant success." The Daily News in an editorial sums up the Balkan situation as follows:—

"The imminent general offensive against Bulgaria is of great importance. One of the first results of a successful offensive by General Sarrail would be a complete rupture of the Prussian communications with the east and the isolation and capitulation of Turkey. This is a plain geographical fact.

"There are also other issues upon which it is wiser to reflect than to enlarge. These affect the fortunes of two neutrals, Greece and Roumania, as well as the dozen belligerents.

"The situation in Greece, where Greek troops already actually are engaged in hard fighting with their traditional enemies, the Bulgars, is rich in possibilities. As to the intentions of Roumania, we may be content to draw upon the Berlin press, which is authority for the statement that Roumania definitely has joined hands with the Entente and is preparing to give Russian troops passage through her territory. It is difficult to conceive what motive the Russians could have for circulating such a statement other than the belief that it is true."

Leaders of the liberal, or Venigelist, party at Salonika are organizing volunteers to aid the Greek commander at Seres in resisting the Bulgarians, according to a Reuter Salonika despatch.

The despatch adds that the commander at Seres has issued a proclamation calling to the colours the demobilized troops in his district. The proclamation states that he will resist the advance of the Bulgarians. According to latest report the soldiers of King Ferdinand are approaching Seres but have not yet entered the town.

When Jelly is Done.

It would save much time and worry if one could be sure when jelly was exactly of the proper consistency to take off the stove. This is the way. Drip the boiling liquid from the stirring-spoon as the jelly is cooking. While there is only one drip at the last the jelly needs more boiling. But when the drop separates and drips in two drips, be sure it is time to pour the jelly into glasses, writes one lady.

A Message To Thin Weak Scrawny Folks

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 20 Pounds of Solid, Healthy Permanent Flesh.

Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat making elements of your food instead of food instead of passing them out through passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. The thin persons body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. A splendid way of working to overcome this sinful waste of flesh building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to try Sargol, the famous flesh building agent that has been so widely sold in America in recent years. Take a little Sargol tablet with every meal and see if your cheeks don't quickly fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh form over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting point. All good druggists have Sargol or can get it from their wholesaler, and will refund your money if not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated on the guarantee in each large package. It is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you with Sargol send $1.00 money order or registered letter to the National Laboratories, 74 Antoine St., Montreal and a complete ten days' treatment will be sent you postpaid in plain wrapper.

NOTE—Sargol is recommended only as a flesh builder and while excellent results in cases of nervous indigestion, etc., have been reported, care should be taken about using it unless a gain of weight is desired.

A Host of Italian Laborers Are Making Good Use of Their Experience in Active Work — Can Handle Explosives — Much English Heard Along the Italian Front, Where Former Workers Here Abound

Only gradually has the outside world begun to appreciate the magnitude of the enterprise undertaken by Italy when she went to war with Austria, or realize the greatness of the military achievements already performed by the Italian soldier.

Italy's war on a frontier line of more than 450 miles was more or less lost sight of on account of the more vital importance at times, of the battling on the Russian front or in France and Flanders. The nations generally have now begun to learn that the Italian army has carried on a war under circumstances marked by difficulties greater than those encountered on any other front, and it has triumphed over obstacles of the most serious kind.

When the war began and Italy called in her reserves, Italians hastened home from all parts of the world to join the colours. These were the men who had emigrated, seeking work and the opportunity to obtain compensation for their robust services which agriculture under modern conditions did not provide for them in Italy.

The Italian soldiers on whom has fallen the burden of the fighting are those rugged peasant labourers —the men who have built the railroads and dug the subways of the United States And this experience which they have gained in grading and mining has proved of enormous importance in conducting warfare against the Austrians, who hid themselves in the woods and behind the crags and fired down on their adversaries as they came up the mountain to attack them.

This Italian had known the uses of dynamite and the methods of handling nitro-glycerine, and part of his equipment as he was sent out to fight the Austrian guerilla was a quantity of dynamite, with the fuses to explode it, and picks with which to dig himself trench shelter and cords wherewith to hoist himself up the limbs of trees, and wire to use for defensive purposes. He had carried the hod and pushed wheelbarrows in the United States, and it was easy now for him to carry up the Alpine slopes a load of stone to use as breastworks for his own defense when he reacheed the point assigned to him as a position to hold against the enemy's attacks.

He had drilled the rock of Manhattan Island for skyscraper foundations, and he drilled through Alpine stone to reach his adversary. To dig himself hastily into the ground was simply a continuation of work he had done in the United States, and to risk the dangers presented by the rocks and boulders pushed down the mountainside by the Austrians for his destruction was simply a continuation of risks he had taken in great building operations on the continent of America.

ENGLISH SPOKEN AT FRONT.

Correspondents who have gone to the Italian front have frequently expressed their amazement at the large number of Italian soldiers, using to a greater or less extent the English tongue. These men, who had responded to their country's call for the greatest sacrifice which man can impose upon himself, were always proud to tell that they had lived in the United States, and that they had had a part in the construction of some of the great industrial works of America A noted Italian writer, Signor Alighero Castelli, has pictured interestingly the career of the Italian soldier who was recently a labourer in the United States, strong, patient, indefatigable, an ideal modern warrior, who has already performed wonders and still has huge tasks confronting him.

"The Bourgeois class has given to the army its officers and an inestimable treasure of energy and good example," he says. "But the bulk of the army, the nerve of the war, is provided by our peasants, by the strong, simple, sober workmen of Italy, who, scattered throughout the whole world, selling the work of their strong arms, and who, from every region, replied with silent and prompt obedience to the call of their country, have revealed in this war all the magnificent virtues of their race. They are sound and they are strong, but in their souls they are as ingenuous as children.

"Here comes a waggon drawn by two mules down the steep side of the mountain, keeping to the right near the edge of a precipice. It meets an automobile going in the opposite direction and endeavours to give way still further. But the mules, scared, take the upper hand, despits the efforts of the soldier who is driving them, and they fall, with the waggon, down the slope.

MULE DRIVER'S GRIEF.

"Three or four soldiers, who are on the waggon behind, the driver, have been scattered among the rocks and the strubs of the precipice slope, together with several empty munitions cases. One of the men badly injures his arm and is led off to a neighbouring field hospital.

"The driver, a native of the Abruzzi, gets up, raises his mules, looks around and bursts out into a convulsive lament, which at times seems like a spasm of laughter. Indeed, it is a laugh, accompanied by lamentations.

"'Oh, mamma, oh, mamma!' he cries, with his hands in his hair. The other soldiers look at him in amazement. They think he has gone crazy. A Corporal tries to give him heart.

"'But don't you se that it is nothing? Ther is only one soldier with an injured arm. We were really in good luck. Come on, get up; do not cry.'

"It is no use. The Abruzzese driver feels his mules all over, and continues his lamentations. 'Oh, mamma. Oh, mamma!'"

Signor Castelli follows with keen interest the path of the Italian peasant and workman who had come from the United States to be transformed into a soldier, and the next place he meets him is in the hospital.

AT THE FIELD HOSPITAL

"To the field hospital," he says "there come two automobile ambulances loaded with wounded men. The latter are taken out in stretchers into the garden near the house every room of which is transformed into a hospital ward. The new arrivals have come from a relief station on the heights and had taken part in the recent flights at Zabio, Zingarelia, and Mosciagh.

"The new surgeons make a first summary inspection, going up to each of the stretchers, which have been laid in shaded spots in the garden to protect the men from the torrid sun. For the most part they are men with wounds in their limbs. The few of them who are wounded in the abdomen breathe with difficulty.

"The Red Cross nurses give them water and coffee, and the wounded men raise themselves up a little to absorb the drinks with avidity. There is not a single lament to be heard among all these pallid faces, among all this burned and lacerated flesh.

"A little later begins the removal into the interior of the hospital, the change of clothing, the disinfection and the medication. The hospital is all alive with energetic work. Outside, above the rasp of the grasshopper, is heard the song of a nightingale.

"One of the wounded men has had part of his thigh carried away. He is big and muscular, with blue eyes, which shine out of his broad, sunburned face. He puffs a little, and shakes his head. He is very anxious to get well quick, to recover the use of his legs, in order to go away far, very far, to America.

"He is a native of Calabria, who for eight years had been living in the United States, working as a builder. He speaks English very well. Mrs. Waterman, the correspondent of English newspapers, bends over him and converses with him, and he mixes a few Calabrese words in with his New York dialect. Instead of saying 'yes' he says 'yeh', almost 'ya'. A soldier of the army hospital corps, passing by and hearing this 'ya' remarks innocently, 'Why, that fellow is an Austrian! The Calabrian turns on him a glare, if not of indignation, at least of compassion.

"Then he explains to the English women the painful struggles he underwent in the United States in order to make a comfortable position in life for himself and his family. In New York are his mother, his sisters, and the girl to whom he is betrothed. Just as soon as the war is finished he will go back over there.

"But he adds, 'That is, if I do not lie. If I die it will be the will of God. I shall have accomplished my duty. The call of the mother country had to be obeyed."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

ANGELA'S HERO

He Turned Out to Be What She Wanted

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Sunderland was one of those places that are very nice for young persons to live in until the time comes for the boys to choose careers and the girls to get married or—in these days of woman's independence—to choose careers too. There was one period when half a dozen or more youngsters formed a set that was voted the most attractive the town had ever contained.

Two decades passed after the set had been all together at Sunderland when Angela Thornton visited her old friend Edna Wolcott, now Edna Blake. After the greetings the two friends sat together over their work talking of old times. Some of those who had been happy together had gone to their long home. Others had been lost to their old associates. Presently Mrs. Blake said:

"Angela, I wonder if you realize that you are the only one of our old set who has never married." She smiled affectionately at Angela Thornton.

"Yes," said Angela calmly, "I do realize it, Edna. I suppose the rest of you, wives and mothers all, wonder why I am so contented."

"Tell me the secret, dear, and I'll not breathe it to another soul," coaxed Mrs. Blake.

Angela's charming face flushed, and she looked only half of her forty years. Her hair was so fair and golden, untouched by time, and her skin so fresh and unlined and her sweetness so unmarred by long years of sorrow and loss of loved ones that her friends declared she had discovered the secret of perennial youth.

"There was Alexander Finlay," began Edna Blake mischievously, "the first of a long line of suitors. Why, Angela, why did you refuse them all?"

"Because," said Angela quite simply, "I was waiting for a hero, a real hero, to arrive. Edna, I am a hero worshiper. All my life I have longed for some romantic adventure, thirsted for a lover who would bravely ride up to our gate and carry me off on a brave black horse. I know you are shocked," she ended with a whimsical smile.

Mrs. Blake's dark face was aglow with amusement and some inward exclamant

"So you have been waiting for a hero, you romantic goose!" she said at last. "In this twentieth century there are no bold lovers who carry their sweethearts off on brave black horses. They usually elope by motorcar. And Alexander Finlay is still unmarried, and they say he has six motorcars."

"Not if he had sixteen motorcars!" declared Angela; then, with an effort to turn the conversation to a less personal topic, she went on, "How is Nathan getting on with his invention?"

"Wonderfully, if one may judge by his complete absorption in his work," returned Nathan's sister ruefully. "Actually, Angela, he hasn't poked his nose outside of that workshop for three weeks except to take a short walk around the fields. He sleeps there, and I have his meals sent out to him. He says he doesn't dare leave the shop a moment. I asked him why he built it in the center of the ten acre field, and he said"—Mrs. Blake giggled—"it was going to be a fine season for turkeys."

"The idea!" gasped Angela. "You don't suppose he is raising turkeys and is going to corner the turkey market?"

"It's something with wings anyway," admitted Mrs. Blake. "I heard him talking to Mr. Fellowes about it."

"What does Mr. Blake think about it?"

"Oh, Jim? He declares Nathan is building an aeroplane; said he saw one hovering over the field one night last week. But I tell him it's all nonsense. Nathan isn't the sort of man to invent an aeroplane or anything half so romantic. You know, Angela, what a plodding, practical sort of boy my brother was. Well, he has grown up to be the most matter of fact man in some respects. He might invent a new sort of washing machine or some household necessity, but an aeroplane—never!"

That evening Mrs. Blake repeated the conversation to her highly edified husband, and that gentleman, strolling out to the ten acre field to enjoy an after dinner smoke with his brother-in-law, retold the story to Nathan.

Nathan listened, his dark head bent attentively. When he lifted it at last his expression was noncommittal. The afternoon sun shining on the lenses of his spectacles concealed his gray eyes from Jim's quizzical glance.

Jim Blake was rather disappointed at Nathan's silence. He had always suspected Nathan of having a tenderness for Angela Thornton, and, now that Angela had arrived from her New England home to make an extended visit with the Blakes, Jim had craftily planned to do a little matchmaking on his own account. And here was Angela, most unreasonable of women, demanding a romantic escapade, with a real hero in the bargain. Why, the woman might die an old maid after all, he argued as he went back to the house, for Nathan was anything but a heroic figure, with his tall, stooping form, his nearsighted gray eyes and his straight black hair and silent tongue.

"Hero, indeed!" he was muttering in his sleep, and Mrs. Blake, hearing him, smiled secretly.

"I wonder why he was telling Angela that the rose garden is haunted," she thought. "He knows she is quite fearless at night and might take to wandering around the garden to run our ghost to earth! Strange, Jim never spoke to me about the ghost; but, of course, I am not looking for adventures."

Angela was thinking about the ghost of the rose garden, and she decided that the very next moonlight night she would watch for it. "Not from the window," she told herself courageously, "but in the garden itself. Very likely it is only Edna's cook getting a breath of fresh air after a hard day's work, or it might be her sweetheart."

It rained the next night and the next, and it was not until the third night that a pale moon showed through the clouds. Nathan appeared at dinner that evening, and Angela showed such a charming embarrassment at meeting him and Nathan blinked so rapidly behind his glasses that Jim Blake came to the conclusion that Angela's plea of waiting for a "hero" to come into her life was only an excuse.

Nathan only remained a few minutes after the meal was concluded. Jim followed him into the porch for a quiet word.

"If you should be skimming around after dark, old man," he warned his brother-in-law, "just keep your eye on Miss Angela. She will be searching the rose garden for a ghost. It's sort of a fad of hers, you know, that and expecting bold lovers to ride up on black horses and elope with her. Just see that no one does it, eh?"

"Um—ah!" said Nathan rather vaguely as he wandered off toward the fields.

It was verging on midnight when Angela Thornton slipped cautiously down the front stairs and let herself into the garden.

The Blakes prided themselves on their lovely gardens, especially the rose garden, which was inclosed in a high hedge of Cherokee roses.

The rose garden lay on the other side of an expanse of rolling lawns.

Angela, wearing her white frock, with a pale blue shawl wrapped around her slender shoulders, went slowly down the path and stepped on to the springy turf. The moon, drifting in and out of the scudding clouds, made alternate light and shadow on the grass.

It was a pleasant night for ghost hunting.

Presently there came a throbbing sound overhead and a deeper shadow on the lawn, though now the clouds had parted to let the moon shine through quite clearly.

Angela, startled, looked up and saw a great object bearing down upon her out of the night sky, a great black winged thing. No; it was white where the moonlight touched it!

Then it came down, down, reached the ground, rocked over the turf and came to a pause within half a dozen feet of Angela Thornton.

"Why, it's an aeroplane!" she thought and clasped her hands in delighted wonder, for she had never seen one except in the illustrated papers. "The poor man has lost his way!"

The aviator had climbed out of his seat and was coming toward Angela. His was a tall, thin, stooping figure dressed in leather garments and wearing close fitting cap and goggles. Over his arm he carried a big leather coat.

"Angela," he said deliberately, "I've always wanted to marry you. You remember I asked you once years ago, and you called me a simpleton and"—

"Nathan," she quavered, for she had penetrated his disguise, "I sent you away because I was the simpleton. I loved you and I wanted to marry you, but you were not romantic enough for me. So I have waited"—

"Waited for me?" he put in eagerly.

He turned and waved a hand at the aeroplane. "Come with me, then, dear, and never dare to say that you have not had an adventure. Slip into this coat. There! The minister at Woburn is waiting for us. Oh, I'm a hero—quite an up to date one, sweetheart. And my motor will take us to Woburn and our wedding in a manner never dreamed of by you."

So he plucked a handful of white roses for a bridal bouquet, and then he lifted Angela into the passenger's seat and strapped her in. Then he took the pilot's place, started the motor of his own investing and presently they were soaring at a safe height above the treetops.

The moonlight shone on the cross of the steeple of the Woburn church and guided them straight to the minister and future happiness.

The moonlight shone on the Blakes' rose garden and the deserted lawn. And Edna Blake and her husband, thrusting their heads from the windows of their adjoining rooms, stared into each other's surprised faces.

"You saw it?" asked Edna at last.

"Wouldn't have missed it for anything," declared Jim brazenly.

"Matchmaker!" she taunted.

"Why didn't you tell Nathan yourself?" asked Jim chuckling.

"He might have suspected me of matchmaking," she confessed. "As it is, they have revived their old love, married and I wonder if an elopement by aeroplane is romantic enough for Angela?"

"I guess that excuse of Angela's was made to cover up her tenderness for Nathan," said Jim eagerly.

"Oh, you mean that there would be no romance for Angela unless Nathan figured in it?"

"Yes, and I mean that, no matter in what guise Nathan came, he alone could be Angela's hero!"

FINE ARTS

DIRECTORS IN CHARGE.

Messrs. Garbutt, Greene, Turner, and Glover

No picture previously exhibited at the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition will be accepted.

Every work must be the production of the exhibitor.

Those entering work in the "Original List" must give data as evidence of originality whenever required by the Judges.

All pictures must be framed or mounted on cardboard.

By "original work" is meant work from life, or from the object.

It does not follow that because a prize is offered for any particular article that it must be awarded, unless the exhibit is really of sufficient merit to warrant the award being made. The Judges are particularly requested to note this fact.

"What's on the carpet to-day?" asked the head of the house, as quoted by the Louisville Courier-Journal. "Six cigar stumps, four brozen chips, seven corks and about a thousand burnt matches," responded his angry spouse. "The next poker party you give I'll attend myself."

"I forgot myself and spoke angrily to my wife," remarked Mr. Meekton, of the Kansas City Star. "Did she resent it?" "For a moment. But Henrietta is a fair-minded woman. After she thought it over she shook hands with me and congratulated me on my bravery."

"TORPEDOES" POILUS TO MAKE THEM WELL

SODLIER WHO OBJECTED AND BEAT SURGEON GETS SUSPENDED SENTENCE--HOW CURE IS APPLIED.

Something of a sensation has been caused in France and throughout Europe by the revelation, at a trial before the military tribunal in Tourg of the great service rendered by a French physician who has effected thousands of cures in one of the grave forms of maady for which the war is responsible and for which it had been considered that no cure was known.

A zouave named Deschamps was charged with refusing to allow an electric treatment to be given to him by Dr. Clovis Vincent and with opposing violence to the insistence of the physician. The case in its first days aroused a good deal of popular feeling against the physician, when it was announced that the defendant, once a man of powerful physique, was now a crippled wreck, and that the treatment was imposed on the patient, and that involved a form of almost unbearable torture with electric currents.

The case became doubly interesting and was made the subject of controversy in medico-legal circles when it as learned that the defence in behalf of the zouave would rely on the principle that a patient had an inalienable right to refuse a form of treatment which involved much suffering. The fact that the subject in this case was a soldier furnished the basis for the controversy.

So much discussion was aroused on the subject and so interested did the general public become in the case, that Justin Goddard, Under Secretary of State in charge of the sanitary service department, deemed it desirable to publish an open letter eulogizing the services of Dr. Vincent. "Instructed by experience," he wrote to the doctor, "you need not take into account the emotions of an ill-informed public."

THE HOSPITAL TORPEDO

The soldiers refer to Dr. Vincent's method of treatment as "torpedoing" and to his electric charges as "torpedoes," and these terms are now becoming current with regard to the new treatment.

In brief terms the case which led up to the publishing abroad of the very important discovery by Dr. Vincent and to the glorification of this physician for his great services was as follows: Deschamps, by a fall in a trench at the Yser front, had suffered a distortion of the spine. As he considered the electric treatment to which Dr. Vincent desired to subject him too painful, and as the doctor insisted, he fell upon the latter and beat him severely. The soldier later explained that he was not aware of what he had done.

The questions raised before the military court were the following: Has a soldier the right to reject the treatment ordered by the military physicians? Can he refuse to allow operations to be performed on him? Should his refusal receive the same consideration as in the case of a civilian?

The court in the Deschamps case did not express an opinion on these points, but apparently gave them full consideration, as it condemned the soldier to only six months' imprisonement and even applied the law which allows a sentence to remain suspended and inoperative.

In view of the widespread interest shown in the case, one of the editors of the Paris Journal, Lucien Chassaigne, submitted himself to the "torpedo" treatment and writes his experience of it in connection with an intersting account of Dr. Vincent's work.

"I have just undergone Dr. Vincent's torpedoing," he says. "On account of the contradictory opinions which have been expressed in connection with the condemnation of the Zouave Deschamps I considered this the only way in which an authentic, reasonable and experimental explanation could be laid before the public on the subject of the now famous treatment.

"In what does the treatment which Dr. Vincent conceived consist? He, himself, calls it 'Intensive re-education,' and besides intensive it might be termed 'instantaneous.' It is intended for men in whom a careful examination reveals no organic lesion, but who show serious nervous troubles, which oblige them to walk bent in two, and prevent them from raising their arms or legs and from bending their fingers. From the clinical point of view these are nervous cases where the will, above all, is affected. In general their troubles have arisen as a result of violent commotions, by being blown up, or thrown to the ground by shells, or by suffering a severe fall.

"Heretofore the cure of such patients was a long and tedious process and it generally failed. After months of treatment they were sent to their homes, infirm, incapable of earning their living, and lost to the army.

"Dr. Vincent asked himself if it would not be possible to re-establish this tottering will power, to shake up this nerveus system, fatigued and asleep, by giving to it a brusk electric shock. From his very first trials he was satisfied that he was on the right path. In ten minutes men, who for a year had been walking on crutches and bent at right angles straightened up and walked with a firm step.

TREATMENT IS PAINFUL.

"Undoubtedly the treatment is painful, but the 'poilus,' the French soldiers, who had gone through many another painful experience, clenched their teeth and submitted to it. The process is simple. In a well-lighted hall, without any scenery, Dr. Vincent orders the patient to undress. In a corner is the electric table. The electrodes are two disks covered with wet cloth about three-quarters of an inch thick. The current is carefully measured; then the electrodes are applied, very near to each other, on the limb which is to be shaken up and the electric intensity, at first feeble, is gradually increased.

"This is the way generally that the 'torpedoed' persons act. First of all, there is a shout, violent and spontaneous. Then, nearly always, the patient struggles, protests, and emits energetic remonstrances. Next comes a period of calm, followed by a new crisis of exasperation, and finally, at the end of eight or ten minutes, this particular patient, who, for the preceding fourteen months who had his body, raises it progressively until it is above his head.

"No time is now lost. The will has been started on its work, it must be kept at it. The soldier for a full hour is made to go through a series of exercises and of movements appropriate to the needs of the case, the working of weights on pulleys and the climbing ladders, until the natural automatism of the movements has been definitely brought back. The whole treatment is over."

DESPAIRING WOMAN NOW HAPPY MOTHER

Mrs. Stephens Did Not Need The Surgical Operation.

Patoka, Ill.—"I had been married five years and my greatest desire was to become a mother. The doctor said I never would have a child unless I was operated on for female troubles and I had given up all hopes when a friend told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it regularly for sometime, and I am in better health than ever, and have a healthy baby girl. I praise your Vegetable Compound for my baby and my better health. I want all suffering women to know that it is the sure road to health and happiness."—Mrs. George Stephens, R. F. D. No. 3, Patoka, Ill.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is so successful in overcoming woman's ills because it contains the tonic, strengthening properties of good old fashioned roots and herbs, which act on the female organism. Women from all parts of the country are continually testifying to its strengthening, curative influence.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter, and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was formerly entirely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

White Masked Burglar Made A Daring Raid

MONTREAL, Aug. 24.—A daring burglar who wore a white mask while doing a second storey job at noon yesterday got away with $3 after an exciting experience by a son of Mr. and Mrs. P. Dimonty, 396 St. Timothy street. The boy was alone in the house while his parents were cooling off in the yard. The robber entered the front door according to the boy's story made his appearance more like a ghost than anything he had ever seen.

Armed with two revolvers he had no trouble in convincing the youth that his life depended on obeying him. The boy was bound and gagged for some time the robber taking flight at the approach of the lad's parents. He made his escape through a skylight and dropped to the roof of an adjoining building from which he reached the ground by means of a water spout. One of his revolvers was found on the roof of the second house.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Journeying to Jerusalem. — Acts 20, 16-38.

Golden Text.—I commend you to God and to the word of his grace.—Acts 20:32.

1. Verse 16. As a geographical exercise look up on the map the places mentioned in verses 13 to 17, and say where they are situated.
2. Verses 17-21. Paul here opens his heart and gives his personal experience, without any of the art of the orator; would it be more Christian and more practical, or not, and why, if modern preachers would constantly give their experience in their sermons thus furnishing concrete examples of the power of the gospel?
3. What would be the result if pastors would still preach the gospel from house to house in addition to preaching it publicly? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by the members of the club.)
4. Verse 22. How much would it help or hurt us to know in detail the things that are to happen to us in the future?
5. What is the meaning of "go bound in the spirit to Jerusalem"?
6. Must such inward convictions as Paul had always be heeded? Why?
7. If we disobey these "oughts" of the soul, what will be the effect upon our spiritual life?
8. Verse 23. Is it usual, or common for God to give to spiritual men a glimpse into the outlines of the future? Give your reasons.
9. Verse 24. Would you say and why, that each Christian has as distinct a mission as Paul had?
10. Which should we rather sacrifice, our life, or the accomplishment of our mission, and why?
11. Why should our last farewells, to our beloved friends, be said or glad?
12. Verses 26, 27. Why is it not improper boasting for a faithful man to say that he has done his whole duty?
13. Why should every minister be able to say as Paul said in verse 27?
14. Verse 28. What is the proper "feed" for the church of God?
15. Verses 29-31. In view of the fact that "wolves" are always on our track, what should be our attitude?
16. What are our present dangers from within the church?
17. Verse 32. What is the only sure and certain protection for the Christian?
18. Verses 33-35. May any man covet riches, and be well pleasing to God?
19. What is, at once, the supreme duty and the greatest luxury of the Christian life?
20. Verses 36-38. What lessons may we learn from this touching parting scene?

CALL STRAWBERRY TEA BEST

Germans Are Seeking a Substitute for the Chinese Product.

LONDON, Aug. 24. — The Daily Chronicle says that the Royal Horticultural Institute of Berlin has been experimenting with various leaves to take the place of tea, which at $2 a pound is too costly for the ordinary citizen. More than twenty different kinds of leaves have ben tried, but only thre were found to contain in some measure the aromatic and invigorating qualities possessed by tea.

The leaves of the strawberry, blackberry and raspberry gave very satisfactory results. The authorities who have been brewing these leaves came to the conclusion that strawberry leaves were superior to all rivals and that refined palates which had been regaled with strawberry tea have no desire to return to the much overrated and costly Chinese product."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SHIRTWAIST

By Anabel Worthington

This is a design in a blouse that you will like, made up in the figured or flowered effects that are so summery and so popular—flowered Japanese crêpe, figured voile, silk, flowered or dotted lawn or muslin.

There is a certain trimness about the model that entitles it to a favored place among your collection of separate blouses. Very cleverly the designers have arranged for the collar and vest to be of separate material and in one piece, the vest extending full length of the waist, with the fronts overlapping.

The open neck is graced with a broad collar that is daintily outlined with edging. This trimming extends down the right front and suggests that the closing is made with snappers or hooks and eyes. The crown cuffs on three-quarter sleeves that are quite full are finished with the edging-in material. They match the collar and vest.

Of course this design may be made of all one material, but the combination of figured and plain goods is effective.

To make in size 38 will require ⅝ yard of plain material, 1⅝ yards of figured goods and 3¼ yards of edging. The material to be 36 inches wide. Using all one material 2 yards will be plenty.

You may obtain the pattern by sending [illegible] to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

SIX ZEPPELINS IN THE LATEST RAID

RUSSIANS ATTACK ON WHOLE CAUCASUS FRONT

French Troops Consolidate Newly Won Positions

Hold All Ground and Repulse German Attacks---Heavy Enemy Assault on Fleury Also Checked by French Fire --- Russians Resume Advance on whole Caucasus Front Following Recapture of Muse.

LAST NIGHT'S ZEPPELIN ASSAULT

PARIS (French Official Communique), August 25.—French troops last night consolidated the positions won by yesterday afternoon's advance north and northwest of Maurepas, in which the village itself was captured, and repulsed a violent German attack against Hill 121 south of the village, it was officially announced to-day. Seventy prisoners were taken, making a total of three hundred and fifty captured on this sector since yesterday morning.

On the northwestern front of Verdun the Germans launched a heavy attack at two o'clock this morning against the Village of Fleury following a heavy artillery duel. The attacking columns were stopped short by the French fire. In the region of Apremont, southeast of Verdun, another German attack was stopped. Heavy artillery firing occurred last night on the sectors of Roye, Lassigny, Moulin and Tousvent.

Russians Are On The Offensive

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, August 25.—The Russians have resumed their advance on the entire Caucasian front following the recapture of Mush, said a wireless despatch from Petrograd to-day. The Turks are evacuating Bitlis.

Damage In Latest Raid is Slight

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, August 25 (ten a.m.)—Six Zeppelins took part in last night's raid on the English East coast, the second within twenty-four hours, General French, commander of the home forces, reported to-day. The Zeppelins were violently attacked by anti-aircrift guns, and by a British aviator who dashed in at close range, despite the Zeppelins' fire and turned his machine gun loose upon a dirigible. The Zeppelin escaped by mounting high into the clouds where the pursuing aeroplane was unable to follow her because of the heavy mists. The total of casualties has not yet been reported, and the number of bombs dropped is uncertain. Several bombs were directed at ships along the sea coast, but the damage thus far reported is slight. In one locality the railway station and several houses were damaged. Two horses were killed. In another locality two houses were wrecked.

LONDON, August 25.—Germany has ordered the Bulgarians to discontinue their advance into Greece, and to evacuate occupied Greek territory, fearing Greece will be drawn into the war, according to an unconfirmed wireless from Rome to-day.

Says Bremen Has Been Captured

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

NEW YORK, August 25.—The report that the German submarine Bremen had been captured by the British was repeated to-day by the captain of a British merchant steamer who arrived aboard the liner Baltic. He said the Bremen was caught in a steel net in the North Sea, and swung helpless for four days until British a patrol boat discovered her. Four of the submarine's crew died from the foul air he said, before the submersible was towed into Dover.

The British Admiralty kept the fact secret he said, fearing the Germans would not start a third submarine for America if they learned of the mishap to the Bremen.

Grand Duke's Attacks In Caucasus Continue

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, August 25.—The Russian official statement this afternoon announced that the Grand Duke's offensive west of Lake Van is continuing. In the Mosul region the Russians are pursuing the remnants of the Turkish division dispersed in battle Wednesday.

One Zeppelin Reached Outskirts of London

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, August 25.—One of the six Zeppelins that raided England last night reached the outskirts of London and hurled down bombs, slightly damaging the electric power station, General French, commander of the home forces, announced this afternoon. Three men, three women and two children were killed by the raiders. Seven men, eleven women, and three children were wounded.

Italians Are Now Nearing Trieste

Examiner Special:

ROME, August 25.—General Cadorna's forces are pushing ahead and are now within fourteen miles of the Austrian City and Port of Trieste.

British Advance Their Lines Again

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, August 25.—British troops advanced their lines several hundred yards last night in severe fighting on both sides of the Longueval-Bapaume Road, General Haig reported this afternoon. The advance was made along the northern and eastern edges of Delville Woods.

THEATRE OWNER NEGLECTED DETAIL OF WAR TAX LAW

Fined $100 for Failure to Forward Weekly Statement of His Ticket Sales—Claimed He Had Not Received Forms

WHAT LAW DEMANDS

Dr. F. L. Robinson, proprietor of the Empire Theatre, was fined $100 in the Police Court this morning for neglecting to report his war tax sales to the Government as required by the law that went into force on May 15th of the present year. He stated that he had never received any of the regulation forms upon which returns should be made, but Mr. R. C. Newman, provincial inspector of theatres, stated that all the other theatres in the city were using the return slips, and he believed that they had been forwarded to Dr. Robinson, but that he had thrown the envelope containing them into the waste paper basket. Inspector Newman said that Dr. Robinson told him of his practice of consigning advertising circulars and mail of that kind to the basket without a once over, and it was more than likely that this had been the fate of the blank return slips sent out by the department.

That the Government had received the war tax from the Empire was not questioned by the Inspector. The method employed is explained as follows—reels of numbered admission tickets are purchased by the theatre from the large exchanges, and in the same way are reels of war tax tickets purchased. If one thousand admission tickets are sold in one day, then the same number was unwound and torn from the war tax reel. This, it was stated, was the practice at the Empire, but Inspector Newman pointed out that the war tax ticket must be handed to the purchaser with the admission ticket.

Dr. Robinson admitted that the war tax tickets were not handed out to the public, nor did he make weekly returns to the Government, giving the above explanation of his practice.

Magistrate Dumble remarked that the proprietor of the Empire might be the most honest man in the world, but the war tax law must be observed even in its details. Hence, on the doctor's admission of failure to make the prescribed returns, the Magistrate stated that he must impose a fine, partly as an example to other theatres.

DUTY OF THE THEATRE-GOER.

The theatre tax law applies to theatre-goers as well as to the owners of the houses. This should be clearly understood. The person who enters a theatre without handling a war tax ticket is liable to the penalty of the law.

Dr. Robinson showed the Examiner this afternoon his check-book, showing the regular payment of cheques for war tax tickets. One of the last four cheques happened to be for the last consignment of war tax tickets. As previously stated there was no question about the Government's receipt of the war tax, but the Inspector laid a complaint on the ground that the strict letter of the law was not being observed.

FIRST RECRUIT FOR THE 247th BATTALION HAS BEEN ENROLLED

First Enlisted Man for New Unit is a Modest Individual However and Does Not Want His Name Used---News of the New Battalion---235th to Take a Long Trek---To-day's Military News.

The first recruit for the new 247th Battalion has been attested, but he is such a modest individual that, at his own request, his name is withheld for the time being. He was not the first to apply, or to be examined, but he was the first to take the oath so the honours are fairly his, although for the present his identity will remain a secret. It is expected that recruiting for the new unit will be fairly brisk to-morrow, although until the harvest is over it is not thought that the enlistment from the rural sections will be large. Col. Johnston has had many applications from officers and is arranging the details of his staff. He leaves on Monday for a tour of the district and on his return the recruiting campaign of the 247th will be mapped out.

BOWMANVILLE, Aug. 24. — Arrangements are now practically completed for the route march of the 235th Battalion through the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham. There will be some 300 officers and men on the march under the command of Lieut. S. B. Scobell. The brass band and bugle and drum band will accompany the battalion. Staff from the Orderly Room, Quartermaster's stores, Paymaster's Department and Hospital will carry on their various duties on the march the same as in camp. People are invited to visit the quarters of the battalion at each place to see first-hand how a military camp is conducted.

Each evening patriotic concerts will be held consisting of band selections vocal and instrumental numbers and addresses by prominent speakers and officers of the Battalion.

The itinerary of the march, with possibly a few slight changes, will be as follows:

Orono, arrive, Sept. 2nd, leave, Sept. 4th.

Newcastle, arrive, Sept. 4th, leave, Sept. 6th.

Hampton, arrive, Oct. 24th, leave, Oct. 26th.

The Kingston Whig Says:

The Artillery Brigade at Barriefield Camp is making the arrangements for its transfer to Petawawa. It is expected that the move will be made in a few days, and already an advanced party is being formed to go north and make the camp ready for the reception of the brigade.

As soon as the batteries move out of here, a new brigade of four batteries and an ammunition column will likely be authorized. One of the batteries bears the name of Queen's University and the other three with the ammunition column are recruited in this military district. The recruiting areas at present are those of the three militia brigades in the district. The battery takes in Ottawa, and that district including Smith's Falls, etc. Another takes in Peterborough and the third the ammunition column the remainder of the district. The officers to be appointed to the new batteries will likely be chosen from those appointed to the depot brigade or the brigades in Petawawa. There has been a steady redistribution of officers to Petawawa and with so many changes many will be dropping back into the new depot brigade to be authorized.

In an interesting letter to his sister, Bandsman W. F. Doughty, of the 93rd Band, states that he has already met many Peterborough boys since the arrival of the 93rd in England. Among the visitors to the 93rd camp recently was Stan. Kerneghan, who went overseas with the Mechanical transport. Bandsman Doughty states that the 93rd were convinced that Britain rules the waves when they saw the measures taken by the navy to protect them during their voyage.

This District Leads.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 25.—Official recruiting figures for the first two weeks of August show that the total enlistments for all Canada in that period numbered 3,524. The Kingston Military District, covering Eastern Ontario, leads again with 694. The numbers of men who joined the colours in the other districts were: Alberta, 603; Toronto, 577; Manitoba and Saskatchewan, 541; Montreal, 446; British Columbia, 227; London, 202; Maritime Provinces, 183; Quebec 61

Will Officially Allow Bulgarians to Enter Macedonia But Greek Volunteers Flock in Thousands to the Allies' Cause and One General Refuses to Obey Orders.

THE BALKAN SITUATION

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The jumbled situation in the Balkans began to clear to-day, both politically and from the military standpoint. The Greek Government made its position on the invasion of Greek Macedonia definitely known. There will be no effort made officially to hinder the Bulgarian invasion of Greece, which is rapidly converting wide sections into a battlefield. The Greek troops which engaged Bulgarian in the Seres district were ordered to withdraw, and it was made known that the Central Empires have promised that all Greek territory seized by the Bulgarians will be returned. Greece and the inhabitants of the territory of the war zone will be indemnified for the damage done.

But despite the orders of the Government, Salonica despatches to-night report that the Greek commander at Seres has refused to back down before the Bulgars. He is said to be offering a stiff resistance, and thousands of volunteers are flocking to his support. Many of these are Greek reservists who resided at Salonica.

Roumania still hangs in the balance. Berlin reports a cooling down of the war fever of Roumanian Entente sympathizers and expansionists and adds that "all preparations are complete to meet the Roumanian army, if war is declared, on its own soil."

TO INVADE BULGARIA.

The Russians have concentrated a large number of troops on the Roumanian frontier, and on the banks of the Russian Danube for the purpose of invading Bulgaria by way of Dulgrudja, according to a Budapest despatch to the Morning Post, quoting the Azest. The Azest also reports powerful Roumanian farces gathered on the lower Danube and the Pruth.

BULGARS CLAIM VICTORY.

The first detailed news of the great battle now going on in Macedonia also was received to-day.

The heaviest fighting continues on the two wings of the 150-mile front, which the Bulgars are attempting to drive in.

Following what Sofia describes as a heavy defeat of the French in the Struma valley, the battle in this region has resolved itself into a furious artillery duel. The alleged Bulgarian victory occurred on Monday, the French being driven across the Struma, according to an official report by the Bulgarian War Office, leaving "the ground covered with dead." The French losses are said to be large, and great supplies fell into the hands of the Bulgarians.

On the other extremity of the front in the region of Florina, the Bulgarians report a continuation of their advance and the repulse of Serbian counter-attacks. The invaders are now more than 25 miles south of Florina, and hold strong mountain positions. Gen. Serrail, in a despatch to-night, gives further information of the Serbian counter-attacks. These attacks are already developing into a strong offensive, he asserts, and the Serbians have been able to regain a strong hill position north-west of Lake Ostrovo.

On the centre there is heavy artillery fighting, the British guns engaging the Bulgarians in the Lake Doiran region. British troops near Orfano, on the gulf of the same name, and at the extreme eastern tip of the allied front, also had a skirmish with the Bulgarians. The Bulgars claim to hold the entire Drama-Seres railroad, and to have reached the sea coast at points, completing a half circle around the allied front and removing the danger of flanking attacks.

A SUCCESSFUL DOUBLE-BARRELLED ALLIED ATTACK

British and French Forces Again Push Forward—Berlin Admits Maurepas Has Been Captured by the French While British Have Closed Grip More Tightly on Foe

COMBLES TO FALL NEXT

LONDON, Aug. 25. —A successful double-barrelled offensive by the allied forces on the Somme shifted interest from the Balkan fighting to the western front to-day. The German war office this afternoon admitted the loss of Maurepas village to the French. The capture of Combles by the French is expected shortly. The British forces have pushed forward on both sides of the road from Longueval to Bapaume, throwing the British pincers more tighly around the villages of Guillemont and Ginchy. The German war office also admitted the loss of shell wrecked positions in the Thiepval region. Operations on both the Russian and Balkan fronts are almost at deadlock. No important new advances have been announced for the Bulgarians since the Rome wireless message to-day asserted that they had halted their invasion of Greece under German instructions.

Results of Conal's Dollar Day Contest

The Dollar Day feature at Connal's store was an estimating contest of the number of coffee beans in a jar. The closest estimates to the correct number, 7,515, were as follows:

3rd—Mr. Ed. Hiland, 597 Homewood Ave.—8,680; twenty-five pounds pastry flour.

Tied for 5th—Mrs. James Jackson, Omemee, R.R. No. 2.

Mrs. Geo. Franks, R.R. No. 2, Peterborough.

GIVE THE KIDDIES A CHANCE.

School time is nearly here, are you sure your children's eyes are strong enough for studying. Many a child has failed because of bad sight, see that yours does not. Bring them to Dr. Lacey and have him examine their eyes. No charge for consultation. 410 George street.

IT WAS MRS. SULLIVAN.

In the report of the winning numbers of the Dollar estimates, the prize of $7.50 won by the 7080 estimate, was incorrectly credited to Mr. John Sullivan, 11 Park street. The lucky winner was Mrs. John Sullivan, of the same address.

FRIDAY, AUG. 25, 1916

CANADA FOR CANADIANS.

The Toronto World has made, and is making a brave fight for the application of a real sound national policy on the exploitation of our nickel interests—the home refining of our practical monopoly of this much demanded metal. But the weak point in the World's battle line is its disposition to make itself the only factor, the sole protagonist of its propaganda—to play the lone hand. The World is a "bonnie fechter" and when it confines itself to straight argument on the nickel question, it makes out a strong, if not an unanswerable case. Its inclination, however, to have everybody else wrong and itself, only right, weakens the influence of its advocacy and tends to repel co-operation, the prime necessity to successful result is a matter that demands unity of sentiment and action. In this regard the World is a good deal like the old lady of the story, who describing the marching of a volunteer regiment, of which her son was a member, declared that the marching was bad—"everybody was out of step but my Johnny".

The World's object seems to be to sugar-coat the inevitable criticism of its own party by broadcast and indiscriminate condemnation of both political parties. This is not good journalism nor good policy, nor good patriotism. One outstanding Ishmaelite, like Bourassa in the country is enough. Mr. W. H. McLean, M.P., proprietor of the World is too good a man to be spoiled. His equipment for good public service, consisting in his parliamentary ability, his insight and his capacity for digging to the foundation of principles ,is impaired by his tendency to hit a head wherever it shows, to abuse the opposing counsel even when he has a very strong case.

A statement in another column shows that the Liberal party, in this province, anyway, has shown an interest in the nickel question. It is true that the Liberal party in the past has not officially taken a strong interest in the nickel question, largely because the party has not been in power since nickel became the live question that the development of the public ownership principle and the exigencies of war demands have made it; and if the Liberals were in power and adopted the laisses-faire attitude of the present governments of the Province and Dominion, it would deserve equally strong condemnation. It is probable they would not do so. Liberals have co-operated with Conservatives in promoting the national policy in spirit of the Hydro Electric, which owes its success to its non-partisan character. something it is likely to lose, if the government succeeds in making it a political and partisan appendage of the government.

A Liberal government in Ontario, in the virtual prohibition of export of Ontario, sawlogs and pulpwood in unmanufactured condition, applied the principle that national and imperial interests, demand should be applied to nickel. The Ontario government has no power perhaps to take the extreme measures required in the premises, but it could certainly avoid helping the deversion of our nickel profits to foreign coffers by criminal remission of taxation. And the Dominion Government which has scoffed at Liberal incredulity in the matter of a "emergency" now that an emergency in its acutest form, has existed for two years might have taken practical steps not only to prevent Canadian nickel reaching the enemy, but to adopt the best means of preventing such a calamity, and to serve the public interests in the highest way by providing for the home-refinement of nickel, and applying to this extent the true national policy, in respect of all our national resources—Canada for the Canadians.

PLAIN HINTING.

Though there seemed to be little definite party politics in the Southwest Toronto by-election, and though Hon. Howard Ferguson on behalf of the Hearst government declares that the defeat of the specially endorsed candidate of the Premier has no signigficance for the government—occasions no alarm to the government, the signs point other wise. But if he and Mr. Lucas have their "ears to the ground," they would hear mutterings and rumblings and grumblings of the voice of the press supporting the government which would occasion some alarm to a government not blinded to its own defects or deaf to the voice of reproof from its own supporters. One cannot name a government organ more consistently faithful heretofore in support of the government than the Kingston Standard, yet we find that journal sounding the alarm to the Hearst government in the following manner:

"The whole thing is past and gone, and even the election in Southwest Toronto is a matter of history. Nevertheless the future of the Conservative party lies ahead of it, and if we will look forward rather than backward we may do better in the days that are to come. But before we look forward it would perhaaps be well to look inward to see whether or not by a house-cleaning process the party in Toronto may be purged of some of its depressing and weakening influences. One thing is certain, and that is that it will never be purged with the leaders there still following their own noses blindly and not listening to advice from without."

Unless the government is bound to dispense with the support of its newspapers and work its own blind way to downfall, one would think that so strong a demand for the administration of a political purgative, would have a disquieting effect upon anybody except dormant ministers.

CANADA'S TRADE.

Canada's capacity for business, as revealed by the latest Customs returns, is nothing short of amazing. Our trade increase for July shows an increase of no less than 141 per cent. as compared with last year. For the four-month period including July the total trade reached the record-breaking figure of $766,372,882, as against $371,646,906 in the corresponding period of last year. The balance of trade is now heavily in our favour, thus completely reversing the conditions obtaining before the war. Whereas our imports for July amounted to $63,622,587, our exports reached the dizzy altitudeoi $104,964,270. Nobody could have believed that a remarkable achievement could have been effected in so short a time. Of course, conditions are highly favourable for trade prosperity, owing to the war. It is to be noted, too, that orders for foreign goods are mostly brought to us, instead of our having to go to look for them. The chief lesson to be learned from present conditions is the capacity of Canada for foreign business, and the need of building up an organization, both individual and national, that will keep the orders rolling in from abroad after they cease to come of their own volition.—Montreal Herald.

The Relation of Ontario Liberals To Nickel Matter

The Toronto World apparently wants to seize all the credit for the general agitation now existing for the government control of nickel. The Hearst Government is in league with the nickle monopolists, says the World, and they talk vaguely of a "secret settlement" between Mr. Hearst and Mr. Rowell in regard to the evasion by the International Nickel Company of just taxation.

To anyone in touch with the proceedings in the Ontario Legislature last session, the inclusion of Mr. Rowell and the Liberal party in the scalding criticisms of this newspaper, is positively ludicrous. As a matter of fact, Mr. Rowell and his followers (as usual) were the first to criticise the government on the issue, and, what is more to the point, to suggest a course of action. A statement of facts makes this clear:

"On the 15th of March Mr. Carter (Liberal member for South Wellington), ascertained by a question to the government that the Canada Copper Company (a subsidiary company of the International Nickel Company) had paid only $40,000 in taxes for the fiscal year ending October, 1915, whereas, under the Mining Tax Act, it should have paid $400,000.

Subsequently, on March 30, Mr. Carter followed the question up by asking for a return of the house showing correspondence between the Ontario Government and the nickel companies in reference to this tax; and in moving his resolution the Liberal member said it was "staggering" to know that these people paid only 40,000 when between 1913 and 1915 their gross profits had risen from $6,000,000 to $17,000,000.

The plausible reply of Mr. Ferguson (now so notorious for his "Billingsgate" talk during the Southwest Toronto bye-election) to the effect that the tax of $40,000 placed on the output of the Canada Copper Company was according to a five-year agreement, was exposed by Mr. Rowell himself. Mr. Rowell pointed out that there was no provision in the Act which authorized the government to make any such agreement, and the Premier admitted this to be the case, and that there was not even an agreement with the company in writing, but a "general understanding" between himself (Mr. Hearst) and the company that the flat rate of $40,000 would prevail for five years.

Messrs. Bowman, Elliott, Ham, Clarke and Proudfoot each slated the government for the Liberal side for overstepping its authority. Mr. Ham asked the pointed question 'of the government would not take steps to secure its share of the tremendous profits, now that public dissatisfaction had been voiced in the House. Mr. Ferguson answered that it would be "difficult". And yet he could make such a promise whether the official ship could weather the storm.

With Mr. Rowell marshalling his forces in what cannot be described as other than a determined attack to secure for the province its just share of the wealth wrested from its mineral beds, the World seems somewhat remiss in linking the Opposition leader with those who are responsible for the continued unsatisfactory state of affairs.

The Liberals in the House, under Mr. Rowell's leadership, did not stop there. They introduced a resolution on April 3 calling upon the government to take action. The resolution reads:

"That in the opinion of this House the production and sale of nickel in the province should be under government control, and that negotiations should be at once entered into by the government of the Dominion of Canada and the government of the United Kingdom to secure united action to acquire the absolute control of the nickel mines and nickel product of the province of Ontario."

Mr. Rowell, in a telling way, urged the war as a reason for the adoption of this resolution; and individual Liberals put forth argument after argument in favor of the conservation of our nickel resources for the use of the British Empire.

The Hearst Governmental majority voted the resolution down.

Dissipation of German Dreams Of European and World Domination

That in the event of failure in the war, the Germans would attempt to secure compensation for their sacrifices by absorbing the whole or a large part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire has long been looked upon as a foregone conclusion. It is an old dream of Pan-Germanism, and dates from long before the present war. In 1844 Von Maltke the greater wrote: "We hope that Austria will maintain the rights and protect the future of the Danubian countries, and that Germany will finally succeed in freeing the mouths of her great rivers." Germany, be it observed, not Austria. In 1859 the Gazette d'Augsbourg said that were it not for the fact that Austria was a member of the Germanic Confederation, it would be the duty of the German nation to absorb at all costs the non-German countries, as they were indispensable to German's expansion and her position as a great power.

Austria is no longer a member of the Germanic Confederation, and when this war is over Germany will no longer be a great Power; but of course it will try to obtain by black treachery to its chief ally what it has failed to obtain by force of arms. There are only twelve millions of Germans in Austria-Hungary, against thirty-eight millions of non-Germans by whom they are cordially hated and distrusted. The Kaiser is haunted by a vision of a German Empire extending from the North Sea to the Persian Gulf. How long would this cribbed, cabined and confined Empire satisfy His Ambitious Majesty. His appetite grows by what it feeds upon. In his indiscreet moments, which are frequent, he babbles of the United States as Greater Germany. No royal lunatic ever had wilder dreams of world-dominion. The English Review says the Pan-Germanic scheme of 1911 is embodied in four formulas: Berlin-Calais, Berlin-Riga, Hamburg - Salonika, Hamburg - Persian Gulf. To carry that out he resolved upon the annihilation of five great Powers, Austria-Hungary by dragging her into the German zollverein, France and Russia by force of arms, England to be disposed of when France and Russia were beaten to their knees. Italy was looked upon as a negligible quantity.

How are the mighty fallen! France, Russia, England and Italy are stronger than ever, and squeezing the Central Powers with irresistible force. Austria-Hungary is being overrun by the Russians and Italians. Germany herself is menaced with invasion. The dotard head of the House of Hapsburg must realize that he has been cruelly betrayed by his ally, the Kaiser, and that nothing can save his empire from absorption by Germany but the victory of the Entente Allies. Turkey, Bulgaria and Greece, the Kaiser's other allis and dupes, are in danger of falling into the possession of the man that walks like a bear, and well will it be for them if it saves them from the tender mercies of the Huns and the Goths. The whole history of war records nothing to equal the victorious march of the Russian troops towards Berlin. They go from victory to victory. The Germans cannot oppose them and dare not leave them without a show of opposition. The German defence on the western front is paralyzed by the Russian and Italian victories in the east. The Kaiser is running about aimlessly like a dog at a fair and doing nothing to stem the tide that is already overwhelming him.—Montreal Herald.

Copies of Prof. Kylie's Pamphlets Given Free

The Public Library has just received from the estate of the late Prof. Kylie of the Toronto University, two hundred copies of a very interesting pamphlet entitled, "Who Caused the War?" Prof. Kylie's untimely death will be fresh in the minds of everyone and doubtless many will be glad to receive a memento of one whose uncommon talents, no less than his amiable qualities and sterling worth were so widely and justly appreciated. These pamphlets will be distributed free to such as desire to possess a copy.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

DANNY JOHNSTON WELL KNOWN HERE IS ARMY CHAMPION

Danny Johnston, of the 180th Sportsmen's Battalion, who boxed in the Armouries here last winter at the smoker put on by the Sportsmen for the 93rd Battalion, is the champion boxer of the C.E.F. in Canada. The following from the Toronto Star tells how he won his title:

Never before in Canada has such a crowd witnessed a boxing bout as at Borden Camp last night, when 15,000 soldiers—practically every man that was off duty—saw Danny Johnston of Toronto, the 180th Battalion representative, defeat Clayton Wildfong of Berlin, from the 118th Battalion for the championship of the army and the Colonel "Bob" Low belt, which has a real diamond of some size imbedded in the centre.

Not only was it the magnitude of the crowd, but the orderly conduct and splendid behaviour of the spectators that made the event notable. Announcement was made before the bouts that there must be no shouting or comment or noise of any kind during the progress of any bout — and there wasn't a sound. During the intermissions the crowd cheered and encouraged their favourite boxer, but when the bell rang for the boxers to resume, the air was as silent as in the adjacent woods at midnight—and that is some silence, on the authority of the outpost guards.

The bouts wer held in the open air in the stadium erected by the indefatigable Capt. Tom Flanagan and the Borden Camp Athletic Association. General Logie and staff and the officers of the various battalions occupied the boxes at the ringside. There was seating accommodation for 8,000 men behind the boxes, and on all four sides outside of the seats men stood in thousands, so that by the aid of the powerful light over the centre of the ring all that could be seen was a sea of faces, no matter in which direction one looked.

The bouts were conducted in admirable fashion by the officers of the athletic association, without any annoying delay whatever. The men were ready at the ringside for their turn, and the main bout was commenced shortly after 9 o'clock. General Logie made a speech and a presentation of prizes won in other athletic events, and expressed the wish that every man at the camp would compete in some sort of athletics.

The bout between Johnston and Wildfong was most interesting despite the fact that Johnston showed a superiority from the outset of the battle. Johnston's advantage lay in his youth, snap, and quickness, both with his hands and feet. He had a world of confidence in his ability to win and while constantly on the aggressive never took an unnecessary chance and was never in danger of being put away by Wildfong's well-known haymaker. Johnston was in and out like a flash, jabbing with his left and crossing the right every favourable opportunity. Wildfong, much slower, and set in his movements, did his most effective work with a jab but couldn't use his right to effect because when he cut loose Johnston wasn't there. After the 5th round it was just a question whether or not Wildfong could stay the limit. Johnston having gained complete mastery of his opponent.

The knockout was clean and clear-cut, though Wildfong was on his feet less than 5 seconds after being counted out. It was a right hook to the jaw, following a stiff left jab to straighten him up, that did the trick.

The demonstration that followed Johnston's victory was a fitting conclusion to the night's sport. The champion was escorted by bands and soldiers down the lines and the celebration continued until the bugle blew "Lights out."

Don't Believe Attempts to Boost Fight

It generally happens that the winner of a bout with the title in the balance gets considerable glory as well as coin for his efforts. The coming bout between Freddie Welsh, the title-holder, and Charley White, does not offer much in the way of glory for the champion. He is taking a chance, but a very remote one, of losing his title, and victory will bring him quite a little money. It can hardly add to his prestige as a boxer.

To take on White Welsh had to pass up two boxers who are generally conceded by boxing followers to rank ahead of the slow footed Chicagoan over the twenty round route, or any other distance, for that matter. Both Benny Leonard and Johnny Dundee appeared to have better right to a bout than White. On that account any attempt to show that the champion is taking a desperate chance because White has several knockouts to his credit does not fool anybody. Welsh should glide easily to a decision over the Chicagoan.

Boxing followers who have seen both Welsh and White in action many times cannot figure where White will do much in the coming bout. Even when Welsh's recent bout with Leonard, his best in years, is thrown out of the calculations, the champion figures to jab the Chicago boxer until he is tired. In brief the contest should furnish Welsh with no severe test, such as he would get in a longer bout with a strong and fast young boxer of the Dundee type or with a puncher like Leonard.

Welsh once got a newspaper decision over Dundee at New Orleans by a tenth-round rally, but he refused to make 135 pounds for the match and the Italian at that time was boxing at 128 pounds. Both Leonard and Dundee are racing now to get first chance at Welsh after he disposes of White.

PITIFUL TALE TOLD TO INVESTIGATORS BY "WHITE SLAVE"

New York, August 23.—So heartrending a story was told to the Grand Jury by Ida Cohen, a 19-year-old white slave victim, that long before she was through there was not a dry eye in the court room. Hardly had she finished her tale, when the jurors passed the hat and collected $50 to help her to get a new hold on life.

Emaciated and ghastly pale, the girl through an interpreter, told how she came to America from Russia as a child and obtained work in a Brooklyn sweatshop. While visiting friends on the lower East Side, she met David Pariah, a white slave agent.

Ida told the jury Parish said he knew how she could make an easy living. Inasmuch as a strike had thrown her out of employment, she went with Parish. This was two and a half years ago. Since then, Parish has been her master, she said.

Last May, the girl said, she confided to Parish that she would become a mother in a few months and begged him to be lenient with her. She promised that after the birth of the child she would make up for any deficiency. Parish, she swore, took her clothes from her and sent her out into the street.

She succeeded in getting a few clothes and then, penniless, wandered in the streets. She fainted from hunger and was found by a policeman who took her to a hospital. Two days later she gave premature birth to a child who lived six hours.

Ida Cohen was taken to a home where she will be cared for and protected.

Serious Charge Is Laid Against Alderman Palmer

Must Stand Trial in Police Court Next Tuesday—Many Witnesses Called

LONDON, Aug. 5.—After a conference with Crown Attorney McKillop, Ald. William A. Wilson swore out a summons against Ald. Adam Palmer, charging him with assault with intent to do grievious bodily harm. The case will be heard on Tuesday morning by Police Magistrate Judd. Ald. Palmer has engaged counsel, and will defend the case. Just what line of defence has not been decided upon.

This is the sequel of the row in the city council on Monday evening, August 14. It will be remembered that after a wordy battle Ald. Palmer threw a glass, which hit Ald. Widson on the head, inflicting a nasty cut.

For some days there has been talk of a charge, but nothing happened until this afternoon, when Crown Attorney McKillop was consulted. Then the summons was sworn out. J. M. McEvoy has been acting on behalf of Ald. Wilson.

There will be an array of witnesses at the trial. All the aldermen present at the meeting will be asked to give testimony, and the reporters will be summoned.

It is rumoured that there will be a series of actions. Ald. Palmer will probably proceed against William Wilson, son of Ald. Wilson, who is charged with abusing his sister, Miss Eva Palmer, at the home of Ben Noble.

The end is not yet, in any event, and the court proceedings will be followed with great interest.

The penalty for the offence charged is a fine and a maximum of three years' imprisonment. If Ald Palmer is convicted of assaut, without intent to do bodily injury, he will not lose his seat in the council. If the graver offence is proved, he will probably have to vacate his seat on the council.

WELLINGTON BATTALION REMAINS INTACT NOW

BUT WILL BE BROKEN UP IF NOT QUICKLY BROUGHT UP TO STRENGTH.

Guelph, August 24.—The Wellington battalion is to remain intact, but only temporarily, was the word of Colonel Craig, the deposed O.C. when he returned with a deputation from Ottawa this morning.

"Whoever assumes command of the regiment will have to bring it up to strength and do it quickly or it will be broken up," Col. Craig stated, adding that he had recommended that Major Head, now with the 111th, but a Wellington county officer, should be given the position of O. C. of the 153rd, should nothing be done with the application made by him (Craig) to be restored to the position of Commanding Officer of the battalion.

Notice of the issuing of a writ against Col. Craig was served on him to-day for the securing of the payment of a number of bills that were incurred by the battalion while housed here. The bills were not for anything but regimental purposes, Col. Craig claims, and failure to get the money from the regiment has been the cause of action taken against him

HACKENSCHMIDT, THE RUSSIAN LION, TAKEN PRISONER BY ENEMY

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—Geo. Hackenschmidt, the famous "Russian Lion," is a prisoner of war in a German camp near Berlin, and he will ever be able to wrestle again.

This was the statement made today by Jack Curly, Heck's former manager.

"I received a letter from George the other day," said Curley. "He is in a prison camp near Berlin, where he expects to stay until the war is over. He will never wrestle again. He has two good hands, but not two good legs. He has water on one knee and has had several operations for relief for the condition, but it will be impossible for him to do any mat work.

"He doesn't care much. All George wanted was the title. When he discovered that he couldn't beat Frank Gotch he quit the game. Hack is a rich man in his country, and he does not have to wrestle for the money that is in the game."

MILITARY NEWS

ronto, as a result of a cablegram from the War Office in London, stating that the corps is urgently required at the front. Owing to the immense amount of traffic at and behind the lines in France, it has been found that the ordinary waggon roads will not stand the strain. Rainfall soon makes the roads impassable and unless under continuous repair traffic becomes blocked. To overcome this light railway lines are being substituted, which enable the troops to be better supplied from the main depots, the wounded being taken away from the front on railroad cars speedily and not subjected to the torture of bumping in waggons and ambulances on the rough roads. And above all as the advance takes place the big guns are moved up expeditiously on specially constructed railway tracks. These guns weigh about 110 tons each and are accompanied by four lorries for ammunition. Of late the report has often come from the front that account of the heavy rains and advance or attack has been delayed. This is simply due to the state the roads have got into on account of the rain, which consequently blocks the constant supply of ammunition and traffic necessary when an attack is on. The need for these railway lines will be even greater than it is to-day, when the winter comes, and it is hoped that these railway lines will almost entirely take the place of the ordinary roads as general lines of feeders for the troops.

The officer commanding this corps is Lieut.-Col. J. W. Stewart, who has had the experience of building over 5,000 miles of railroad in the west in recent years, and has lately completed the world's record work of the Rogers' Pass tunnel in the Rockies, recently opened by his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught. On being requested to form this corps, Col. Stewart immediately proceeded to the War Office in London and the French front to find first-hand exactly what was required of him and his men to undertake, and the organization and equipment necessary.

Form of Organization.

The form of organization was received from London about six days ago, stating the numbers and class of men required. Meanwhile 450 men have quietly enlisted in the corps in seven weeks. Its establishment calls for tracklayers, enginemen, bridgemen and carpenters, fitters, blacksmiths, labourers and teamsters and eight complete train crews. Those that are specially wanted now are labourers and teamsters, though all railway construction men will be accepted, even if the corps goes overstrength.

Although the men will not have to carry rifles and are not actually a fighting unit, their work will be at times very arduous in the necessity of getting certain construction completed at the earliest possible moment. For that reason the standard, physically, of all men required for this corps will have to be as high as that for any other battalion.

Jealous Women Sear Girl With Redhot Irons

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Aug. 24.—The flesh of her body burned from her shoulders to her heels by red hot irons applied by two jealous co-workers Miss Sarah Johnson, employe of a laundry, is in the hospital, lingering between life and death.

The attack occurred while Miss Johnson was at work over a tub in the laundry. The other two workers—Mary Dorris and Annie Ware—rushed upon the other girl and while one tore off her thin work apron the other applied the irons.

"We'll teach you—we've got you now," they shrieked, as they applied the irons.

Under the terrible agony Miss Johnson fell in a faint. But still her assailants seemingly crazed, continued to apply the hot irons, searing great marks on her back, sides and legs.

They were still at work when the foreman, attracted by the cries, rushed in and drove the crazed women from the helpless worker.

Miss Johnson was rushed to a hospital, where physicians said her condition was serious. Meanwhile Miss Dorris and Miss Ware were arrested and placed in jail.

Other employes of the laundry said jealously was the cause of the inhuman attack upon Miss Johnson. It is said the Johnson girl had been keeping company with a young man who formerly courted the other girls.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Are Choosing New Inspectors

Ontario License Board Will Make Decided Reduction in Members

TORONTO, August 25. — Having picked out about fifty of the present large staff of license inspectors in the province, the Ontario License Board is now busy meeting the men personally, explaining the work to be done, the salary offered and the requirements as to residences, etc., decided upon. The board is calling in a few of the inspectors each day.

One of the requirements of the board is that the inspector named shall be prepared to give his whole time to the work. He must also be ready to move to a central point in his county in order to be more closely in touch with conditions. The board has arranged a salary list, with salaries ranging from $800 to $1,800 a year. Only a few men—those stationed in small counties where the work will be light—will receive under $1,000; the average being about $1,200. In the districts and in big counties where the inspectors would have to be continually on the go, the $1,800 will be paid. In addition to their salaries the men will be allowed their actual sworn expenses. Under the old system a certain amount was allowed for salary and another amount for expenses—a plan that did not encourage the inspector to spend much in moving around his district.

The plans of the board call for a decided reduction in the number of inspectors. At present, except in the cities, there is an inspector to a riding.

For the enforcement of the Ontario Temperance Act, there will be but one inspector to a county, except in the large cities, which need their own inspector. This means that in some counties there will be only a single inspector. The new inspectors, giving all their time to the work will, of course, be able to cover the ground better than the majority of them can do now with salaries that permit them to spend only a portion of the time "inspecting."

Dry Campbellford Man Got Drunk Here

David E. Tate, of Campbellford, was fined $2.00 in the Police Court this morning when he pleaded guilty to having been drunk in a public place yesterday.

Magistrate Dumble facetiously remarked that local option was a failure since men from a "dry" town have not been cured of their thirst. "They still remain thirsty," he said, "and come here to quench the thirst."

Ben Hobson likewise admitted a spree yesterday.

"That's nothing new for you," commented the Magistrate.

Hobson said his clothes were at the G.T.R. Station, and he wished to go to his home in Madoc.

When he was permitted to go he remarked: "Thank you, Your Worship, both of you (including Chief Thompson). There'll be local option here before I come back."

Slams Window on Neck of Man Caught Entering Her Room

BUFFALO, Aug. 25. — A novel burglar trap was sprung by Julia Cicumich of 338 Bristol street Saturday night. She saw a man trying to crawl through the window of her room shortly after midnight, and she promptly jumped up and slammed the window on his neck. She held him until two men went to the side of the house and caught him. The police of the Fillmore avenue station were notified.

The captured man gave his name as Leo Depka, 26 years old, of 800 Clinton street, and he is being held on a charge of attempted burglary.

License Inspectors For "Dry" Ontario

Appointments Are Being Made—Salaries to Average $1,200 With Expenses

With the approach of the prohibition period, arrangements are nearing completion regarding the appointment of license inspectors. It is expected that the present number will be cut in half, and that in the "dry" days probably fifty or sixty inspectors will be appointed with a larger area to cover. Salaries, it is stated, will range from $800 to $1,800. Very few will be engaged at the former figure, and it is calculated that the average salaries will work out at about $1,200. Actual expenses will be allowed in addition.

Quite a number of inspectors have appeared before the board in the last day or two. Occasion was taken to point out to the likely men the territory they should be expected to cover, the question of salary, and it was also asked if they could move to a central point in each county if required, and if they could devote full time to the duties.

INDIAN ABSENTEES FROM LAMBTON UNIT DEFY MILITARY RULE

Claim They Have London Legal Opinion That as Wards of Government They Don't Have to Fight—Dislike Camp Borden

SARNIA, Aug. 25.—Major William MacVicar, of the 149th Battalion, arrived in the city from Camp Borden, the object of his visit being to investigate the cases of over 100 absentees from the battalion away without leave, or absent beyond the time allowed.

Among the absentees are about fifty Indians, formerly from the reservation to the south of here, or from Walpole Island.

"There is no question as to our power with the others, but the Indians are giving us no little concern, as they have sought legal advice in London and have been told that, being wards of the Government, they don't have to fight," declared the major.

"This has produced a delicate situation, as these fifty who were allowed home on harvest furlough now are deciding whether or not they will return.

"I have secured the opinion of Judge Advocate General Smith at Ottawa, and he maintains that once the Indian enlists he is a soldier, bound by the same law as others, and can be brought back to his battalion if away without leave of absence or beyond the time allowed."

May Go to Privy Council.

The question in dispute involves a delicate technicality in law and before any action is taken the question will be submitted to the highest courts, or, if necessary, carried to the Privy Council of England.

In the meantime Major MacVicar will attempt to do nothing with those Indian members of the battalion who decline to return until the question of power held by the military authorities in this respect is settled.

Object to Camp Borden.

One of the Indian members of the battalion, spoken to concerning the situation, said they objected to Camp Borden, but were satisfied while in London.

"Too much dust, sand, flies and other things up there," said the brave.

"What about the rumour to the effect that Lieut.-Col. Bradley was to be reduced from command and that you were now in charge?" was asked the major.

"You may state through the press and as emphatically as you like that Lieut.-Col. Bradley is still in command of the 149th," said Major MacVicar.

SERGT. HETHERINGTON HOME FROM BELGIUM

Went Overseas With 26th Battery But Invalided by Injury Caused by Kick from a Horse

Sergt. George Hetherington, who went overseas with the 26th Battery under Major Gerald Hall, returned home on Saturday night after six months in an English hospital, to which he was confined as the result of an injury caused by a kick from a horse. His left leg is stiff yet, and is slightly shorter than the right, and it is likely that permanent disability will be experienced. Sergt. Hetherington arrived at his home on Stewart street after a rapid crossing, the trip having been made in four days and one half. He will remain here until October 9th when he must report to a medical board for further inspection, following which he will either be discharged or declared fit to return to the battery. His injury was received while the battery was in Belgium, but not long after it had gone into actual service.

French Troops Now Close To Combles

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS (Bulletin), August 25.—French troops threw forward their first lines to within a mile and a half of the important Town of Combles in furious fighting that followed the capture of Maurepas village. The town itself has been under terrific bombardment for three days by the French artillery. French infantry is pressing eastward just south of Combles to pocket the Germans in much the same manner as the British are closing in upon Thiepval.

Interesting to Men

New Fall Made-to-Order Suits Can be Bought Now Four Dollars Less Than Next Month.

The man who will need a new suit this Fall is again reminded of the phenomenal offering by the Globe Tailoring Co. of this city. It will be seen by their advertisement in another part of The Examiner that this firm are making a Four-Dollar reduction on all Suits ordered to-morrow. And, as if this clip in the price was not enough, they further agree to present every customer, on Saturday, with a new leather suit case, entirely free. The "Globe" is living up to its promises and agreements; and since removing to the corner of Brock street, is putting new energy and greater values into its business.

NEW RECORD BY WOMAN GOLFER.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Aug. 25.—Semi-finals in the play for the Women's Western Gold Championship brought together Miss Elaine Rosenthal, of Chicago, the present champion, and Mrs. F. C. Letts, Jr., of Chicago, and Miss Vera Gardiner, Glen Oak, Chicago, vs. Miss Laurie Kaiser, of Floss Moor, Chicago. Miss Kaiser set a new women's record for the Kent County Club course by rounding it in 89, and is regarded by many as having an excellent chance of reaching the final round scheduled for to-day.

AMERICAN TOWN HAS NEVER SEEN U. S. CURRENCY

Pensacola, Owned by One Man, is Financed by Company Scrip

PENSACOLA, N. C. is said to be the only town in the republic where no United States currency is used.

Pensacola is entirely owned by one man. He owns the mines, the lumber camp, the farm lands and the thirty-four miles of railroad which leads from a small junction into Pensacola. In fact, Aldridge is the owner of the whole country.

The entire business of the place is carried on with company "scrip". That is, when a man's earnings are paid him, they are given him in the form of a due bill, which is referred to as "scrip". The scrip is the same as cash and negotiable at the various stores all of which are owned by the Aldridge company.

When members of a picture play company recently arrive there they paid cash for purchases at the stores. They received their change in "scrip" and later the cashier of the company had to travel fifty miles to a small town in Tenesee to get a cheque cashed in order to pay the living expenses.

There are people born in Pensacola and living there since their birth that have never seen United States currency, and were almost afraid to accept it when the movie actors paid their bills for rooms and board.

Soda water is sold at the drug stores on Wednesday and Saturday of each week. With the exception of the movie company's mail, letters seldom arrive addressed to any of the nativ residents, and the small post office force, consisting of an aged clerk in the merchandise store, owned by the Aldridge interests, was hard put to it each day when dozens of letters arriver for the film folk.

The leading actress asked one of the residents if they ever deposited their surplus "scrip" in the bank.

"No, indeed," he replied, "we never have any surplus."

Bread boards can be bleached by washing them with lemon juice, then with cold water, and drying them in the sun.

The Wm. Collins Grocery Business, 87 Hunter Street, having changed hands, all outstanding accounts due must be paid by Sept. 15th, 1916.

Claims Body of Man Was Buried in Olean Cellar

Prisoner in Little Valley Jail Tells Sheriff Traveling Man Who Had Flashed Big Roll, Died After He Was Given Drug

Olean, August 24. — Sheig Charles Nichols yesterday gave instructions to Deputy Sheriff Ray Mallory to dig up the cellar of a building on North Union Street known as the Ross block, it having been alleged by Frank Fidello, one of his prisoners, that there was buried there the body of a man, who, he says, was a travelling salesman, and who was the victim of knockout drops.

Fidello and Leo LaCastro are being held at Little Valley, having been ordered deported after their conviction in the United States court in Buffalo. Why they were held was a mystery until the action taken by Sheriff Nicholls yesterday became known.

Fidello and La Castro are aliens, and it is said are on the reserve list of the Italian army. They refused, it was alleged, to respond to the call of their country some time ago and are said to fear deportation. Calling the sheriff into his cell, Fidello is reported to have said: "If you will secure leniency for me so that I will not have to return to the old country I will tell you of a murder that was committed in Olean," and he named the date. Fidello's story was that the travelling man exposed to view $600 in a roll and that he was drugged and taken to a room in the upper part of the building. Afterwards it was discovered that he was dead, the drug having apparently killed him. His body, Fidello alleged, was then taken into the basement and buried.

The excavating of the Ross block cellar will take some time, as it is a building 60 by 100 feet.

GERMAN WRITERS WHIMPERING OVER ALLIED SHELL FIRE

ROTTERDAM, Aug. 25. —Max Osborne in a despatch from the Somme front to the Vossische Zeitung, says: "One is hunted up and down like a wild beast. There are times when our men curse and are homesick, but in the moment of fighting, all their feelings disappear."

George Wagener, in a despatch to the Kolnische Zeitung says: "The present line held by the Germans consists only of a chain of shell holes instead of the girdle of strongly-built and fortified trenches. Immovable men crouch in these holes with no cover from the sun or rain and not the slightest protection against the shells from above.

Hostile flyers cover the position at a low height. They see the men in the holes and direct the Anglo-French fire with a deadly certainty upon them, or else they fire themselves with machine guns. Everything has to be done at night. The bringing up of reinforcements, removing the wounded and burying the dead.

When an attack begins the terrors of these places are beyond description. Like the fire of rain in Gomorrah the drumfire of the enemy pours from heavy guns. The little shelter that there is in the trenches or holes is quickly flattened out. With a thunderin great heavy shells from the gigantic mine guns wipe out everything in the neighbourhood with their explosion. At the same time a rain of shrapnel falls and poisonous gases roll forward."

First Wheat Threshing In Carman District

CARMAN, Man., Aug. 24. — The first wheat threshed of the season in this district started two days ago on McConnell and Larson's farm, two miles east of Carman. Fifty acres threshed yielded, after being cleaned at the elevator, 960 bushels No. 4 Northern wheat, weighing 57 1-2 pounds per bushel.

INTERNED HUNS SALUTED DUKE

HALIFAX, N.S., Aug. 25.—An interesting episode in the visit of the Governor-General to Halifax occurred yesterday when His Royal Highness was in the citadel. Interned there are about three hundred German prisoners, all officers, the rank and file being in the detention camp in much greater numbers at Amherst.

The Duke was escorted into the enclosure, where the prisoners are kept at the citadel, and was introduced to the officer who is looked upon as their leader.

His Royal Highness conversed for some time with this German, and passed up and down the lines, where the other prisoners could see him and be them. They raised their hats and saluted as the Governor-General passed.

Peterboro Woman Did Not Appear

Son of Mrs. John Roberts of This City Was Attacked by a Dog in Lindsay

LINDSAY, Aug. 25. — A Lindsay woman was charged with keeping a vicious dog by a Mrs. John Roberts, of Peterborough, whose little boy was bitten by a pup which he was teasing while in town. The woman from Peterborough in a moment of excitement rushed to the Chief Constable's office to lay an information, thinking that the officer would at once shoot, decapitate or chloroform the dog, but was informed that such proceedings could not be undertaken until the magistrate was interviewed. However, the case was entered as above. As Mrs. Roberts did not appear a dismissal resulted.

Hand Was Badly Cut

NORWOOD, Aug. 25.—General Rogers, youngest son of Mr. Harry Rogers, of Norwood, met with a painful accident on Monday while working at J. Finlay & Sons Co.'s factory, when he had the back of his hand badly cut and two bones broken. The injuries were dressed by Dr. Sutton.

JUDGE TELLS COUNSEL TO CUT OUT FRILLS

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 25.—Complaint was made yesterday in the ex-Ministers' trial by A. J. Andrews, defence council, of a remark by R. A. Bonnar, Crown Counsel, that "it's no wonder it's cracking, if Kelly's doing it," when Paul Schioler was being cross-examined on the aqueduct of the greater Winnipeg district.

Andrews asked the Crown to withdraw the remark or permit him to read a letter from the chief engineer on the job, giving the highest praise to Kelly's work.

Mr. Bonnar declined to withdraw the remark, claiming it was made after the defence had raised an irrelevant issue upon which the evidence couldn't be given.

Judge Prendergast described the Crown's remark as decided impropriety, one of "many things in this case not exactly as they should be," and he desired that in future all these "embellishments" should not be "entwined around evidence."

Mr. Andrews then proceeded with the cross examination of F. W. Simon.

Simon was examined in detail on old dome plans and the fourth plan on which present Government proposes to build. These present plans were produced subject to Crown's objection. Simon agreed with the counsel that any defects in the building were chargeable to the contractor at the conclusion of the work, according to specifications.

Witness was asked as to what he had been paid on the buildings. Simon said, as designing architect, he was paid $83,080 by the former Government, and he has received $30,000 from the present Government. His present arrangement was that he should receive five per cent. on the total cost of the buildings, this including one per cent. for supervision and a per cent. to apply to new contracts to be let, with what he has already received to be deducted.

Norwood Board Of Education

Miss Pauline Weir Appointed Teacher on Public School Staff— A Second Choice

A special meeting of the Board of Education was held on Monday evening for the purpose of engaging a teacher to fill the vacancy on the Public school staff caused by the resignation of Miss M. Kirkpatrick.

The members present were: Messrs. J. A. Finlay, E. C. Squire, T. Watson, H. Webster, W. H. Cuthbertson, J. O'Keeffe, D. McNaughton, C. E. Pakenham, and T. Burkell, Mr. C. E. Pakenham, Vice-Chairman, read the several applications for the position of teacher for the third class.

Moved by Mr. Squire, seconded by Mr. Watson, that Miss Pauline Weir receive the appointment.

Moved in amendment by Mr. McNaughton, seconded by Mr. Webster, that Miss E. P. Porter be first choice.

The amendment was put and defeated. The motion carried.

Moved by Mr. Burkell, seconded by Mr. Finlay, that in case Miss Weir does not accept, that Miss Porter be second choice and Miss Reid third choice.—Carried.

BROKE THE BLACKLIST.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—George Hill and Company, London merchants, were fined £25 and 10 guineas costs for trading with a Dutch firm which is on the blacklist of the British Government, comprising firms with which British subjects are not permitted to trade.

This is the first case of the kind to be brought up. In imposing the fine, the city magistrate said that a much heavier fine would be inflicted in future cases of this nature.

NORWOOD MAN HAS A BIG CROP OF "IRISH GRAPES"

NORWOGD, Aug. 25.—Mr. Thos. Burkell, of Norwood, certainly knows how to grow potatoes. This year Mr. Burkell's crop of potatoes is yielding him about one hundred bags to the acre, which is a remarkably high yield, the average for the province being only about 50 bags. Mr. Burkell has five acres planted in tubers, which he is readily selling at $2.25 per bag. He expects his total crop of potatoes to bring him over a thousand dollars.

Wives Should Stay in Canada

OTTAWA, Aug. 25.—Word has been received here from people engaged in relief work in London and elsewhere in England that a number of wives of Canadian soldiers now fighting in France are suffering distress because of lack of means of support. In a number of cases the wives of Canadian soldiers left for England without notifying the military authorities, and they as a consequence are now without their separation allowances. The wives of officers who have gone to England usually know how to look after themselves, but many of the wives of Canadian soldiers who are stranded in London are totally ignorant of what to do. The Soldiers' and Sailors' Families' Association have given aid in some cases. The military authorities here state that it is most unwise for the wives of soldiers to think of going to England unless they have private means of support.

5 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Cupuwou, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

Incinerator Deluged During Furnace Repair

Sanitary Inspector Cooper had a task beyond the ordinary on his hands this week. While the arches of the incinerator were being rebuilt he had to stack up the refuse of three days, and, when the work was completed, feed the piled up litter into the furnaces with the most rapid burning results. Thus, while the incinerator seemed to be deluged during the time the repairs were in progress, it quickly destroyed the stack of refuse and without any real difficulty in the operation. Inspector Cooper handled the situation very well and, by the way, no extra wood was required for the consumption of the material.

12-TON PLANER TAKEN FROM THE CANAL TO HUDSON BAY PORT

A fifty-foot, twelve ton dimension planer was loaded this week from the Government storehouse at the canal, and will be freighted to Halifax and there loaded on the last ship of the season for Hudson Bay. At that, it will just about nose out the cold weather along the Labrador shore and down into the bay to Port Nelson, the terminal of the new Hudson Bay railway.

This planer was built by the Wm. Hamilton Co. several years ago for use on the canal. Its special purpose is the cutting of exceptionally long timbers such as those required for canal locks, and docks, or the cutting of B. C. fir. The work of carting the big planer was carried out successfully by Wm. Lytle. It had been dismantled, but the largest single piece weighed six tons. The removal of the planer from the store house to Scott and Hogg's siding was neatly performed and without a hitch. On Sept. 10th the boat for the north leaves Halifax, and will not likely proceed far up the Gulf before encountering winter weather.

GIRLS ARE APPRECIATED

Queen Thanks Ladies of Needlework Guild.

The following correspondence has been received by the local branch of Queen Mary's Needlework Guild, demonstrating how much the gifts from Canada are appreciated by the boys at the front. The honorary secretary writes to Mrs. Forbes Angus, the local president, as follows:

"Your shipment of six cases and one bale on May 31 last has been delivered safely, and I have been commanded by Her Majesty to express her thanks for them. I am glad also to be able to send you the news of the safe arrival of the 15 cases and one bale containing the generous and varied assortment of goods forming the patriotic shower donation proffered to Her Majesty on the occasion of her birth day by the ladies of Canada.

"I am commanded by Her Majesty to assure you of her high appreciation of the loyal and patriotic impulse which moved the ladies of Canada throughout the Dominion to mark the occasion of her birthday by this valuable and useful contribution to the Q.M.N.G., and to beg you to convey, if possible, to all those who have been associated with you in this achievement, the expression of Her Majesty's cordial thanks.

"All the sweets, smokes, games, etc., are being sent out to Mesopotamia with the cases of things which have been purchased with the money forwarded to me by Mrs. Rogers from the ladies of Canada.

(Signed). "ANNIE LAWLEY."

Mrs. Robert Rogers, honorary treasurer for the Queen Mary's needlework Guild in Canada, has received an acknowledgment of the draft for £192 4d, the gift sent in money for Her Majesty's birthday, in which the Queen expresses her appreciation for such an act of generosity, and that Her Majesty has decided that she would like the money spent on comforts for the troops in Mesopotamia, where they are suffering great hardships with the discomforts of the climate, and she wishes them to be told that the money has been collected for this purpose by the women of Canada. In conclusion, the honorary secretary adds that she hopes Her Majesty's thanks will be conveyed to all the kind subscribers.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

It is a matter of months since the City Council sanctioned the placing on George street of two illuminated refuse boxes. It will soon be a matter of months since these boxes were filled to overflowing. Apparently no provision has been made for emptying them.

WILL RETURN.

City Clerk Armstrong will return this week end from a two weeks' vacation, part of which was spent in the Kawartha Lakes district. This will wind up the holiday season in that particular department.

CITY TREASURER'S OFFICE.

Miss Jessie Swinton, Deputy City Treasurer, is away on her annual vacation. City Treasurer Adams has recovered sufficiently from his recent indisposition to enable him to take an active part in the work of the department.

STREET REPAIR.

The Board of Works is preparing an ambitious programme of street repair work. This will supersede some of the larger work planned at the beginning of the year.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

London—Ex-Ald. Andrew Greenlees, a member of the legal profession, who has practised here for years, was struck by a street car and somewhat seriously injured while walking on Richmond street, near Queen's avenue, yesterday. He will recover.

AN INDUSTRIAL BY-LAW.

North Bay—The Industrial Committee of this town, of which Councillor Max Clavir is Chairman and Councillor L. W. Wilson is Secretary, succeeded in inducing the Town Council to submit a by-law to the ratepayers on September 18th to guarantee the bonds of the North Bay Hat Manufacturing Co. to the extent of $15,000, giving also a free site, exemption of taxes for ten years, and water at railway rates. The committee has several other good propositions in sight.

SOUR MILK LOSSES

Why it Pays to Buy PASTEURIZED Milk

Just sit down and connect up the excessively hot weather of this Summer with the quantity of ordinary raw milk that has gone sour with the heat, and see if it would not have paid to have been among the growing number of Pasteurized Milk users.

THE KEEPING QUALITIES OF

have been well demonstrated all this Summer. It has stood the test of the severe temperatures, and proved its Safety.

The Relative Difference in the Price of Pasteurized and Clarified Milk, as compared with ordinary raw milk, is more than made up by the sour milk losses and annoyances.

DO YOUR CHILDREN HAVE LOTS OF SOUR MILK?

The food of first importance in the sustenance of human life from infancy is PURE MILK, and the greater the purity the greater the advantage.

While Pasteurization, properly executed is an efficient and practical means of protecting the consuming public against danger from infected milk, it interferes in no way with its digestibility or strengthening properties. It retains all its important values and is free from the danger of raw milk.

MORNING, NOON AND NIGHT

It is delivered in Sterilised Sealed Bottles, superceding the former primitive method of ladling with a dipper from large cans,—hence eliminating the danger of contamination from dust, dirt, smoke and debris from the street while the cans are open.

All the danger from infected milk does not originate on the farms where there is plenty of pure air, green clover and fresh running water, but from exposure of milk cans and bottles to the impurities of the city streets.

Clarification, in like manner contributes to the cleanliness of milk, because it removes all sediment and other objectional matter, whether it came from the cow, or the cans, or the milker.

CATTLE MARKET

Cattle closed easier, at slightly lower prices for good butcher steers and heifers. Probably the feature of the week's trading was the drop in hog prices, the decline for the week amounting to 75 cents to $1. Spring lambs were easier, closing the week about one cent below last week. Sheep showed little change in price, moderate offerings being easily absorbed.

Butcher cows closed 15c to 20c below a week ago. Canners and cutters were firm.

Wheat Crop is Above The Average of the Past Thirty-four Year Period

This Year's Crop is Also Equal to That of the Average of the Last Ten Years---The Crop on Drained Land Showed Best Results---Government Report Regarding Crop Conditions in the Province up to the Middle of the Present Month.

THE SEVERE DROUGHT

The following statement regarding crop conditions in the Province up to the 15th of August has been issued by the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

FALL WHEAT—This is relatively the best cereal crop of the season, both for grain and straw. While the yield is much below that of the bumper crop of 1915, it is above the average for the thirty-four-year period, and practically equal to that of the average of the last ten years. The fields gave great promise in early spring, but the cold, wet weather following, succeeded by the unusually hot, dry days of July, influenced the crop unfavourably. There is a wide variance in the yields, which runs from 14 to 40 bushels per acre, and the quality also varies greatly; for while the bulk of the crop is of excellent grade, more shrunken grain than usual is reported as the result of the intense drouth. The crop on drained land showed best results under both wet and parching conditions. Cutting ranged from July 17th to August 7th, and the crop was got into the barn under most favourable conditions.

SPRING WHEAT—This crop is still decreasing in acreage. As in the case of all spring grains the season was too wet for satisfactory sowing, and much of the crop had to be "mudded in." The yield will be about an average, but there will be considerable small, light grain, and the straw will be short, owing to the hot July weather. Harvesting ranged from August 7th to 19th.

BARLEY—The cold and rainy spring weather was unfavourable to seeding, and the crop got a poor start. The prolonged drouth of July was also trying to the fields, forcing ripening. As a result many of the heads of grain were not filled, and the average yield will be less than usual. The straw, though clean, is not of good length. Cutting extended from July 28th to August 15th.

OATS—Sowing was more or less delayed owing to the wet spring, and many fields as a consequence received a poor start, both as to time and condition, particularly on low, undrained land. The unusually hot and dry weather prevailing later in the season hastened ripening, resulting in much of the grain being light in weight and in average yield per acre. The straw also is short, but of fair quality, owing to the dry weather prevailing during the later half of the season. Occasional mention only was made to rust or smut. Harvesting began on August 10th, but considerable of the crop still remains to be cut.

RYE—There is not a large acreage of rye grown for grain, much of it being fed green. It has stood the severe drought of the latter part of the growing season better relatively than any other of the grain crops, and will be above the average in yield.

PEAS—Formerly one of the most popular crops in the province, peas have now only a comparatively small acreage. The hot and unusually dry weather prevailing at the time of blossom affected the yield, which is below the average. There was less complaint than usual of injury from insects. Pulling is now in progress.

BEANS—Owing to the wet weather much of the crop was planted late. The long period of drouth following also affected the plants unfavourably, especially at the period of blossoming, and a comparatively light yield is expected. Harvesting will extend from the beginning of September to the middle of October.

HAY—Not for many years have such satisfactory reports been received regarding the various grass and clover crops. Bumper yields were the rule, and the weather at harvesting was almost perfect for curing, thus ensuring first-class quality. In a few cases, however, lack of labour delayed cutting until the fields were rather too mature.

CORN—The weather was so wet at the regular time of planting that much of the seeding was delayed. The unusually long period of drouth following was also trying to the plants, baking the soil and making cultivation difficult. The result is that the majority of the corn fields are more backward in growth than usual at this time of the season, and it will require most favourable weather from now on to bring the crop along to anything like average form. Ensilage corn is doing relatively better than corn for the cob.

TOBACCO—Like most of the other field crops, tobacco suffered both in area and quality from the very wet and otherwise unfavourable weather prevailing at the time of planting. The later exceedingly warm and dry period also told against the vigor of the plants, which are now considered to be very backward in growth. The uncertainty of the market also helped to prevent a full acreage.

POTATOES—The present outlook for potatoes is poor, although some correspondents say that a few good rains might redeem the situation. Owing to the rainy spring weather some of the crop had to be planted late, while a considerable portion of the earlier planting rotted in the long soaked and cold soil. The prolonged period of drouth during July was also trying to the vines. The bug was very injurious this season, owing to the dry summer and scarcity of farm help.

ROOTS—There is a very uneven showing of all classes of roots, owing to the late start many of the fields received on account of the wet spring, and the trying effects of the dry and very hot weather which has prevailed more or less since the beginning of July. While both turnip and mangels are considered to be backward in growth and general condition, a number of correspondents are of opinion that timely rains would greatly restore and push forward the root crops generally, although anything like standard yields might not be looked for.

FRUIT—All classes of orchard trees made a fine show of bloom, but frequent and heavy rains then washed off much of the pollen and the setting of fruit was more or less a disappointment. Apples will be comparatively light in yield, more espjecially the winter varieties. There has been much "dropping" during the summer, and considerable scab has been complained of. Pears have done relatively better, but will be only about half a crop. Statements regarding the yield of peaches range from poor to good; the crop will probably be about a medium. Cherries were almost a failure. The sour varieties did much better than the sweeter sorts. Grapes will be a good crop where properly looked after. Strawberries started out with promise of a great yield, but fell off with the drouth. Raspberries were more or less a failure, much of the fruit drying on the canes owing to the intense heat and drouth of July, but currants did better.

PASTURES AND LIVE STOCK—Pastures were of the best until the drouth began to tell about the latter part of July. Later on most of the fields, especially in Western Ontario, were browned by the continued drouth, and in some quarters cattle on the grass had to be helped out by hay or other extra feed. Notwithstanding this drawback, and the extremely warm temperature prevailing during the summer, live stock generally are in good condition—somewhat thin, but hearty. It is thought that there will be plenty of fodder for fall and winter supplies, notwithstanding the expected shortage of grain, straw, roots and corn ensilage, farmers counting upon splendid crop of hay to carry them through. Much, however, will depend upon the weather of the next month or two. Dairy produce has been generous in supply, and the demand for cheese, butter, cream and other lines was never stronger. There has been some shrinkage in production since the drouth, but the high prices now offering are tempting dairymen to keep up the milk supply as far as possible.

Mother Ship of the Bremen Arrives Safely at New London After Dash From Boston

The Willehad Awaits Arrival of the Bremen at New London, Conn.---Exposed to Attack During Her Voyage---Steamship Makes 140 Mile Run From East Boston to be Ready for Submarine---Part of the Run Was Outside of the Three Mile Limit---First Foreign Steamship to Pass Through the Cape Cod Canal.

WAS EXPOSED TO ATTACK

NEW LONDON, Conn., August 26.—Flying no flag when outside or near the three mile limit, and displaying the German ensign only when leaving and passing through Cape Cod Canal, the North German Lloyd steamship Willehad slipped quickly and quietly from McQuestens wharf, East Boston, at five o'clock Thursday morning and dropped anchor in lower New London harbour at eleven o'clock the same night, completing a run of 140 miles, during fifty of which she was exposed to possible attack by allied cruisers.

She will dock at the State Ocean steamship pier and there await the arrival of the super-submarine Bremen, whose thirty-two officers and crew she will house until the latter starts on her return voyage to Germany.

The Willehad is the first German steamship of the many that the beginning of the war, more than two years ago, found in or approaching American ports to leave voluntarily the friendly refuge of a harbour.

The only other movement of a German steamship was that of the North German Lloyd steamship Kronprinzessin Cecille, which was convoyed from Bar Harbour, Me., to Boston in the custody of a United States marshal by two torpedo destroyers. The Willehad also is the first foreign craft or ocean steamship to pass through the Cape Cod Canal, which was opened a few days before the beginning of the war.

STARTED IN EARLY MORNING.

It was announced that the Willehad would start for New London at five o'clock Thursday morning. At that hour lines were cast off and in tow of a tug she proceeded down Boston harbour. Boston newspapers had given her leaving time as eleven o'clock. Almost before anyone along the waterfront was aware of it, she had passed through the Narrows and was rounding Minots Light into Massachusetts Bay.

Off the Brant Rock wireless station, thirty miles from her pier, she was met by a launch of the Boston, Cape Cod and New York Canal Company. The Willehad then was four miles from shore, but off Gurnet Light, at the entrance to Plymouth harbour, she went inside the three-mile limit.

Between Gurnet Light and Manomet Point the sea became so rough from a northeastern gale which suddenly sprang up that the reporters were transferred to the tug Pallas, of the Boston, Cape Cod and New York Canal Company, and in that they accompanied the Willehad to Sandwich, the eastern terminus of the canal.

UNFOUNDED FEARS.

Off Manomet Point lies Mary Ann's Rock, a dangerous reef, and a mile to the east is Mary Ann's buoy, outside of which steamships are warned to go. But the Willehad sighted a suspicious looking craft heading toward her, and she chose a course between the buoy and the rock. Off Centre Hill Point she turned sharply and ran swiftly toward the shore. After proceeding half a mile the Willehad made out the craft to be the yacht Nirvana, which is owned by W. W. Aldrich, of Providence, R.I. She thereupon squared away and shaped her course straight for the canal, venturing five miles from shore.

The action of the Willehad's pilot in running for the shore was in obedience to orders that if approached by hostile craft she should be beached. A British cruiser had been reported off Cape Cod, and Captain Gachens, of the Willehad, had been admonished to take no chances. She made the entire trip with both anchors at the bow, ready to be cast off.

DELAY AT THE CANAL.

The Willehad arrived at the entrance to the canal at twenty minutes to nine o'clock. There Captain E. R. Geer, superintendent of the Boston, Cape Cod and New York Canal Company, went on board to pilot her through the canal. He told Captain Gachens that as the tide was running west in the canal he must wait two hours for slack water. Captain Gachens demurred vigorously at the delay, declaring it might give enemy ships time to meet the Willehad between Buzzards Bay and Point Judith.

But Captain Geer was insistent, and it was nearly noon when the Willehad began her trip through the eight miles of canal, which has an average width of only ninety feet and a depth at mean low water of twenty-five feet.

As the Willehad, which is 401 feet long, and has a beam of forty-six feet and a draught of sixteen feet, proceeded slowly through the canal, convoyed by the tugs John C. Stuart and Hazelton, of the Canal Company, she was cheered by thousands, whom the delay had enabled to assemble on both banks.

French Troops Discard 120 Tons of Whiskers

PARIS, August 26.—The beard of the French soldier has been doomed, in an army order which directs that the men at the front must shave all except moustaches. The order has been the signal for the outburst of a humourous and ironic discussion in the trench newspapers, to which some of the most famous French artist, photographers and literary men have contributed.

Jean Richepin, the dramatist, writing in The Fuse, says:—"The beard has gone, but what is the difference to us? In place of it, it is courage that grows. Let the beard fall and French courage grow."

Edmund Rostand celebrates the beard in verse as a symbol of "all the beauty of all of France, a soul, a jewel, a torch, a prod."

Maurice Barrese Gravelt regrets the board, which he says was "a heritage of long ago in which the dead lived again and which bound us mysteriously to the soil."

Gen. Pierre Cherfils, reasoning technically, excuses the measure because "the beard of a trooper weighs on an average 60 grammes. With two million men at the front this brings the aggregate weight to 120 tons. It was natural that the staff should think of relieving the army of this considerable and useless weight. It was reasonable in creating heavy material to make in compensation light infantry."

Two More German Prisoners Escape From Fort Henry

KINGSTON, Aug. 24.—Two more German prisoners made their escape from Fort Henry yesterday afternoon.

Yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock a bunch of 'first-class' prisoners were permitted to enjoy the sunshine on the slope of the hill to the east of the fort fronting Deadman's Bay. They had been out all afternoon under charge of the usual number of sentries. Two of the prisoners managed to slip away and evidently found their way down to the tower fronting Cedar Island, where they managed to hide, probably for some time. The men were not missed until the return of the prisoners to the Fort and the roll called, when the fort authorities realised that two of the number were missing. An alarm was given at once, and all the available force at the fort was put out in search of the missing prisoners, of whom no trace could be found anywhere.

During the night the parties continued the search and many shots were fired which were plainly heard by the sentries at Barriefield camp. Two fast motor boats wre secured, and the whole water area down to the head of St. John's Island was beaten, but without result. A strong party was out this morning under the command of Major Campbell searching every inch of ground between the fort and camp and all points east and south of the Cataraqui river.

BOTH BIG MEN.

The two prisoners who escaped are described as two of the most powerfully built men in the camp, one being six feet two and one-half inches, and the other fully six feet in height. Both are dark complexioned and have their heads closely shaven. They both speak good English but with a very pronounced foreign accent. Every effort is being continued to capture the prisoners and return them to the fort, but there is strong feeling in Barriefield camp at least, that these escapes on the part of German prisoners are well planned, and are carried out with the aid of confederates. Officers are of the opinion that men with German names, German appearance, and German blood should not be allowed to come near the grounds lying between the fort and the camp, or to be permitted to enter the camp at any time, and a prominent officer suggested to The Standard this morning that if the prisoners are to be exercised along the water front a fast water patrol should be maintained in the vicinity of the fort.

The whole of Barriefield Camp is indignant at the extraordinary privileges accorded to the prisoners and demand that Col. Otter's senseless policy be terminated. It is stated that had the Fort authorities turned an alarm into Barriefield camp last night that a force of three thousand men would have been promptly despatched on the trail of the escaped prisoners.

In spite of the lesson given three months ago when three prisoners made their escape, it is stated that General Otter has persisted in his policy of permitting prisoners to be exercised and to enjoy privileges outside the Fort.

It is felt on all sides that there must be a change made in the regulations at the various internment camps.

"I think it my duty to tell you what "Fruit-a-tives" has done for me. Three years ago, I began to feel run-down and tired, and suffered very much from Liver and Kidney Trouble. Having read of "Fruit-a-tives", I thought I would try them. The result was surprising. During the 3½ years past, I have taken them regularly and would not change for anything. I have not had an hour's sickness since I commenced using "Fruit-a-tives", and I know now what I haven't known for a good many years—that is, the blessing of a healthy body and clear thinking brain".

GOLDEN JUBILEE OF MONS. MURRAY

COBOURG, Aug. 24. — Yesterday was a red letter day in the history of St. Michael's parish in this town, for it was the occasion of the golden jubilee of Richt Rev. Monsignor Murray. During 37 years he has devotedly ministered to the needs of his people here, among whom h is both popular and well-beloved. Bishop O'Brien of Peterborough and the clergy of the diocese, with others from Kingston, Toronto and other places, were present. Solemn High Mass was celebrated at 9 o'clock by Monsignor Murray, assisted by Dean Murray of Brockville, a brother, as deacon, and Rev. Father Scanlon of Grafton, as sub-deacon, Rev. Father McCauley, Peterborough, was master of ceremonies.

On behalf of St. Michael's parish J. B. McColl read an address, and Jas. R. O'Neill and Jas. Bulger presented Rev. Mons. Murray with a purse of gold.

Right Rev. Monsignor Casey, V.G., of Lindsay, read an address on behalf of the clergy of the Diocese of Peterborough, and presented a purse of gold.

To all of these Monsignor Murray made a happy reply.

A banquet was tendered the visiting clergy and invited guests, at which covers were laid for over a hundred. Mr. Jas. Bulger was General Chairman of Committees, Councillor John E. Quinn was Secretary, and Mr. W. J. Maher was chairman of the Reception Committee. Addresses terborough; Judge E. C. S. Huycke, Peterborough; Lieut.-Col. N. F. MacNachtan, C.V.O.; C. A. Munson, M. P.; Sam Clarke, M.P.P., Mayor Duncan, F. M. Field, .KC., Mr. McCook, Mr. W. F. Kerr, County Crown Attorney; J. D. Hayden, Cobourg; Mr. Semple, Recorder, of Montreal, and W. H. Taylor of Cleveland.

A cablegram of congratulations was received from Pope Benedict, bestowing the Apostolic blessing upon the jubilarian; also telegrams and messages from former parishioners, and personal friends.

STINGY.

A servant girl was looking for a situation in the outskirts of Edinburgh. She had heard that the mistress was a rather strict disciplinarian, and was doubtful about applying.

Upon entering the gate she saw an old man working in the garden and, plucking up courage, told him her fears and asked him for his advice.

He advised her to see the lady, saying, "I've been with her for a long time, an' we get on verra well."

In a short time the girl emerged from the house, smiling.

"I like her looks," said she, "an I'm engaged. Come an' I'll stan' ye a dram."

"Eh, ma lassie, I wunna," replied the old man; "the mistress micht smell it, an' she wad be angry."

However, the old man resisted the temptation.

Having been in the house for some days the girl was wondering why she had not seen her old friend the gardener again; but, to her surprise, one afternoon she saw him coming downstairs in evening dress.

Grasping a fellow servant by the arm, she gasped: "Who's the mon?"

"Oh," replied Mary, reassuringly, "that's the maister!"

ALLIES' STRENGTH NOW FULLY DOUBLE THAT OF GERMANY

PARIS, Aug. 25.—The Temps estimates that the Allies' superiority over the Germans in men and resources now is fully three to one.

ADMIRAL YAMA'S VIEW.

PARIS, Aug. 25.—Admiral Aki Yama, who as aid to Admiral Togo planned the battle of Tsushima, is on the way to New York after visiting all of the Allied countries.

"I am thoroughly convinced that the Allies are in two-fold superiority to the Germans," said the Admiral before sailing. "To be perfectly truthful, the Germans are a nation much stronger than we ever imagined. What they have done in the last two years will remain a marvellous monument in the history of the world.

"But what has made them so strong is their organisation and preparation in military matters. Their advantage no longer exists. The Allies, by practice and experience, have accomplished all the Germans had perfected.

"All that remains to Germany to day is her national unity, which is the fundamental element of her strength. But I have come to wonder how long such unity can withstand the strain of the dangers which threaten. German unity is artificial rather than natural. Their discipline lacks elasticity. The development of the war is entirely favorable to the Allies."

British Hotels Now Importing American Beer

LONDON, Aug. 24.—War brings on a great many changes, but there is probably none more curious than the importation of American beer.

Before the war what beer was not produced in England came from Germany. Direct importation, of course, had to be dropped with the beginning of war and England's imported brew was brought from Holland, Sweden, and Denmark.

SUPPLY OF GERMAN BREW?

It has been strongly suspected that this beer is really brewed in Germany shipped to Holland or Scandinavian, and there bottled with pretty Dutch or Scandinavian labels, but of that there is no proof.

But to bring beer from New York is something new. It is almost as great a change as that which has made the four passenger boats of the American line, all well over voting age, the greyhounds of the Atlantic.

CATER TO AMERICANS

New York beer is not being brought over in great quantities, but in some of the larger hotels where Americans stop it is to be had. As a further concession to Americans the beer is served ice cold, a difficult thing over here where ice is sold rather by the ounce than the pound.

English beer and ale do not appeal to the American taste so much as American or German beer and sharp hotelkeepers are trying even in wartime, to please their American visitors.

PARALYZED LIMBS.

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Hemsberger, 30 Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work and now feel better than I did for twenty years."

To Keep Blouses Neat.

Stretch tapes from one end of the closet to the other, front and back, just the width of the shirtwaist from underarm seam to underarm seam. Fasten the waist together in front and pin the waists to the tapes at the bottoms of the underarm seams. The outfit needs only a ball of tape and a paper of pins and is specially convenient where closet room and trunk room are at a premium.

PATRIOTISM

Patriotism, like Charity, should begin at home. The man who is willing at any time to protect his country against foreign foes should be willing AT ALL TIMES to protect his Family against such common foes as Poverty, Privation and Suffering.

A Life Insurance Company cannot take the place of a Husband.

BUT---

It can preserve the family from want.
It can lighten their load of care.
It can build a barrier against adversity.
It can strengthen the foundation of the home.
It can certify to a man's affectionate regard for his family.
It can place his widow beyond the need of carrying for support.
It can add to a man's years by freeing him from anxiety.
It can enhance the respect and esteem of the public and of his wife and children for him.

MISSING LIEUT. IVES TURNS UP IN BERLIN

New York, August 22.—Ex-Lieut. Walter E. Ives, of 480 Park Avenue, formerly a member of the Royal Prussian Thirteenth Dragoons, and since the war began, a writer on German strategy, disappeared from this city about two months ago. His wife received a wireless message via Sayville a few days ago announcing that he was in Berlin.

Mrs. Ives, who was Miss Dorothy Redfield of this city, said yesterday that she did not know how her husband had made his way to Berlin, and that she was unwilling to say whether he would join the army, although she did not expect him to get back to this country before the end of the war.

"I took pains," she said, "to learn nothing about his plans for getting back to Germany. I wanted to be able to answer all questions about it by saying that I did not know, and I did not want to be in a position where I might let anything slip by accident. All that I know was contained in his brief message that he had arrived safely in Berlin."

Lieutenant Ives spoke English with the very slightest trace of an accent, but he had reddish hair and features characteristically German which he probably had to disguise if he had to pass the inspection of any British naval officers. Shipping men would not believe yesterday that a man as well known as he could reach Europe on a passenger steamer which ran through the British patrols. The most plausible theory that was advanced was that he had found work on one of the Dutch or Scandinavian steamers.

Lieut. Ives wrote a series of articles on the military situation. The writer admitted his pro-German bias, but won a good deal of attention by being about the only German war critic in this country who admitted that the Germans had been defeated at the Marne. He predicted the invasion of Russia, which put an end to the Russian invasion of the Carpathians last spring, and predicted that it would be followed by the German invasion into Serbia, but he was wrong later in forecasting that the German offensive of this year would be against Russia rather than against Verdun.

Two letters from Lieut. Ives, in which he said that he was doing all that he could for the German cause in writing letters were taken from the baggage of Capt. Franz von Papen, the dismissed military attache, at Falmouth, on his return to Germany. Lieut. Ives had told many of his near friends here that he wanted to join the German army, and that he would attempt to return if he could find a means which gave any promise of success.

Lieut. Ives was born in Germany, the son of an American father and a German mother. He had taken out his first naturalisation papers in this country.

It is absurdly easy to convince a man that he is smarter than you are.

Trouble is the most practical teacher in the school of experience.

Some women seem to be ashamed to eat real food in a public dining place.

BRAKES GAVE WAY AND OCCUPANTS ARE ROLLED DOWN HILL

ACCIDENT NEAR LINDSAY

OWEN SOUND, Aug. 25.—Mrs. Wm. Sims, wife of Ald. Sims, of Owen Sound, was seriously injured in an automobile accident Wednesday afternoon in the vicinity of Lindsay as she and party were returning from a holiday trip. Mr. Sims, Mrs. Sims and their young son were accompanying Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Hopper, of Fourth Avenue East, on the trip.

They were coming down a hill, when the brakes on the car broke, and before Mr. Hopper, who was driving, could stop it, the car rolled over the embankment.

The occupants were all thrown out, but fortunately none was seriously hurt, except Mrs. Sims.

Both her arms were broken, and she was otherwise injured so seriously that for a time it was thought her injuries would prove fatal. She is in the Lindsay Hospital, and it is thought she is out of danger.

Strength Will Return To Weak People Using This Treatment

You are discouraged.

You feel old and worn.

You are sick, but not aware of the fact.

You can drag yourself around—but work is impossible.

With your stomach crying out for assistance and the nerves all on edge why not try Ferrozone?—it will surely do you good.

When you feel despondent, Ferrozone cheers you up.

When langour and oppression weigh you down, Ferrozone braces you up.

For bounding health, good looks, good spirits, nothing equals Ferrozone; makes the weak strong and the sick well. Good for men, women and children; try Ferrozone, it can work wonders, as it did for Mrs. Mary Melong, of Harbor Bouche, N.S., who writes:

"Ferrozone built me up.

"Before using it I scarcely knew what good health meant. "I was just as miserable and weak as any woman could be.

Tired from morning to night, bothered by trifles, unceasingly nervous.

"The first box of Ferrozone improved my blood, gave me apeptite. In a short time I was like a new person. Now I rejoice in abundant good health."

Try Ferrozone. It will make an unexpected improvement in your looks, your feeling, your health.

Whether anaemic, nervous or suffering from secret disorders,—if you want cure, use Ferrozone. Price 50c. per box, or six boxes for $2.50, at all dealers or direct from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

ELOPER FINED $100 AND WITH GIRL DEPORTED

She Admitted Wrong — Was Let Go on Suspended Sentence.

WINDSOR, Aug. 25.—Deserting his wife and four children in Pleasanton, Ohio, to live in Canada with Miss Mary Williams, eighteen years old, whom he says he loves more than his wife, Cleve Higdon, thirty-one years old, and the girl were arrested at the Windsor ferry dock by immigration officers yesterday.

Both man and girl declared they were married, and were on their way to Alberta to take up a homestead. Later Higdon confessed to the elopement. He said he had known Miss Williams about two years. Together they left Pleasanton on August 20. Later Higdon was charged in the Police Court with bringing a woman into Canada for immoral purpoees. He was fined $100 and costs or sixty days in jail. Miss Williams, who admitted she had done wrong, was permitted to go on suspended sentence with a warning. Both were deported.

Operations Failed to Cure Kidney Disease

Mr. John E. Pumfrey, Farmer, Viceroy, Sask., was twice operated on in an English hospital for kidney disease. Urinary troubles grew worse and caused excruciating pain. He now states positively that he has been cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and is enjoying excellent health.

MAY BE A TOOL IN CLEVER PLOT

Workman Arrested at Walkerville Bridge Works.

Said to Have Wanted Job in Varnish Dept.—Big New York Explosion Attributed to Chemical Introduced Into Varnish in Shells.

WALKERVILLE, Aug. 25.— Startling revelations which may lead to the solution of the baffling mystery of the great explosion at Black Tom Island, in New York Harbour about a month ago, by which millions of dollars' worth of allied munitions were destroyed, are probable as the result of the arrest of a workman at the Canadian Bridge Works Company here last night.

The man is suspected of being a tool in a widespread and clever plan to blow up allied munitions plants all over the United States and Canada by a most ingenious arrangement.

Before the nose and cap of the great shell manufactured for the allies are fitted, a solution of varnish is run through a centre bore. It is claimed by those responsible for the arrest of the workman that he was employed to introduce into the varnish a chemical solution designed to cause a premature explosion after a limited period. It was such a solution, it is now said, introduced by treachery into some of the shells at Black Tom Island that caused the great catastrophe that almost blew away the lower tip of Manhattan Island.

The workman arrested gave his name as P. Pierlich, and claims to be an Austrian by birth. He has denied all knowledge of any plot.

REVALUING CERTIFICATES OF A.O.U.W. POLICY-HOLDERS

By the costly process of revaluation of certificates of policyholders in the Ancient Order of United Workmen, resulting in a material reduction, the organization is now placing itself upon a solid financial basis. The revaluation, which was under the direction of Prof. McKenzie, mathematician of the University of Toronto, was completed last month, and the notices are now being sent out to each policyholder in the order.

The action taken, which is declared to be the result of insufficiency in fees and assessments during the early days of the order, follows the decision at the meeting of the Grand Lodge in March last, when it was decided to mend conditions by placing al certificates on an actuarial basis. This decision was legalized by a special act of the Ontario Legislature in April.

During the past thirty-six years the order has paid out over $21,000,000 to the families of 11,000 deceased members. This heavy drain had not been provided for in the nominal fees and assessments of the order at the time of its inception. The Grand Lodge at its last meeting analyzed the position, realizing that unless some action were taken the order would use up its reserve and have to liquidate. It consequently decided upon the present plan as an effective method of restoring the organization to a solid and safe financial basis.

Reports War Has Lessened Insanity

Dr. Graham, an Irish Alienist, Finds Nerve Disorders Helped by This "Great Tonic."—Life Seen in New Aspect

London, August 24.—An interesting sidelight on President Wilson's remark about the world going mad, is given in the annual report fo Dr. William Graham of Belfast, one of the most highly reputed Irish alienists. Dr. Graham presents a remarkable picture of the tonic value of war. He says:

"It has become commonplace since August, 1914, to say the world is growing mad and there is a widespread popular notion that the distress and agony of a conflict so terrible as the present one must end in a profound psychic disturbance and alienation. Yet the fact is indisputable that insanity, like crime, has lessened during the period of the war."

So far as the future is concerned, Dr. Graham is equally encouraging. He says:

"The problem of the probable influence of war upon the mental life fo a nation and upon insanity is not an isolated one. It is implicated in the general economic, sociological and physical state of the community at a given time. The present war will have a powerful bearing on these factors and so will deeply affect the mental health. The need of our time is the mobilisation of all forces that make for betterment, humanitarian, ethical, social and religious, to help the nation to make permanent the lessons in loss and sorrow.

"There are solid grounds for the hope that, especially though not exclusively among women, we shall find a great diminution in those neurotic disorders that form a part of the mental abnormality of thousands of men who have gone or are preparing to go to the front, who have all their life been subject to the bondage of neurasthenic weakness and incapacity or of psychasthenic fears or hypochondriac fancies. They have never known what it is to live, but at the country's call they have flung from off them the spell of ancient inhibitions and long-established impracticalities and have gone forth to face wounds and death. Only when summoned to possible surrender of life, have they learned how wonderful life really is. The physical regime under which these men are compelled to live can have nothing but the best effect on those subject to its discipline.

"Especially significant is the change coming over the lives of women of the middle classes. These sheltered daughters of the merchant of professional man, victims of mid-Victorian traditions of gentility, are now falling into line with their sisters of the upper and the humbler social ranks, and are discovering that life is something greater than the latest novel from Mudie's, or a game of tennis, or even the tepid gossip of the church sewing meeting. Idleness and ennui have lost their hold. Healthy and unselfish activity is now the prevailing fashion among war-enfranchised women. It has set them free from the benumbing conventionalities that threatened to stifle their psychic energy and so far it has contributed to the soundness of mind and nerve among the mighty sociological forces which the present world conflict set in motion.

"Not the least will be the new value set upon all sorts of good works, and the new dignity which will crown the worker with the ever widening circle of women's interests. A new barrier against mental disorder has been erected. War is war. It is the destruction of culture, art, education, the finest fruits of humanity, but the human mind has a strange power of wringing out of the worst evils some great and far-reaching good."

BABY'S GREAT DANGER DURING HOT WEATHER

More little ones die during the hot weather than at any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera infantum and stomach troubles come without warning, and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in homes where there are young children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will cure the baby. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

LOST CONTROL OF CAR; FOUR WERE DROWNED

All Occupants of Automobile But Driver Perished in Nova Scotia River.

DIGBY, N.S., Aug. 25.—Four were drowned at Metighan River, forty miles west of here, late Wednesday night when an automobile ran amuck on the bridge and plunged with its occupants into the water. Names of the dead: Mr. and Mrs. Leo Amiro, both of Saulnierville; Mary Lombard, 25, of Metigan River, and Monique Comeau, 20, Saulnierville.

Frank Saulnier, driver of the car, managed to escape, though badly injured. He says he lost control of the car while on the bridge. All the bodies were recovered.

Fifty Wounds Did Not Kill This Soldier

Marvels of Modern Surgery Have Done Miracles for Wounded

A cat with its proverbial nine lives, could hardly be expected to recover from fifty one wounds simultaneously, but Lance-Corporal Riley, who is now a patient at the Queen Mary hospital, Southend, can lay claim to this astonishing record. He is as hale and hearty and as cheerful a patient as one could wish to find.

The modern explosive missiles and the terrible rain of bullets from the machine guns result in wounds of which the old time army doctor could not have dreamed; but though it is by no means uncommon to find cases nowadays where a man has received a dozen wounds, Lance Corporal Riley with his fifty one, is believed to have established a record.

Riley was picked up at St. Eloi apparently dead, with his left leg and side spattered with shell and bullet wounds. To add to the complications of his terrible wounds there followed indications of incipient tetantus, the dreaded "lockjaw"; but the marvels of modern surgery have not merely saved his life, but it is hoped, will eventually result in his complete recovery.

OTHER REMARKABLE RECOVERIES.

Another remarkable instance of the efficacy of the Army Medical Service is the case of Sergt. J. Leaver, of the Rus. He sustained wounds which practically shattered his left thighbone and hip, and for some time his life was in danger, while the loss of his leg was considered certain. When brought to the hospital Leaver was in so serious a condition that he could not even be turned over to admit of his wounds being dressed, but the hospital staff was equal to the occasion.

A mattress specially constructed in sections was placed on his bed, and his injuries were dressed from underneath, the portion of the mattress adjacent to each wound being removed to enable this to be done. Sergt. Leaver is now well on the way to recovery and it is believed that the only permanent result of his wounds will be a slight limp.

An extraordinary case of recovery from what would appear to be fatal injuries to the head is that of Private G. H. Joynson, of the North Staa, who was struck by a bullet, which practically penetrated the brain from the forehead. For a long time after reaching the hospital Joynson lay in a comatose condition and when he did recover consciousness it was found that he had lost his memory, and his speech, besides being paralysed down the left side.

AN AMAZING ESCAPE.

An amazing escape from death befell Lance-Sergeant Charles Jones, a Liverpool man, who is in the hospital suffering from wounds to his right thigh by a bullet at Albert at the beginning of the "big push" in the first attack on Contalmaison. In its passage the bullet destroyed the 'lug' or safety pin, of one or two grenades which he carried in his tunic pocket, with the result that it exploded a second or so after he fell. The amazing thing is that the force of the explosion went outwards only, and though others in the vicinity were struck, Jones' thigh was merly scarred and burned. Still more astonishing is the fact that the second bomb did not explode at all, thanks to the safety pin.

"I felt as if a shell had exploded," Sergeant Jones told me, "and you can imagine my surprise to find myself practically uninjured. The explosion blew away half of my tunic, and the other clothes that I was wearing, even the field dressing with which I could have patched up my wounds."

A young man who has theatrical aspirations loves to boast of his connection with the stage business. In company with some travelling performers in the lounge of a hotel not long since the young men carelessly observed:

But the wind was knocked out of his sails when one of the actors asked him:—"Who brought it back?"

All Because of a "Touchy" CORN

BUT you can wear them, Madam—and now. Simply place on that corn a little Blue-jay plaster, and never again will you feel it. In two days there will be no corn. It will disappear for good. Millions of women know that. They don't pare corns. They don't use old-time methods. And they don't suffer. When a corn appears they end it. We are urging you to join them. Corns are needless since Blue-jay was invented. So they are absurd. You can prove in one minute that Blue-jay stops corn aches. You can prove in two days that it ends them forever.

Care Of Blankets

Here is a satisfactory way of washing blankets: Slice half a cake of washing soap into two quarts of water. Set on the stove and stir until dissolved, add cold water in a large tub. To this soapy water, add four tablespoons of powdered borax. Soak the blankets in this overnight. Then wash them in this water, rinse them twice in cold water, wring, and hang on the line. This recipe will wash four blankets. Be sure and use only cold water and they will come out as soft and beautiful as new. A teaspoonful of glycerine, added to the rinsing water, will improve them.

THE HOME CIRCLE COLUMN

Pleasant Evening Reveries—A Column Dedicated to Tired Mothers as They Join the Home Circle at Evening Tide

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

A woman may do her level best to make life and home happy for her husband and children but if she is treated as a slave and only given her board and clothing in payment for her services as mother, wife, cook, laundress, nurse girl, chambermaid and seamstress, is it any wonder that little or no happiness exists in that home? If a mother spoils her son by pampering and waiting on him all the days of his childhood and boyhood, and makes him think that a man should always be waited on by a woman of his household, is it strange that he expects a wife to do the same, and that in all likelihood, she either wears out in a few years from such service or else becomes bitter or disappointed. We are often told that in every true and ideal marriage both husband and wife must learn to bear and forbear. In every home where happiness exists there must be perfect trust, confidence and love between husband and wife. There are two kinds of sunshine in the world, and both quite necessary—the sun which is caused by the sun's shining out doors, and the other by shining in our hearts. It is the loving deeds, the cheery hopeful words, and the kindly thoughtfulness that each member of the family shows towards the others that makes an ideal, happy home—a perfect heaven on earth.

* * *

The best way to get along in this world is to take things easy. If you are disappointed, laugh it off and resolve to enjoy yourself in spite of an occasional streak of hard luck. Hard luck soon tires of pursuing a jolly disposition.

* * *

Look on the funny side of your annoyances.

* * *

We may not realise perchance what home means to us until seas and mountains separate us from the loved ones—perchance not until sickness and misfortune come—perchance not until the Dreaded Shadow falls upon the threshold and the Raven croaks above the bust of Pallas. But when some tie is snapped and some link is broken and some chair is vacant at the fireside then we realize that the cords which bind us to the homestead are knotted in the bosom's core and centre—then we realize that the poet sang for us and sang for all the world when he sang beside the River Thames:

"Mid pleasures and palaces tho' I may roam,

* * *

The parlor as a parlor will soon be a relic of the past. The very name seems to suggest stiffness and lack of comfort. The new homes will have the best room, the one in which the whole family gathers, a warm, sunny place, a home room in its truest sense. The next generation will not waste space on parlors. Perhaps a little library, for privacy, will also be indispensable to many. This cheery room of the future will hold the piano, the general books, the pictures, work baskets and everything that serves to make home a heaven of rest for loyal hearts. Speed the day.

* * *

Our prisons are rapidly being filled by those who make the mistake of beginning life at the top of the ladder.

* * *

The spirit of order must reign in a house before the children can acquire it.

* * *

Little arms encircling the neck will make the heart light, over which no diamonds sparkle. All the grand pictures and splendid works of art one can possess will never adorn a room as do the smiling faces of those dearest to us. The things that may be bought are pleasant to have, nor is wealth to be despised; but never pity the poor man who has the wealth that gold cannot buy, nor the woman whose jewels are those of which Cornelia was so proud—good and obedient sons.

* * *

Whoever takes a little child into his love may have a very roomy heart, but that child will fill it out. The children keep us from growing old and cold; they cling to our garments with their little hands and impede our progress of petrification; they win us back with their pleading eyes, from cruel care; they never encumber us at all. A poor old couple with no one to love them is a most pitiful picture; but a hovel, with a small face to fill a broken pane here and there, is robbed of its desolateness.

* * *

You can get into the habit of living peacefully and happily, and that habit is quite as difficult to break as any habit we know of. Let there be no long poutings; let there be no long and careless indifferent fits. If little storms arise—and they will arise, let them be brief. Dont' let us sleep over it, and wake up the next morning and cudgel our brains to remember who nagged last. This kind of thing is mean, it is ungenerous and it is silly.

* * *

What are those whom we meet in society to us as compared to our own home circle? Why do we take pains to be polite and agreeable to them and neglect those who have the strongest claim upon us? It all comes about because we have got into the wrong way of thipking. We have put the home in the background, when it should occupy the foremost place in our thoughts.

GOOD SHORT STORIES.

Harry and James, brothers, were in their playroom for a little recreation after supper. Harry hit James with a stick. An argument followed, and in the midst of it the nurse happened in with the news that it was time for them to retire. James was put to bed first. The nurse said:

"You must forgive your brother before you go to bed. You might die in the night."

After a few minutes elapsed, James replied:

"Well, I'll forgive him to-night, but if I don't die he'd better look out in the morning."

It is not the number of babies born that counts, but the net result in surviving children.—Mr. Havelock Ellis.

Vacation Fashions In and About New York

Sports and Other Costumes Seen at the Country Clubs—What Is New in Sports and Semi-Dress Hats

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—Between the rainy weather and the man-eating sharks that have been hovering around the shores of the beach resorts near New York, sport enthusiasts have not been having such a comfortable time of it; yet, in spite of these conditions, it is amazing to see the number of sports costumes about. They are literally here, there and everywhere. Our young pleasure-seekers, bent on making the most of vacation time, believe in preparedness, so off they go, bound for the beaches or for the tennis courts and golf links of the country clubs with racquets under their arms and golf bags thrown across their shoulders. There is always a chance for a game between the drops!

A striking model adopted by the younger set is reproduced here. It is of white and blue linen, the waist and upper part of the skirt being of white linen and the sailor collar, cuffs and lower part of the skirt of blue. Very large pockets are placed on either side. The larger the pockets the more up-to-date the dress, nowadays. This dress, like many of the present models, hangs from the shoulders, and is therefore ideal for sports. Another dress, not shown here, was in Russian styly. It was of rose-coloured silk jersey with black collar, cuffs, and belt, and buttoned all the way down the front with small black buttons. The waist had box plaits in the front and back stitched as far as the waistline and left free below it to give more fullness to the lower part.

THE POPULAR HATS.

Any number of white and coloured felt hats in both small and large shapes are worn at present. The trimming is either a ribbon band, plain or plaited, or fruit or flowers cut out of silk or velvet and placed against the crown or on the brim. White hats of silk or satin with a flange of chiffon around the brim are also considered very smart. Some are trimmed with a large bow of white satin directly in front.

The mid-season hats used for other occasions than sports are in large sailor shapes, also in small and medium sizes. White satin crowns with black velvet brims are highly favored, as well as the all-black and all-white hats. Sometimes the order is reversed and the crown is made of black velevt with the brim of white satin or straw. The trimming used on this type of hat is generally a wing fancy or ribbon arranged in some attractive manner. Color is introduced in some of the large black hats for semi-dress wear, especially in those for the younger girls.

CHOICE RECIPES

GOOD SMELLING SALTS

Mix together one gill of liquid ammonia, one-quarter of a dracham each of English oil of lavender and rosemary and eight drops each of oil of bergamot and cloves. Fill a bottle that has a glass stoper with small pieces of sponge and pour in as much of the liquid as the sponge bits will absorb.

APPLE-LEMON PIE.

Mix together 2 cupfuls chopped apples, 1-2 cupful cracker crumbs, grated rind and juice of 2 lemons, 2 beaten eggs, 2 tablespoonfuls melted butter and 1 3-4 cupfuls sugar. This makes filling for two small pies. Bake slowly for half an hour.

Guard Baby's Health

Especially During Summer Months

The health, growth and even the life of the bottle-fed Baby depend on his food. If it cannot actually be mother's milk, it should duplicate it in composition and in germ-free purity.

Cow's milk, particularly in hot weather, is seldom free from dirt and harmful germs and so is usually dangerous to Baby's delicate constitution.

In happy contrast, the 'Allenburys' Foods provide a progressive dietary that is absolutely safe. The Milk Foods, Nos. 1 and 2, are prepared from clean, fresh cow's milk, modified to the composition of mother's milk, and entirely free from germs. The 'Allenburys' Malted Food No. 3, is equally pure and safe, and suited to babies from 6 months old upward. With

SPOON BREAD

Scald 2 cupfuls cornmeal with hot water, to the consistency of mush; add 2 teaspoonfuls salt and 1 1-2 tablespoonfuls butter. Cool and beat in two whipped eggs. Beat into the mixture a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in 1 1-2 cupfuls buttermilk. Bake in a buttered pan about 40 minutes.

CREAM OF VEGETABLE SOUP

Mince 1 small potato, 1 carrot, 6 stalks celery, 2 sprigs parsley, 1 small onion, 2 tomatoes; cook with 5 cupfuls stock, 1 tablespoonful rice and 1 tablespoonful sugar. Season: add a pinch of soda and 1 1-2 tablespoonfuls flour creamed with 1 1-2 tablespoonfuls butter. Before serving add 1-2 cup cream.

PEPPERS FILLED WITH CHEESE

Six medium-sized bell peppers, 1 1-4 cupfuls cream cheese, 6 eggs, 1 teaspoonful onion-juice, red peppers, rolled crackers. If the cheese is hard, it should be but grated; otherwise put it through a potato-ricer. Beat the eggs very light and add to the cheese together with the seasoning. Thicken with the cracker-dust, fill the peppers, and bake a very light brown in a moderate oven. These may be served plain or with tomatoe sauce.

PICKLED PEACHES

One-half peck peaches, not too ripe, 1-2 half pint vinegar, 1-2 pint water, 3 pints sugar, cloves. Boil the water, sugar vinegar; boil the peaches in the syrup for 20 minutes, taking a portion of them at at time. Place a clove in each peach; put into jars and cover with the boiling syrup.

TO DRIVE AWAY MOSQUITOES.

A small amount of pennyroyal sprinkled about the room will clear it of mosquitoes. Dipping a sponge in spirits of camphor and fastening to the top of the bedstead will be effective in the sleeping room. Apply a decoction of pennyroyal to the exposed parts to keep off the troublesome insects.

TO REMOVE BRUISES ON FURNITURE

Wet the part with warm water, double a piece of brown paper five or six times, soak in water and place over the bruise. Place a hot iron over the paper until the moisture has evaporated. After two or three applications the bruise will be raised level to the surface.

WATCH your alert, keen-eyed, clear-headed business man at breakfast. You never see him eating heavy, soggy foods that clog the body and slow up the mental processes. No, as a rule, he selects some appetizing, easily digested cereal such as Kellogg's, for he knows that these thin, crisp, toasted corn flakes supply all the nourishment that the ordinary body needs without dissipating his energy in digesting and absorbing them.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SHIRTWAIST

By Anabel Worthington

In this design of a shirtwaist or blouse we have a model that responds to the needs of the hour. It embodies every fashion feature that has been accepted as novel and appreciated equally by the home woman, business woman and the college student.

The popular frill is in excellent representation, prettily arranged vest like. The knife pleats are gracefully held by a straight tab extension of the right front which fastens with four fancy buttons to the left front edge. At the shoulder seams the fronts are gathered; the neck is collared at back, but cut away at front in the becoming V shape.

Either long or short sleeve may be used, the short length finishing with a plait at the lower edge and having a turn back roll cuff that is button trimmed. All one material may be chosen, or a combination of fabrics.

Foulard silk in coin spot design, with crêpe for the frill, is a splendid combination, but the personal standpoint should govern, according to the service that the blouse must give.

The pattern of No. 7,871 is cut in sizes 34 to 40 bust. To make in size 36 will require 1⅞ yards 36 inch goods, figured or "spotted," and ⅝ yard plain material for the collar and cuffs. In all one material 2⅝ yards 36 inch goods will do.

You may obtain the pattern by sending to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

MARRYING A HUMORIST

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Bessie Banks' mother declared that her daughter was born smiling and that she laughed heartily six weeks before the ordinary child, male or female, even cracks a smile. As she grew up she became more smiling still.

In the same village lived Henry White, a young man of solemn thought and solemn face. Nobody had ever discovered that he had a laugh. Once in a great while a fleeting smile crossed his face. He was a carpenter by trade, and he took life as seriously as if it was fated that he should fall from a scaffold next day and break his neck. He was attracted to Miss Bessie by her laugh, and he reasoned it out:

"It is time I should get a wife. Everybody says I am too solemn and serious, and I guess they are right about it. It would not do for me to marry a solemn, serious girl. I shall therefore marry one who can liven me up and make me smile and laugh as other folks do. Bessie Banks would do it. I shall therefore marry her if she will have me."

He tried about a dozen times to tell her of his great desire, and she helped him with a merry laugh. The more she laughed the more courage she gave him and the firmer his mind was made up never to marry any girl who was lacking in mirth.

In due time the words were spoken and a favorable answer received. Then the marriage day was set, and in due time also that date arrived. In due time Henry White knocked off his job of shingling a roof of a kitchen and went to a livery stable for a horse and buggy. He was to call at her house at a certain hour, and they were to drive five miles out into the country to be married by a minister who was a cousin to him. He arrived at the house expecting her to be all ready and to smile and laugh as she came out to take a seat beside him.

To Henry's great astonishment the bride to be was not at home and waiting for him, although the hour had been named the previous evening. Miss Bessie's mother said there must be some mistake about it, as her daughter had gone to a neighbor's a mile away and would not be back for several hours. Henry had worked up a smile as he drove up to the gate of the Banks' residence, but it quickly faded and became a very, very solemn thing. He drove away in search of the bride, and she came out to the gate with the same old merry laugh on her lips.

"How is this?" asked Henry. "We were to be married at this hour. Have you backed out?"

"Oh, no, no, no," was the reply. "You see, I thought it would be a good joke to run away from you and make you hunt me up."

That was her first joke as a bride, and Henry soon discovered that a solemn, serious girl would have made him less trouble than a merry one. They had not been housekeeping two weeks before he came to supper one evening to find that the only evidence of a meal was a dish of sliced cucumbers and some very cold tea.

"Why, what does this mean?" he asked as he took his chair and looked over the table.

"I wanted to play you a joke," was the reply, followed by a peal of laughter.

"But I can't see the joke," protested the hungry carpenter, who knew there was a-plenty in the house to eat.

"Oh, it's so funny, it's so funny, Henry! I wish you could see how solemn your face looks. I am afraid you are not going to be much of a joker."

The next "good joke" played on Henry was a few days later. He came home to find twelve cats in the sitting room, and they were engaged in a lively row as he entered.

"For heaven's sake! What are all these cats doing?" he demanded.

All the answer he got was a merry peal of laughter, and he grabbed the broom and went in among the fighting felines and drove them out of the house with many a poke and whack.

There was one more "joke." One day a tin peddler came along, and as some of his wares were wanted in the house and Bess had no money with which to buy, she traded Henry's Sunday suit and a rug or two in exchange. "Exchange" meant in this case that she had to dispose of about $15 worth of articles for about $3 of tinware, and yet when the husband came home she was all a-flutter to tell him of the great bargain she had made and the joke she had worked off on the peddler. She smiled and laughed and chuckled, but Henry broke out into words of indignation and even indulged in threats. She laughed at his words and that night she crept softly out of bed and returned to her father's house. And when Henry visited her next morning her father and mother and herself said:

"Henry, you are too solemn. No one can drive a joke into your head with a sledge hammer. It is better that you and Bessie separate and get a divorce and that you marry Abigail Jones, who is an old maid of forty years and who is so solemn that she would not fetch a smile if she saw any one fall over a sleeping hog on the sidewalk."

And at last accounts poor Henry was keeping bachelor's hall by himself and looking as solemn as a rock by the roadside, and Bessie was laughing to everybody she met about her trying to make a born owl see the point in her joke. They have not got together again yet and probably never will. There was too much fun on one side and too much solemnity on the other.

Mrs. Able Says:

PEOPLE ask me why my tea tastes so good. First, I use freshly drawn water. When boiling briskly I pour it over the leaves, allowing the tea to steep, not boil, five minutes. Next, I pour the tea off the leaves into another pot. In that way you get the flavor of Red Rose Tea in all its fullness and richness. Try it.

ST. THOMAS AUTHORITIES CAUSE RE-ARREST MADE

INGERSOLL, Aug. 25.—Immediately after being allowed out on suspended sentence, Charles Jenner, the young man who a week ago obtained $100 from the Merchants' Bank by false pretenses, was rearrested and is being held for the St. Thomas authorities.

On Friday last Jenner was taken into custody here after an exciting chase, in which a bank clerk, the chief of police and others joined. On the previous Wednesday he obtained $100 from the bank by impersonating the son of a widely-known farmer to the south of here, and giving false information.

He pleaded guilty to the charge, but was allowed to go on suspended sentence on restitution being made and the costs paid.

It is reported that he may be wanted elsewhere than St. Thomas.

Last German War Loan

Berlin Govt. In Floating Bonds Promises There Will Be No More.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—Arrangements have been completed for flotation of the fifth German war loan. An Exchange Telegraph despatch from The Hague says the loan will be issued on September 4, and that the interest rate will be five per cent., as in the case of the previous loans. Subscriptions will be received up to October 5. The issue price, the despatch says, will be 98.

Count Von Roedern, Secretary of the Imperial Treasury, has instituted measures to popularize the loan which, the despatch says, is being described by canvassers as "the last war loan." Former issues of war bonds may be turned in as subscriptions.

The fourth German war loan was issued in March. It was sold at 98 1-2 as against 99 for the third loan. An issue price of 98 for the new bonds would indicate that Germany, in common with other belligerents, is being compelled to pay a higher price for its funds as the war goes on.

CHOLERA INFANTUM

Cured By Using

DR. FOWLER'S

Extract of Wild Strawberry

Cholera infantum is one of the most common, and at the same time one of the most dangerous summer complaints of infants, and many children have died who could have been saved had the proper remedy been used on the first sign of the trouble.

Cholera Infantum begins with a profuse diarrhoea; the stomach becomes irritated, vomiting and purging set in and the child rapidly loses flesh, and becomes weak, prostrated and languid.

Mrs. B. A. Cirwell, Rossway, N.S., writes: "I can recommend most highly Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. A friend of mine whose little daughter was ill with cholera infantum was given up by the doctors. The little one's mother asked me to come in and see the child. I told her I had a bottle of 'Dr. Fowler's' and asked her if she would try it. When the bottle was half used the child was well. This cure was a miraculous one for I thought the child was dying at the time."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past seventy years. Any one who has ever used it will not accept a substitute. See that you don't. When you ask for "Dr. Fowler's" be sure that you get it.

BATTLE STORIES FROM FRANCE

CANADIAN OVERSEAS

The following are a number of interesting accounts of incidents in the battle, all of which show the eagerness of the men everywhere "to get there."

In the first line of attack at a certain section of the line were the Royal Berkshires with the Lincolns on their left and the Royal Scots and others of their division on the right. "Our artillery fairly plastered them for a week night and day," said a Berkshire officer. "We moved up from behind Albert and took up a position in the front line of our trenches during the night." Then we had to wait six hours, sitting there through the night for our turn to come. That was the hard bit. But while the bombardment was going at full blast a corporal and a private performed a feat that is an instance of British pluck. Men were wanted to cut a path through our barbed wire, so that our men could get clear away when the time came. It was an exposed position and the Germans were shelling us with every kind of stuff. But the corporal who had already received two distinctions in the war and a private stepped out at the first call and volunteered for the work. They met out there in the open, lying flat in that rain of fire, snip, snip, snip at the wire for over an hour. Pretty good that eh! Better to think of it now than to sit and watch, though every one of us felt a pride in those two men. They did their work and got back again, and it was due to this fine efficiency that we were able to get a good start later on——."

"Word cannot describe what our guns have done in the past ten days," said an officer of the Lincolns. "The thunder has been terrific, staggering, nor is it possible to analyze the emotions of such a time. Certainly no sense of fear stirred in any of the men I saw. You know the time for stern action has come and you go into it with all your mind and force. Then, when the objective is won and you hang on to it with the remnants of your men, you begin to wander what the enemy will get up against your depleted forces, and more important still, how soon will the reserves come to your aid. We had the Northumberland Fusiliers on our immediate left and we were in the first line of attack. Close by were the Yorkshires. We had to rush up a slope, gain a ridge and then plunge into a wood at the lower and farther end of which were the enemy's main trenches. A reconnoitering party the night before had reported it is to be held lightly, but we did not find it so. From the condition of the men we captured I am of the opinion that they rushed up reinforcements during the night. At nine o'clock in the morning we left our trenches as the artillery lifted. We lost a good many and one C. O. was wounded along with several officers. Then the men had to be held back, they were thirsting to get at the foe. If there was a fault it was that we were a little above of time. Anyway we got into the wood and found it thickly studded with dugouts, while snipers were stationed at every vantage point. There was something of a scrimmage getting them cleared out. Bayonets and bombs were busy. A machine gun on our left was cutting through our men, so we soon stopped that, but many of us were wounded. We finely took the trenches and several hundred German prisoners. These we made act as stretcher bearers for our wounded, thus relieving our men.

The Newfoundlanders' Rush.

The way for them was paved by by various British regiments, who swept through the first and second line after a week of terrific bombardment. Then the Newfoundlanders waited for the order to advance, and when it came, they moved forward in a hail of German lead, as calmly as on parade.

Before the day of attack the division was paraded and the General addressed them, telling them of the great assault that was come; the odds they had to meet, and the issues that hung on the success of the advance. They were in high spirits and threw fresh zeal into the final preparations. They were further encouraged by a very successful raid on the German trenches by sixty of their number under two officers. The first night this was tried they partially succeeded in cutting the German entanglements. The next night they repeated the raid and careful observation showed that the Germans were ready for them and had fixed machine guns to sweep the paths that had been broken through the barbed wire. But our men were soft-footed and swift. Before the machine guns could get into action they were upon the gunners with bombs. Others leaped into the German trenches and soon stationed themselves so as to cover the entrances to dug outs, killing the Germans as they emerged. At one point a machine gun threatened to do some damage, but into that corner when a private named Philips, with a bayonet. "That was the last saw I saw of him," said one of his comrades. "But the machine gun spoke no more. The Newfoundlanders stayed until their work was finished and then came home with many souvenirs. Two days later they moved up to some work they had previously prepared for. The half hour of waiting was the hardest of the day. Men sat about and chatted, but the minutes were timed off and sergeants could be heard saying "twenty minutes," then "fifteen," "ten," "five." Then the officers gathered the men together. The leading men swung up the parapet and with sloped rifles, marched with even greater slowness than usual up the slight elevation that lay between their trenches and those of the Germans.

Over the little rise there lay an expanse of open space, gutted with shell holes, then the broken German trenches, with the third line in sight. But behind that were seemingly innumerable German machine guns, and these began to sweep across the land like a driving rain on a Scotch moor. Men began to drop, but the rest moved on like sturdy veterans. "I was curiously void of any feeling but to get through" said one who was in the charge, 'and I believe all the boys were the same.' The roar of the British artillery seemed but a murmur in that rush, and though the German bullets were sweeping the top of the grass so completely as to give an impression of a heavy wind. Nobody seemed to care. Someone asked, "How does it feel to be in a charge?" It feels like nothing at all you just go forward."

A captain who was leading his men was hit by a bullet in the hand. He sat down to bind it up, but seeing that some of his men were coming to his aid, he cried, "Go on with it, boys, I'll be with you in a minute." Then he stepped back to the dressing station, had his bandage fixed and in a short time was back urging on his men, till again he fell with another wound. So it proceeded. British pluck paying the price of progress all the way over the first German line and into the fire hurricane that lay beyond.

"I was going by the side of the corporal," said a smooth-faced lad, "when he turned to me and said, 'If I go down you take charge and lead straight ahead.'" No sooner had he said so than a bullet caught him square in the breast and he fell into my arms, but his last gasp was "push on with it." We went on till we got towards the barbed wire. There I fell and I rolled into the nearest shell-hole right on top of two officers already wounded and lying there." Right along the line the same grim talk was told, not a man faltered.

"We went over in grand style and found nothing much in the way until we got into 'Montauban,'" he said. "Here the place was an awful mess, most of the houses had been knocked head over heels—the only ones I saw standing were a couple of cafes. As we came on we saw lots of Germans running out of the back of the village, but when we got into the streets there were plenty of men monkeying about the ruins. We had divided the company up into groups of six, but as we neared the village we all joined up again. My five pals were five of the best and we kept well together. We saw some Huns in a ground floor room as we dropped some mills bombs through the window and didn't wait for an answer. As we turned the corner we saw a German lying round the end of a wall. He'd got a machine gun and made a little emplacement with bricks. He turned it on me and got me in the foot. It didn't stop me though, and when I was getting near him I felt two kicks over the heart. I didn't wait to see what had happened. I went at him and bayoneted him. I couldn't go on much farther, so I sat down to see what was the matter My foot was pretty bad, but when I looked at my left hand breast pocket I saw two holes in it. I opened my packet and found that two bullets had gone through my metal shaving mirror, through my pocket case and had nosed their way into a book I was carrying. Strangely enough earlier in the morning my officer gave me the book and said I could read it when I got into the German trenches, so I put it in my packet, little thinking that I should be able to read a bit of it in a hospital ship coming home.

The two bullets after piercing the mirror and the case met and joined themselves together in one lump of metal. They carried strips of metal into the case and bound the two firmly together. The book was "A Knight on Wheels" by Ian Hay. I saw the Germans come up to two of our fellows and throw down their rifles, so our lads chucked down theirs, too, and went for them with their fists, and they didn't half give them a dusting. One of our boys did wonders with a bayonet. He was chasing three Germans. He caught them up and bayoneted two and as he swung around he hit the third man with the butt of his rifle.

As we went along into Montauban, we saw a German machine gunner up a tree. He had the neatest little platform you ever saw, painted so that it was almost invisible. We shot him down but he didn't fall clear. The last we saw of him he was hanging by his boots from the branches. The spirit of the boys was splendid. One of them got knocked about by a shell. He seemed pretty dazed, but he picked himself up and came along. All he said was, "There must be a war on after all."

TO TRIFLE WITH CATARRH IS TO RISK CONSUMPTION

Usually it comes with a cold. Being slight it is neglected—but the seed is sown for a dangerous harvest, perhaps consumption. To cure at once, inhale Catarrhozone. It destroys the germs of catarrh, clears away mucous, cleanses the passage of the nose and throat. The hacking cough and sneezing cold soon disappear, and health is yours again. Nothing known for colds, catarrh and throat trouble, that is so curative as Catarrhozone. It cures by a new method that never yet failed. The one dollar outfit includes the inhaler and is guaranteed to cure. Smaller sizes 25c and 50c, sold everywhere.

Two More Germans Escape From Ft. Henry

KINGSTON, Aug. 25.—In broad daylight Wednesday afternoon two German prisoners made their escape from Fort Henry, and military authorities are scouring Eastern Ontario for them. How they got away is unknown and will be the subject of an official investigation, but it would appear as if they made their escape under the very nose of guards. All the night trains were watched and the authorities along the border were notified to be on the lookout for the runaways.

Both men can speak good English, and it is believed that they headed for the United States. There are now five German prisoners from Fort Henry at large.

RUSSIANS ARE ON OFFENSIVE AGAIN

FRENCH STOP THE ENEMY'S ATTACK

Russians Resume Advance In The Stanislau Region

Czar's Forces Have Captured Village of Greta, Petrograd Officially Announces To-day---German Attacks in Champagne Result in Fierce Fighting But Are Everywhere Driven Back.

ARTILLERY FIGHTING AROUND VERDUN

PETROGRAD, August 26.—The Russians have resumed their advance in the region of Stanislau after nearly a week's lull in the fighting, capturing the Village of Guta and reaching the sources of the Bistritza and Bistritza-Nadvorna rivers, it was officially announced to-day.

Gen. Von Kluck Turns Up Again

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, August 26.—The German General Von Kluck, whose advance almost to the gates of Paris was stemmed and turned into retirement by the brilliant work of General Gallieni and Sir John French, has turned up again in an interview with an American newspaper correspondent. He declared the present Allied advance was a very minor affair, and estimated that the British casualties since June 1st amounted to a hundred thousand men. Asked as to his opinion of the probable ending of the war he said: "It can last years or days. End will come suddenly like an accident."

Mrs. Vanderbilt's Narrow Escape

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, August 26.—How a German shell sent Mrs. Wm. K. Vanderbilt fleeing in her night gown with her hair down her back and a pair of loose slippers flapping over her bare feet, was related to-day by officers of the American Ambulance who accompanied her on a tour of the French front. One night while the party was sleeping at Pont-Au-Mousson the Germans opened a heavy bombardment that wrecked several nearby houses, and sent the party rushing into a reinforced cave. Mrs. Vanderbilt had time only to throw a loose wrapper over her night gown as she ran down stairs. At another place she approached so near the trenches that a French soldier warned her that one of his comrades had been killed near the spot where she was staying only five minutes before. Mrs. Vanderbilt paid a visit to Verdun and was the first American woman to enter the city since the Germans beban their attack.

German Attacks Stopped By French

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS (French Official Communique), August 26.—Strong German reconnaissance south of Maurepas and Hill 121 was dispersed by French fire last night. There was most violent artillery struggle on the Somme front. The Germans attempted no other attack on the Somme front, but launched heavy attacks in Champagne and northeastern front of Verdun. The German attack in Champagne resulted in the most violent fighting on that front in several weeks. Following an intense bombardment the Germans attacked in force at 9:30 last night west of Tahure. They were either stopped by the French fire or driven back by grenade counter attacks. On the northeastern front of Verdun heavy artillery fighting occurred all day Friday and last night. The Germans made several unsuccessful attempts to advance in the region of Thiaumont and Fleury, but were checked by the French fire. Allied air forces dominated the entire front yesterday. Nine German flyers were brought down and three captive balloons destroyed.

Armed British Steamer Sunk

LONDON, August 26.—The armed British boarding steamer Duke of Albany was sunk Thursday in the North Sea by a submarine with the loss of 24 lives, the Admiralty announced this afternoon. Eighty-seven of the crew were saved.

Winner of the Dinner Set

Turnbull Company's Dollar Day Prize will have to be Divided.

Mrs. E. S. Telford, 80 Benson Avenue, and Priscella Payne, 84 London street, estimated exactly the number of sale checks made out by the Turnbull Company on Dollar Day. The prize is a seventy-dollar Limoge dinner set, which will have to be divided between the two prize-winners.

MOVIE THEATRES TO PAY IN ADVANCE FOR THEIR FILM SERVICE

Commencing Sept. 4, moving picture theatres will have to pay in advance for their film service. It is understood that this innovation has practically been forced upon the film exchanges by small houses up and down the country becoming insolvent and leaving unpaid that couldn't be collected. It will have no material effect on the larger and established houses, and, it is said, will put the exchange business on a securer basis.

Bjerlich Persists He is Not in Plot

WALKERVILLE, Aug. 26.—The local police authorities received no communication from the Pinkerton officers who yesterday caused the arrest of Peter Bjrlich, an Austrian, employed in a Walkerville munitions plant, and he is being held incommunicado. The man persists in his denial that he is in any way concerned in a plot, but is unable to explain his alleged anxiety to obtain employment in the varnish room of the foundry.

No incriminating letters have been discovered, say the police, but two men who called to see Bjerlich to-day were turned away. They claimed to be Detroiters, and were allowed to return to that city.

POTATOES AT $3.00 A BAG PROVIDED MARKET FEATURE

Reports all Indicate That Peterboro County Has a Very Light Crop—Butter Reached 38 Cents.

BIG MARKET TO-DAY

Potatoes at $2.75 and $3.00 a bag, and butter at 37c and 38c were twin features of this morning's market, which was largely attended. Both prices had cast their shadows over the past week, and there was no surprise except at the easy, indifferent manner of their saying $3.00 a bag, as if they had been saying it for months past. At that they have been, but not out loud. It is only recently that their dreams have come true. But there was no unreality to their method this morning. Sixty cents a peck for potatoes, or $3.00 a bag. One or two farmers appeared to have some conscientious scruples left, for they were satisfied with $2.75 a bag, but they were the exceptions.

"Here's where I eat no more potatoes said a retired farmer. "I used to draw them in here for 25 cents a bag or 15 cents, by the load. They are not worth $3.00 to me."

Hastings County reports indicate a large crop, but with few exceptions the local conditions are decidedly unfavourable. Herb. Forster, ex-deputy Reeve of North Monaghan, said he would be lucky to get as many bags as he had planted. Mr. Wm. Morris saw no real potatoes in his travels up and down the County. The scarcity, he says, is by no means fictitious.

BUTTER WAS FIRM.

While butter was quoted at 38c, it was hardly firm at that figure. Many women were selling at 37 cents, and there seemd a fairly plentiful supply.

Eggs were quoted all the way from 27 cents to 30 cents. Chickens were quite plentiful at $1.00 and $1.25 a pair. A few ducks and turkeys were also offered.

Altogether, it was an unpromising market for the labourer whose pay envelope is no heavier than a year ago. At the present price of commodities he won't be able to put away much for the rainy day, if he isn't already caught in the storm.

Prize Moneys Will Be Paid on Tuesday

Since the list of prize winners was announced, a lady has entered a claim to one of the prizes, as she says her estimate was a figure very close to the correct number. In view of this claim the prize money will not be paid out till Tuesday morning, and the lady is given till Monday at noon to call and give particulars, so that the tickets can be gone over again and any possible error corrected.

Not hearing from her up to that time, the tickets will be destroyed, and the money paid out to the list of winners as announced in Thursday's Examiner.

Regatta at Trent Bridge

The Trent River Association held their seventh annual Regatta at Trent Bridge on Friday, Aug. 18th.

The weather was all that could be desired, and the well-chosen programme of aquatic and land sports was witnessed by a large number of spectators. The events were keenly contested and the winners received useful and valuable prizes.

By the courtesy of Mr. Dawson the Campbellford Band was present, and their music was much appreciated.

The proceeds were in aid of the Canadian Red Cross work, and a cheque for one hundred dollars has been forwarded to the Society.

SPLENDID OPPORTUNITIES IN THE NEW BATTALION

Local young men who have been considering the question of enlistment are beginning to see the possibilities offered by getting in on the ground floor in a new battalion and the result will be seen in an influx of recruits into the 247th. The men who offer themselves now have every prospect of quick advancement as trained non-commissioned officers have practically all enlisted and the units now forming have to develop their own staff. Young men who wish to join should lose no time in having a conference with Lt.-Col. Johnston at the Armouries.

TWO RECRUITS HAVE BEEN ATTESTED BY THE NEW BATTALION

Ice Has Now Been Broken and Next Week is Expected to be a Lively One for The New Unit---Belleville Office Objects to North Hastings Being Given to the 247th for Recruiting Purposes---To-day's General Military News.

Thos. Henry O'Hara, 191 Brock Street, and Harry M. Latimer, 296 Margaret Avenue, are the first two recruits to be signed on by the 247th Battalion, having passed the Medical examinations and been sworn in. The latter is especially well known in Peterborough, having been employd for a long time in the drafting room of the Canadian General Electric Company. He is a member of the 57th Regiment and took the last Sergeant's course conducted by their regiment. Prospects are bright for some lively recruiting for the new battalion next week, as Lieuts. Quinn, Dunsford and Cameron are in touch with a large number of recruits of splendid calibre, and now that the ice is broken a good week is looked for. There is a "certain liveliness" in evidence now and all indications point to the fact that the big drive will soon be under way.

Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., whose name has been connected by rumour with the position of Paymaster with the new battalion, had a conference with Lt.-Col. Johnston, at the Armouries, this morning. Sergt. W. Metheral, an old Peterborough boy, who is now a member of the 230th Infantry Battalion, at Ottawa, is visiting relatives in Peterborough to-day.

WHY CONSCRIPTION?

The following little story in the Military Gazette is a touching answer to the question: "Why Conscription?". It reads as follows.

Not far from the city, in a humble little cottage by the country road side, lived a little old wrinkled woman,—all alone. It was late at night, but in her chair she sat rocking, rocking, rocking, and thinking of the "only lad," the soldier boy who was "Somewhere in France" tonight. How strange it was she could not sleep to-night; and yet she must be tired, for had she not worked hard all day in her little garden? The farm had been worked on the "shares" since "Andy" had gone to the war, over a year ago. It was late in the night, but sleep would not come, for a strange feeling possessed her. So she rocked and rocked and rocked. A knock came to the door—a small boy handed her a yellow envelope. She adjusted her glasses and with trembling fingers signed her name. She had half expected it, "Andy" would not come home again—"Andy" was "killed in action." She took down from the mantlepiece the picture of a broad-shouldered young man of twenty or so in khaki, and holding it to her breast with the telegram, she sobbed and rocked. The night wore on. She heeded not the passing of the hours.

She thought of the family across the way with the well kept farm and the two big strong young men who had recently invested in an auto for Sunday pleasure. She thought of the many other families in the neighborhood whose sons had not yet heard "the call". And she was old and a widow and alone. She thought of the interest on the mortgage that could not be paid. How unfair it all seemed. She had done her share—she had given her boy to the King. The great war was still raging. Would it ever end? Perhaps it would end more quickly if all the young men were compelled to go and do their share. Why did her son have to go to fight for the whole neighborhood? So she thought and murmured over and over again. "It is not fair." "It ain't a fair law."

"Old Mrs. McPherson has gone crazy" said one of the boys across the road at breakfast the next morning. "As John and I were coming home in the car from the dance early this morning, we saw a light in her house. Thinking it strange, we went to see what was wrong, and looking through the window saw her crying and rocking with a paper held against her breast—guess it was the notice Uncle George had sent her about her mortgage being overdue. She must intend to dispute his claim, for she was saying, over and over again to herself: "It is not fair. It ain't a fair law".

Barriefield, Aug. 26.—The School of Physical Training and Bayonet Fighting now being conducted at Barriefield Camp by Lieut. James Bews is constantly in the limelight by the wonderful work being done.

The school is located in the clearing behind the lines of the 156th Battalion and near the butts. Here in small groups the officers, N. C. O's and men who have been taking the course receive the military system of physical exercise, as combined with the proper handling of the bayonet.

The physical part of the work has been of wonderful value in developing raw recruits into being men. It teaches them to walk straight and do the right thing at the right moment. Nothing can develop a man's intellect and body as well as good instruction along the proper lines, and this is what the school is trying to do.

The work of jumping into and out of the trenches and charging at full speed into imaginary enemies is regarded as very interesting and the fascination keeps up to such a pitch that it never becomes monotonous.

The course which commences this week will continue for twenty-one working days and is being attended by officers, N. C. O's and men from battalions in all parts of the country.

The Kingston Whig says: "The "baby" battalion of this military district is the 247th Battalion, which Lieut.-Col. W. D. Johnston is endeavouring to organize at Peterborough. He has taken over the office in the Armouries, where his brother, who had command of the 93rd, had his headquarters.

In the original letter authorizing this battalion with Lieut.Col. W. D. Johnston in command, the territory allotted was "Peterborough and North Hastings with the privilege to take from Cavan Township in Durham, but not exclusively."

As officer in command of the 49th Regiment, Belleville, it is understood that Lieut.-Col. W. R. Wilson protested against this breaking up of the Belleville recruiting area, and that his protest had been considered. In future the Peterborough officers will have to confine their efforts further west, but with no end of material there should be no great difficulty in raising a battalion.

When a kettle is badly burned, do not fill it with water, but set it aside to cool, then put in a handful of washing soda and water and allow it to boil for an hour or more.

A CHARACTER SKETCH OF DAVID LLOYD GEORGE

Perhaps No Man in The World Has a Higher Responsibility or Larger Powers Over the Destinies of so Many Millions of Men.

HIS REMARKABLE QUALITIES

By T. P. O'Connor

There was something weird—though I ought not to have felt like that—in going into the spacious building of the War Office the other day and finding Mr. Lloyd George in the room, and in the very seat which was occupied for nearly two years by Lord Kitchener. It was not merely that the two men were so opposite in character, in opinion and in careers, but that they were known to have been more than once in sharp division of opinion as to the conduct of the war. It seems some centuries ago—though it is only a few years—since the political enemies of Mr. Lloyd George—now among his warmest political friends—used to talk of him as a little Welsh attorney. And yet to-day nobody seems to be the least surprised that the little Welsh attorney should be in the great position of War Minister. For consider what that position means. It is he who has to be consulted as to every great operation of war; it is he who has to be consulted about every great appointment; he can make or he can break great generals; five millions of men have more or less to look to him for orders, for promotion, for judgment, if they be wrong. No man in the world has perhaps a higher responsibility, larger powers over the destinies of so many millions of men.

WAS NO SHOCK.

It was no shock to anybody that Lord Kitchener should get such a job. He was then the soldier with the biggest reputation in the British Empire—save and except Lord Roberts of course, who was too old for gigantic a job. He had been a soldier from his boyhood upwards; had conducted great campaigns; had won gigantic victories; he was known to have all the stern power of command which are required in a great leader of soldiers; and it wasn't a prejudice, a practice or a need of the soldier with which he had not become acquainted during a life most of which had been spent in barrack unless when it had been passed in a tent. It was in the natural order of things. Lord Kitchener was besides the son of a soldier; he belonged to the soldier caste by tradition, education, feeling—in that sense he was born in purple and trained in the camp. Mr. Lloyd George began in pov., in obscurity, in a Welsh village; he came from Nonconformists Radicals, and his life had been spent either in his office as a lawyer or in the Parliament House or on the platform; and during all its years till the great war came, he had been among the foremost champions of a hated gospel of Pacifism. It was certainly the strangest transformation of fortune that England had ever known, and could only find its analogy in the strange topsy-turvy of the doers of the French Revolution, when a Limoges linen-draper was improved into a great General, and priests became great Ministers or diplomatists. But then France turned everything upside down in those days of earthquake and eclipse; and in England we have had no revolution in our institutions. We go stodgily along so far as our methods of government are concerned on the century-old lines of uninterrupted and slow political development.

THE PARADOX.

Yet again there comes this paradox. Not only was nobody shocked by this appointment of the little Welsh attorney—the Nonconformist village Radical—to the greatest of offices in the greatest of wars, but Mr. Lloyd George was taken to the War Office by acclamation; the voice of the whole nation called for him, and nobody else could have been appointed without producing something like a popular revolt. What were the qualities in the man that produced this most remarkable result? And how was it that Mr. Lloyd

RAILWAY STRIKE STILL LOOMS UP ON THE HORIZON

Railway Managers Have Been Working Out Plans for Handling Extended Actual Strike—Would Depend Upon "Loyal Employees"

"WE ARE READY"

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—"We are ready." This statement came to-day from both the railways' executive and employees, as a national transportation paralysis loomed up stronger than ever to-day. Railroad managers contended they could keep sufficient trains running through "loyal employees" to prevent a babies' milk and food famine and its consequent garnering of death and desolation. The employees said that the roads, as a whole, would be tied up tighter than a drumhead, and the guilt for ruin or starvation would lie upon the railway kings. It developed to-day that while the railway presidents have been wrestling with the problem of meeting President Wilson's proposal, the managers have been working out plans for handling an extended actual strike. A comprehensive plan is complete, they declare.

Long Holiday Trip By Automobile

Manitoba People in Peterborough on Their Way West.

Mr. and Mrs. I. J. Bennett of Verdun, Man., recently completed a 2,000 mile trip by automobile from West Toronto, Ont., in an Overland Model 75-B.

The couple journeyed to the Willys-Overland Lt., plant at West Toronto, where they received their car. From there they drove to Peterborough to see the beautiful scenery in that part of Canada. From there they returned to Toronto and then started on their homeward trip, via Georgetown, Stratford and London, then into the States through Chicago, Ill., where the Bennets stopped for a short time and then put through the Northern states, back over the border and into Manitoba.

During the entire journey the Model 75-B behaved itself very well and the Bennetts have nothing but the very highest praise for the light, economical car. The motor—the usual 31.5 that is used in Model 75-B's—ran without a miss and consumed a minimum of fuel.

LIEUT. ROGERS' CONDITION IS NOT FAVOURABLE

His many friends will regret to learn that unfavourable news has been heard in regard to the condition of Lieut. Harry G. Rogers of Peterborough, who is wounded and a prisoner of war in Germany. Lieut. Rogers was badly wounded in the Zillebeke fighting and was captured by the Germans. Nothing has been heard from him directly for over a month.

RECORD CROWDS ON RIVER BOATS

Record crowds, at least for market and business trips were carried on the two Rice Lake boats which arrived in Peterborough this morning. The Geneva carried 110 passengers, while the Rainbow brought 80 to the city.

GERMANY GETS CANADIAN NICKEL.

The submarine freighter, the "Deutschland," is reported to have arrived safely in Germany with 200 tons of nickel. This nickel was procured in the United States and was Canadian nickel in origin. Canadian nickel matte was shipped to New Jersey and refined by the International Nickel Company. Canada is almost the only source of nickel in the United States. There is no importation of ore from any other country that would account for the supply of a cargo of 200 tons, which the Hun submarine freighter has by this time safely landed. In spite of any "arrangements" to the contrary, it was Canadian nickel, to be used by Germany to make munitions to help kill Canadian soldiers. This fact emphasizes the necessity of taking measures, which should have been taken two years ago at least, to give Canada complete control of her own nickel, a metal that is of indispensable importance in modern warfare. The indications are that Germany is weakening because of her lack of munitions, into whose composition nickel enters. Every little supply of Canadian nickel she can get helps prolong her resistance. It is not too late to take immediate action to procure the refineness of nickel in Canada, and put an end to a condition of export that is helping the enemy—a policy that is virtually suicidal, if it is a fact, and there can be little doubt of it, that Canada is supplying Germany with one of the important aids to destructive warfare.

A ROYAL SUMMER VISITOR.

Lightly poised on a beech leaf, or floating aimlessly among the sunbathed branches, another monarch dallies in his fading realm. With brown, black-ribbed wings aspread, the very artistry of easy motion, he drifts along on the autumn breeze with the capricious abandon of a summer's work wound up. At times he falls in quickened action, and, in brief, legato flights breasts the lazy stream, breaks into sweeping undulations, momentarily pauses in undulations, then, with slender planes extended and taut, shoots off in sheer ecstasy of graceful security atop the fragrant August wind. Grieg and Macdowell among others, have visualized "Le Papillon" this monarch in his summer moods, and following his art one can in fancy fit the music to the changing rythmn of his movements.

He came in the late spring, when the bluebird's welcome had grown cold, and when the milk weed, his staff of life, was pushing forth a vigorous plant. While males of other species paraded their particular charms in the mating season, the tiny scented sacs dotted on either wing soon attracted a companion of his own color. Nature was served again, and in the early summer the brilliant green larva with his yellow and black stripes appeared on the leaves and stock of the milk weed. The color of the plant itself, he passed unnoticed except to the wayside rambler. To some he might have been a mere ugly worm, a species of the detested caterpillar family. Came the stage of his existence when he had reached maturity, full grown and fat from the nourishing substance of the wayside weed. Then he wandered off to a nearby fence or stone, wrapped himself in his pupal silk and passed into his chrysalis sleep.

The milk-weed nodded on in its own course and paid little heed to the lusty young Monarch butterfly, the very image of his parent, who had come up from the south in spring, alighted one day upon the flower cluster. How could the weed recognize in this brown beauty, with wings black fringed and ribbed, the meta-morphosed larva? But there it was, the green, black, and yellow striped caterpillar, a full-blown butterfly, so wonderfully coloured that it has been named the Monarch. It is a frequent visitor in our streets, but he is found in clouds on the edges of the woods. Restless he may be, but his parent idly lingers among the branches of the beech or floats with the breeze that plays through the open spaces and out across the sunlit fields.

CIVIC PREPAREDNESS.

Not one of the least significant lessons of this war is that which teaches the wisdom and duty of preparedness. If Britain, when the war began had been as well prepared for war as she is now, perhaps the victory that is assured would have been accomplished before now, or there might have been no war.

The same applies to Canada, though perhaps the wisdom of entering upon such tremendous expenditure in times of peace would have been doubtful The lesson, however, applies to all the activities of life, public and private.

Much time and advantage are lost through lack of foresight. A state of unpreparedness prevents being done many things that should be done, especially in civic matters. When spring comes many things of a routine nature have to be done and new though necessary matters are put aside.

The excuse of the council for not providing public swimming and bathing places along the river front is that there was no money appropriation for the purpose. A failure to look ahead—to be prepared—caused a failure of what the people evidently desire.

The petitions that are being numerously signed, apart from abstract argument as to the utility of providing bathing facilities, should be a reminder to the aldermen and induce them to provide a small sum in the estimates for the purpose. If they do not act when the sense of the need is urgent, when cooler weather comes they will probably forget all about the matter and meet another sweltering summer unprepared.

It is told of a wealth lady that she visited a convent of sisters who, from lack of means and fuel, had no fire. During her visit the lady was chilled to the bone, and under the impulse of that feeling, offered to send some loads of fuel from her forests. She returned home and in the comfortable warmth of her apartments, the sufferings of the sisters were lost in her comfort. As her body grew warm her charity grew cold; and she countermanded the orders she had given for a supply of fuel.

Acting under emotional impulse is not always concession to the best motive; but in many things, if we do not thus act or prepare for action, we do not act at all.

In the broiling weather we have had this summer, we felt the necessity of swimming and bathing conveniences. Even the city fathers were affected and became sympathetic to the proposal. If they had had the money no doubt they would have taken measures to supply a very important need.

The lesson is to remember and anticipate the duty now. In a short time the city council will be preparing the estimates for the coming year. They might, as they have virtually promised to do, provide in the estimates for a sum sufficient to make at least a substantial beginning in providing for convenient and adequate and supervised swimming and bathing facilities.

At the same time the councillors might provide a sum for tree planting as the beginning of a policy of providing every street in the city with shade trees, planted in regular lines and at proper distances.

This would be a new departure; but one the city is doubly obligated to take. In the past history of the city, the city authorities have not spent a dollar in painting street trees; but it has spent hundreds in destroying trees planted or preserved by private citizens; and aldermanic sentence of destruction is now hanging over a score or two of street trees.

If the unspeakable Hun, the Germans, provide for planting a tree for every tree cut down in the national forests, our city fathers should be equally provident, should not be outdone by the Hun.

In the recent hot weather, our street trees have been a comfort of incalculable degree to sweltering citizens going to and fro on our streets.

While we are thus impressed, is the time for the aldermen to act; and if they show distinction they should be treated to a little sparring. The Horticultural Society, which stands for aesthetic as well as floral culture, might use the rowells if necessary.

The cult of the beautiful is now general and more deeply implanted than the aldermen perhaps realize. Mr. Fred Adams of Toronto, the judge in the Society's own competition, in his report, stated that from his observation, there should be a hundred, instead of twenty-five, entrees in the competition.

This shows that the aesthetic spirit of the citizens is general and only needs encouragement for more general expression.

This shows also that the council would be warmly supported in making a beginning of a policy of tree planting on vacant lines of street. The cost, considering the consequence, would be trifling. Not only would the beauty of the city and its desirableness as a residential centre, be immensely amplified, but the expense incurred would be compensated by the increase of the assessable value of the property affected.

Take some of our residence properties, well shaded with street trees A purchaser would offer a certain price. This price would be cut from twenty-five to fifty per cent. by the removal of the trees.

Mr. Adams suggested that the society should offer prizes for the best treatment of vacant lots—it would add to their full value.

Likewise would trees add to the value of vacant lots, so that the council has a chance to, at once, increase the value of property and add to the beauty and comfort of the city.

Now is the time to make a beginning, to introduce something that will grow in beauty and comfort year after year.

King Edward VII. though he earned the surname of Peacemaker, believed in preparation; he said—"Readiness for defence is one of the strongest safeguards of peace." To adapt the spirit of this truth—preparedness is the prime condition of the best accomplishment.

Hence now is the time for the city to prepare for giving the people two great benefits, swimming and bathing facilities, and for a beginning of a policy of civic tree planting—a policy of providing for planting, on treeless streets or in filling vacancies in existing street lines of trees, fifty or a hundred or two hundred trees every spring. In ten years we could thus plant 3,000 trees, covering at thirty feet spacing, five miles of streets at a merely nominal cost.

The aldermen should think of this when striking the estimates—practice preparedness. If there is fear that they might not act, they might be reminded; and the Horticultural Society is the official reminder, the body to act in the interests of residents of the Cit Beautiful.

THE FALL OF GERMANY.

Here is Germany suddenly a moral bankrupt. Only two or three generations ago it was said of Germany that hers was the empire of the air, meaning the region where thought experiments with things intangible, such as the workings of the mind and the foundations of morals. And now all at once Germany has no morals. She stands stripped of every shred of the character that has hitherto been regarded as dignifying a nation. —Catholic Record.

A COMPLIMENT TO CANADA.

In Canada they manage the strike business far more intelligently than we do. Boards of conciliation and investigation are provided for by law, and to order a strike or lockout before such a board has had an opportunity to look into the matter is made punishable by heavy penalties. So long as compulsory arbitration seems to be out of the question, this Canadian method of settling labour disputes serves a very useful purpose.—Washington Herald.

ADVICE TO THE KAISER.

"Polybe," writing in the Paris Figaro, says, addressing the German emperor:

"You have a battle fleet. Why do you not use it to break through the British blockade? The blockade is only maintained by the British fleet, and if the latter were destroyed in fair fight the empire of the seas would no longer be closed to German merchant ships, which would be able to maintain all the foodstuffs and raw materials, reinforcements, and munitions they liked from North and South America, and bring them to Germany.

"The United States have not two sets of scales, one for the allies and the other for the Central Powers. They will place no hindrance in the way of your commerce, so that nothing is more simple—we say it with an entire impartiality of judgment—nothing is more honorable.

"Order out your fleet to go and look for the British fleet. Do you want its exact address? Sink and scatter the British fleet and the seas are yours."

If the cattle are troubled with ringworm scrub the spots clean. In some cases it is necessary to saturate them with oil once a day for several days before it becomes possible to remove the scabs and warty growths. When this has been done paint with tincture of iodine once daily, or apply a solution of two ounces of sulphate of copper in a pint of water. Use iodine ointment daily on the spots around the eyes.

SKY LINKS FOES IN NOBLE SERVICE

PARIS, Aug. 25.—Aviation Lieut. Fevre, flying over Sainte Marie aux Mines, in German Alsace, dropped a wreath and letter requesting the curate of the village to place the wreath on the tomb of his father, Col. Fevre of the 221st Regiment of French infantry, who was killed in that locality during the French offensive of 1914.

A German aviator, flying over the French lines, dropped the curate's answer, saying that the favour had been accomplished.

Runaway Automobile Caught by Another

WOODSTOCK, Aug. 25.—Two girls were driving a motor car along Main street when suddenly the driver lost control of the car and it at once started ahead at the rate of about sixty miles an hour down the road. A man who was driving a second automobile behind the run-away, noticing the ladies in distress, at once speeded up his car, overhauled the one in front, and at the risk of his own life jumped from one car to the other. He soon had the car under control, but meanwhile, his own car, having no one to guide it, ran into a tree and was badly damaged. The car number was given as 4,043, owner supposed to be William Pakenham, 106 Spadina road, Dean of the Faculty of Education of the University of Toronto.

OPEN PULPITS TO THE WOMEN

LONDON, Aug. 25.—Rev. Percy Dearmer, one of London's most prominent clergymen, makes a novel contribution to the controversy which has been hotly raging some time past over the question: Should women preach? A great national mission is being organised by the Anglican Church, and, in view of the fact that so many clergymen are away doing Chaplaincy work, it was suggested that women might conduct certain parts of the service, including delivering addresses. A majority of the Bishops, however, vetoed the proposal.

Dearmer whose first wife held a great position in artistic and literary circles in London, and died a few months ago nursing in the Balkans, remarried recently. He has now written an article advocating preaching by women, in the course of which he says: "Women ask to be treated on equal terms with men. Their powers and gifts, it is true, are different, but they ask for equality of opportunity, so that their diverent gifts and qualities may be used in the best possible way. We let them do heav ymanual labor for which they are not suited. We have no right to prevent them from speaking and teaching in public, a task for which they are eminently qualified. Indeed, I never heard a women make a really bad speech. On the other hand, when I think of men I have heard on the platforms, at dinner tables, an din the pulpit, a dumb feeling of despair overtakes me, especially when I think of sermons that are listened to every Sunday, which, indeed, a majority of our population refuses nowadays to listen to."

BRITAIN DERIDES HINTS OF FAMINE

IMPORTS OF WHEAT GROW

LONDON, Aug. 22.—An official of the Board of Trade, in discussing today with the correspondent of The New York Times Great Britain's food situation, did not hesitate to admit that there had been an advance of 60 per cent. in food prices since the war began, but he pointed out that prices had risen the world over as a natural consequence of the European conflict.

"Far from Great Britain being on the point of facing a food shortage," he said, "she is tremendously well off. We have got all we need to eat, and, while prices are high, Great Britain has nothing to fear in the way of famine.

"Great Britain has to depend quite largely upon importations for her food supply. We get a considerable part of it from America, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and from South American countries. With the shortage of ships due to British military and naval needs we are unable to get imports in as freely as before the war, and this is one reason why prices have been raised. While the poorer families of Great Britain may feel the pinch in some things there is more money among the country's workers than before the war, and the bulk of the people are able to stand the pressure of the higher prices.

Reduction to Black Bread Absurd.

"It is rediculous to hear the reports that are being spread about that England is on the verge of being reduced to a black bread and no meat diet. Nothing could be further from the truth. The actual fact is that the material for black bread hardly exists in this country. We have ample wheat to make white bread, and there is not the slightest probability of the supply running low so as to create anything like a shortage or even so that anything approaching the necessity of bread rations will be reached.

"To show exactly what Great Britain's position is regarding bread, all I need to do is to quote figures of the imports of wheat and flour now as compared with those before the war. For eleven months to July of this year we have imported approximately 200,000,000 bushels of wheat and flour, besides having produced 75,000,000 bushels of our own. As against this take pre-war figures of 1913-14, when we imported 195,000,000 bushels, while growing 56,000,000 of our own. That means that with the war on we have had this year 275,000,000 bushels of wheat and flour, as against 251,000,000 in 1913-14. That shows on its face that Great Britain is better off than before the war.

"When we consider the fact that bread has risen in price, it must be pointed out that this is due mainly to the prices charged by wheat growers. Illustrative of this is the rise in New York from $1.26 per bushel for Manitoba wheat on July 5 to $1.65 last week. We have got to have wheat and we have to pay the price for it. With the prospect ahead of a smaller wheat crop in America this fall prices may be high, but we do not anticipate they will go as high as they are now.

"I might also remark that while people talk of bread being high here it is really costing 4½ cents a loaf of one pound, while in America to-day I understand they are charging 5 cents for the same weight loaf. So our price, even with the war on, is less than in America."

No Alarm About Meat.

"Now, when we come to meat it must be admitted that the situation is a bit different, but there's nothing to cause the slightest alarm. Great Britain to-day, besides her own needs, has to ship a considerable quantity to her armies in France, Salonika, and Egypt, while her allies in part are drawing on the same sources of supply. While actual imports of meat to Great Britain are less now than before the war, that gives no accurate idea of the true situation in the British Isles. In time of peace 60 per cent. of the meat consumed in the British Isles is home grown, and from reports we get from cattle growers there is no reason to believe that there has been any falling off.

"As to imported beef and mutton it is true that there has been a falling off, but as against that we have imported immensely greater quantities of ham and bacon. In seven months of this year 300,000 tons of ham and bacon have come to Great Britain, as against 200,000 tons in the same period of 1914.

Any Change for the Better.

"It can be put down with all firmness that Great Britain, far from facing a meat famine is in a fairly comfortable position and with no prospect of a change, except for the better. Now as to the prevailing high prices for meat the real fact is that it is only the requirements of the army that cause it. Great Britain uses for the most part her homegrown cattle. The demand being so great for the meat prices have gone up. In considering prices, one has to calculate that there are thousands of women now doing heavy work who need meat while before the war they led sedentary lives, eating little meat. Because of all this demand taken in relation to the needs of the army, prices naturally have gone up.

"As regards potatoes the British crop always has been nearly sufficient for her needs. In all staple necessities Great Britain is exceedingly well off and there is not the shadow of likelihood of any change in the future, except for the better. While it is idle, perhaps, to prophesy, everything points to a reduction of prices in the near future rather than a rise."

33 4/5 Horse Power From This Powerful MAXWELL ENGINE

Proved by an accurate dynamometer test, made in the Maxwell laboratories August 10, 1916.

There has been a lot of talk about horse-power, and we just want to let Maxwell owners and prospective owners know that in respect to horse-power, as in most other respects, the Maxwell leads by a comfortable margin. Not that we attach such great importance to horse-power. We don't. We never have.

Horse-power—abundant horse-power—is only one of many superior features of the Maxwell.

We are selling motor cars—complete motor cars—not engines or horse-power.

Horse-power is a matter that is secondary to motor efficiency and economy.

A giant has no advantage if he does not apply, or wrongly applies, his strength.

Maxwell cars have horse-power—all you want or need—probably more per pound of car weight than any other automobile in the world.

But we don't make any loud cry about it.

Because we have more than horse-power to sell you.

We challenge competitive tests. We invite comparison.

Because we absolutely know that no car of its class or weight can surpass the Maxwell on speedways, on rough roads, through sand or mud, anywhere.

And because we know, and you will know, that, everything considered, the Maxwell is the World's Greatest Motor Car Value!

The Saloniki Front Situation

The Greek port of Kavala, which the Bulgars are reported to be approaching, is on the Aegean Sea, eighty miles northeast of Salonika and twenty miles west of the Bulgarian border. It is some distance to the north-east of the eastern extremity of the fighting front, which extends from the Gulf of Orfani to the vicinity of Monastir. The river referred to in the official French report as having been crossed by the Bulgarians probably is the Mesta, which flows from Bulgaria through the north-eastern extremity of Greece and enters the Aegean near the Greco-Bulgarian border.

The Struma on which are situated the two Greek forts occupied by the Bulgarians, is some distance west of the Mesta, with an outlet into the Aegean near Orfani.

Between the Allies' main line and the Bulgarian frontier is a no-man's land thirty miles broad, save where the Bulgarians have trespassed upon Greek territory and where the advanced columns of the allies have taken up isolated positions. There is also a Bulgar concentration on the Nestos River, near Ranthi, at a point close to the ford, which would bring them over to the Greek frontier fort of Urgenez, which stands high up on the hillside and commands the winding railway line from Salonika into Bulgaria, as it passes by means of tunnels through the gorge.

It was on May 29 that a Bulgar force of 20,000 in five separate columns descended the Struma and took over the Greek forts Rupel, fifty-two miles north-northeast of Salonika, Dragontin, Janovo and Dova Tepe. At Rupel the Greek commander resisted until he received orders from Athen to withdraw. Later the Bulgars occupied the site of the Demir-Hissar bridge, which was blown up by orders of General Sarrail on Jan. 12.

There is a German line opposite the French positions at Simoil, on the east bank of the Vardar southwest of Lake Doiran. So far as has been reported no Austrian troops have yet appeared on this front. It is said that they form the army of occupation in Serbia, Montenegro, and the reserves behind the Bulgars and Germans in Macedonia.

The Rupel Pass, which is in the possession of the Bulgars, is the key to the Serea-Demir-Hissar plain. It constitutes the neck of the bottle as regards the Struma Valley to the north. The Struma ascends to Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria, eighty miles north of the frontier. The entrance to conquered Serbia is via the Vardar Valley, which crosses the old Graeco-Serbian frontier, forty-five miles west of the Struma.

Expect Roumania's Intervention.

There are those students of Balkan affairs who believe that Roumania will not let Brusiloff's successful campaign and the advance of the Allies from Salonika pass without intervening on the side of the Allies. A year ago she would have been paid for such intervention, it is believed, by Bukowina and Transylvania, which have large Roumanian populations. Now the lure might be the same, but naturally the first move of her army would be against Bulgaria in order to weaken the obstruction to the Allies advancing up the Vardar and Struma.

Roumania could put in the field 900,000 men, consisting of the standing army of 200,000, the first line reserves of 150,000, and all other reserves amounting to 550,00. Bulgaria is said to have 300,000 men in Macedonia and 100,000 guarding the approaches from Roumania, besides the balance of a maximum total of 750,000, or 920,000, who could be called at a moment's notice to either front.

There remains to be considered the Italian army of 260,000 or 300,000 men at Avlona, who like their Franco-British allies at Salonika have for months been building roads and emplacements for heavy artillery. This army has been mobilized under the command of General Placentini, one of the ablest Italian military chiefs, but on July 10 it was unofficially announced in Rome that the projected field operations would be under General Armeglio, who had been recalled from Tripoli for that purpose.

As a comman War Board since the Paris conference has conducted the fortunes of the Allies in the field, it is not thought possible that an advance would be made by the Franco-British-Serb force at Salonika without a co-ordinated movement being made by the Italian troops at Avlona.

LONDON MAY RETURN TO ITS OLD LINKMEN.

London, August 24.—A revival of linkmen is predicted as an eventuality arising out of the new order forbidding whistling for cabs after ten o'clock at night in the London area.

The regulation which arose out of complaints that the rest of wounded soldiers in the London Hospitals was disturbed by the incessant whistling, went into force last night. The weather was fine and no great inconvenience was suffered by the public as a result of the ban on whistling for cabs.

Various devices for calling conveyances are suggested, but most of them are inadmissable. For instance electric flash signs such as are used at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City, cannot be used here under the light regulations necessitated as a precaution against the Zeppelins.

If there were linkmen they for the same reason would have to forego torches which they were wont to carry until a hundred years ago when the introduction of street lighting by gas superceded their use. In the days of growler and hansom, the linkmen, with their band of runners, used to make quite a good living out of the business of hunting for conveyances, particularly at the hours that the theatres closed.

Men of the class from which these linkmen and their satellites were recruited are now mostly doing duty in the army, and if the system is revived linkmen or linkboys, as they are alternatively called, will have to be girls.

Take Iron For Your Blood
Makes You 100% Stronger in 10 Days
Phosphorous For Your Nerves

Doctors are now finding thousands of people who are going through life in misery with kidney trouble, liver complaint, nervous prostration, headache, nervous indigestion, rheumatism, constipation and numerous other complaints, all due to lack of Iron in the blood and Phosphorus in the nerves.

Just as soon as the blood becomes thin, and nerves weakened you are unable to digest the little food you eat and at once your system becomes poisoned, causing liver trouble, kidney pains, headaches, rheumatism, indigestion, heart trouble, and you soon are a living skin, run-down, nervous wreck, and life to you then is a burden. The first thing you should do is to go and get weighed; then go to the nearest drug store, and get some Nuxated Phosphorus with Iron tablets and take one or two after each good meal and you will find that in ten days you are 100 per cent. stronger. The Iron will give you good rich thick blood and the phosphorus will strengthen your nerves and the food you eat will give you 100 per cent. more nourishment than before; you will begin to get fat, your nerves will be stronger, and you will feel like you used to when you were 15 years old. You know as well as ever, doctor, that there is nothing like good old iron to give you strength and build you up, while phosphorus acts wonders on the nervous system.

The iron recommended here is an entirety new form of Iron which will not blacken the teeth or upset your stomach.

Life is short but you can lengthen it by 25 years if you take Nuxated Phosphorus with Iron, which gives you digestive strength, and the food you eat will be nourishment to you instead of poisoning your system, causing so many complaints which you know bring you to an early grave. Nuxated Phosphorus with Iron does not contain an atom of strychnine, arsenic or any poison which has been proved so harmful in almost every tonic. It is easy to take and is turned up by the system almost immediately, making you feel 100 per cent. stronger in 10 days. It is dispensed in this city by F. C. Webber stores at 50c a box.

A Special

Gossard Corset

for School Girls

¶ School will soon be opened and your daughter undoubtedly dreads the thoughts of spending five hours each day in one of those hard wooden, straight-back seats. They are tiresome, and leaning over the desk has a tendency to produce round shoulders.

¶ School girls may be much more comfortable and will be less tired after the day's studies, if they are correctly corseted in the

GOSSARD Front-Lacing Junior or Misses' Corset

¶ Our Corsetieres will be pleased to care for your daughter, and a fitting incurs no obligation.

¶ The Junior Models are priced at $1.50 and the Misses' at $2.00. Have the child fitted to-day.

...erman Brewers Are Worried

Complain of Shortage of Barley, and Some May Shut Down.

The beer problem continues to agitate the people of Germany and, although there has as yet been no necessity for the regulation of consumption by the issuing of beer cards, as was suggested some time ago, and the harvest workers appear to have been assured a fairly generous supply of the beverage, the press carries many complaints from both consumers and producers.

In Wurtemberg, because of their failure to receive the full amount of their allotment of barley, based upon 48 per cent. of the average amount used before the war, and the increasing demand for beer for the troops at the front, the breweries have stopped brewing special brands of beer and since June 15 have turned out just one standard brew. The breweries have fixed the minimum retail price at 3½ cents for a third of a quart. The general organization of the Wurtemberg saloon men has approved of the brewing of a single kind of beer as a measure calculated to avoid a temporary closing down of the saloons.

In the meantime, it is alleged that the method of distributing the 48 per cent. allotment of barley and malt is decidedly unfair to the breweries outside of Bavaria and Alsace-Lorraine, as, while the makers of beer in those districts receive their full allowance, the brewers in other parts of the Empire are not getting their share and their business is being damaged and in some cases the breweries are likely to be forced to shut down. These charges are brought out in detail in a communication send by Herr Funcke, president of the German Brewers' Association, to Federal Council, and printed in the Frankfurter Zeitung. Herr Funcke, after pointing out the extent of the discrimination in distribution, asks that the barley and malt in possession of the Government be distributed among the brewers on the basis of a percentage of 37.64 and that the 42,561 tons of malt placed at the disposition of the Bavarian brewers for the manufacture of beer for the army be returned to the Barley Trading Association in Berlin to be divided among the breweries really in need of malt. Herr Funcke's figures show that the actual distribution of barley and malt throughout the whole Empire of late has averaged only 37.64 per cent. of the pre-war consumption, instead of the 48 per cent. promised by the Government.

TRAGIC DEATH OF SCOTCH BAY FARMER

SCOTCH BAY, Man., Aug. 25.—A peculiarly distressing tragedy was revealed last Sunday in the discovery of the body of John Penny, a respectful resident of this place .The late Mr. Penny, who was 78 years of age, had recently suffered from a sunstroke, and when last Thursday, he fell and caught his arm in a twisted willow, he was unable to free himself. He had gone out alone, and as Mrs. Penny was visiting a son in Winnipeg, no one was home to search for the old gentleman when he failed to return. Not until the morning of the next day was anything peculiar noticed. Then one of Mr. Penny's sons, in passing through the farm, discovered his father's absence, and a search was immediately organized. The buildings and vicinity were searched by anxious neighbors but in vain, until on Sunday morning the party discovered the body of Mr. Penny, his arm locked in the underbrush and the earth about him torn in his struggles to extricate himself.

The deceased leaves a widow, three sons—William of this place, James, 71 Francis street, Winnipeg, and John, with the 221st battalion at Camp Hughes—and four daughters—Mrs. Dennisky, 574 Alexander avenue, Winnipeg; Mrs. J. Smith, Tipperary, Ireland; Mrs. Sommerville, Aberdeen, Scotland; Mrs. Macswean, Edinburgh, Scotland; and Mrs. Glass Norwood, Winnipeg.

The funeral was held Sunday afternoon, Mr. Penny being buried in a spot he had designated some time before his death.

Skin Deep Or Soul Deep

Outward Beauty Fades, but Inner Beauty Never Lessens.

The old proverb has it that "beauty is skin deep." But the action and thought of the majority of the passers-by shows how valuable an asset is even this thin, silken covering, lent to the fortunate person by a kindly nature. No wonder so many women desire beauty above all earthly gifts, so much so that they spend their time dressing and studying the part.

For it is a powerful weapon in gaining the joys and pleasures of life, in winning love, admiration, wealth, and rulership. The pretty baby is petted, the pretty girl wins the most attention, and the beautiful woman has the "soft places" of the earth at her command.

But the great trouble with the gift of the beauty that is only skin deep is that it is a fading and a passing possession. There comes a time when the attempt to hold it becomes all too evident to every eye, and then the gift, by itself, frequently proves itself to have been one of doubtful value.

While few care to say anything against the charm and the value of the beauty that is skin deep, there is good reason from any point of view in putting a little more emphasis on the art of enhancing this outer beauty by an inner beauty that may be called soul deep. Skin-deep beauty fades, as all its possessors sorrowfully know, that the soul-deep variety rather grows with the years, and has the immortality of all good qualities. It renders its possessor lovable in ways and at times when the outer beauty can do nothing to attract or to benefit. And while the outer beauty is something of a chance gift to the fortunate few, the inner beauty is a possession that any one may acquire. It may take work, but is not beauty worth the struggle?

Beauty is a great possession, but if one cannot have both forms of it, why not take what can be had and be thankful? If the skin-deep beauty is not within your power to attain cultivate the soul-deep variety, and in the long run when the person of the outer beauty is dropping behind in the race for love and admiration and leadership, the person of the beauty of soul is sure to be followed by a love and an admiration, and almost an adoration, that the higher qualities of mind invariably attract.

In these days of June brides and June graduates every one stands in smiling gladness before the wonderful beauty of the outer world. For the moment, any inquiry as to the depth of all this charm would seem to be the questionings of a belated Puritanism, but it is only the attempt to go on from glory to glory, till we have it in its fullest refulgence which is the truth. And the truth about persons and things is always beautiful.—Minneapolis Journal.

SOUVENIR BUGS ARE ARRESTED

Baseball Thefts Must Stop, Says Management of New York Yankees

There has been hesitancy about taking action that might antagonize the public, but the New York American League club, feeling pretty independent, recently went to the extreme of causing the arrest of several spectators who refused to surrender balls they had filched, and the petty thieves were haled into court and fined $5 each by a judge who might, had he exercised his full authority, have given them 30 days in jail.

Brought before the bar, the baseball stealers put up novel excuses for their thievery. One of the men arrested, said to be a rich business man, was very angry at the disgrace brought upon him. He had he said, merely taken the ball because he wanted it as a souvenir of a game that Walter Johnson had pitched. He objected to being labeled as a thief, yet he was that, no more and no less.

Doubtless man a fan feels that he has the same right to keep a baseball that comes his way that he has to beat a street car company out of a nickel fare—and we wonder if a club magnate ever did that? Perhaps not, because they all ride in automobiles, upon which tax to full valuation is paid, of course.

Taking a baseball hit into the grand stand is plain thievery, just as Bad morally as turning in a false assessment list or selling the patron of a ball park a seat when there is only standing room — or selling a scorecard.

Trying To Locate His Missing Wife

HUSBAND SAYS SHE IS THE MOST BEAUTIFUL WOMAN IN CANADA.

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 26.—George H. Alexander, of Toronto is in this city endeavoring to locate his wife, an English girl, whom he married in 1913. In January she accompanied another woman to Detroit, asking her husband's permission to go on the visit. She wrote affectionate letters from time to time to Mr. Alexander and asked for money. Then in May his letters to her and the money were returned to the husband, as Mrs. Alexander could not be located. Mr. Alexander went to Detroit and learned his wife had been arrested and had voluntarily agreed to leave the United States, going, she said to Hamilton, Canada.

Mr. Alexander fears for her sanity and refuses to believe she has done anything wrong. He is a Russian by birth and feels keenly the loss of his wife, whom he decaribes as the most beautiful woman in Canada.

At Detroit the immigration authorities declare the woman claimed she was never married to Alexander, but he says he can produce in Toronto the Russian priest who performed the ceremony.

Mrs. Alexander took the marriage certificate with her. Her Detroit address was 648 Woodward avenue, where her belongings are still held. In Toronto Mr. Alexander is an interpreter.

Postage Stamps Bacteria Ladden

Don't Lick Them, No Matter What Their Denomination.

Eternal vigilance is not only the price of liberty as our fathers knew it, liberty plain and unadorned, but recent scientific discoveries have added thereto the admonition that eternal vigilance is the price of freedom from many varieties of germs undreamt of by the fathers of the republic. We are now told to beware of the normal bacterial flora of postage stamps! The cry of alarm is raised by the New York Medical Record. Don't lick the stamps, no matter what their denomination. They may be bacteria laden, and under certain conditions may easily convey pathogenic types, especially colon diphtheria and tuberculosis bacillus. The writer of the article on these stamps that are afflicted or are under suspicion of harbouring bacterial flora advocates a movement "to have installed in all places dispensing postage stamps a moistening device of some kind," and says that this movement "could be started with beneficent results in the post offices.

THOUSAND ACRES WERE ON FIRE

A fire has been raging in the Haldimand Plains for some time, near Tweed. These plains, consisting of a thousand acres, are covered with a scrubby growth of trees, and produce large quantities of huckleberries, which parties drive miles to pick. It has never been under cultivation, and is known as the Huckleberry Plains. Farmers in the vinicity were out fighting the fire, as the fields of grain and buildings adjoining are in danger. It is stated that the greater part of the plains have been burned over.

George has become the darling precisely in those classes which formerly hated and despised him so that they could scarcely be civil to him when they met him, and at the dinner table and in the smoke-room poured out on him larger quantities of personal vituperation than any public man of his time has had to encounter. I can speak from personal experience of what Mr. Lloyd George had to endure in those pre-war days. Often in travelling I have seen men turn their backs when he appeared; and once I got sight of a man — it was around the Lake of Como — who shook his stick at him as he turned round the corner. Mr. Lloyd George is a sensitive though a courageous man, and he much prefers to be liked than hated. He bears no malice; he is absolutely free from vindictiveness. One of the most striking things I ever heard him say was that personal dislike or the appetite for revenge were among the most disturbing and refracting emotions of public life; and that he felt this so strongly that if ever he found any such feeling rising in his heart he stamped it out with an iron heel. And thus it was that even in the midst of the furious conflict over his historic budget you were not surprised to find a good old Tory like Colonel Mark Lockwood taking with him a friendly cup of tea, or munching the rye-bread which it will be remembered was one of the pieces of resistance in the great tariff controversy.

The secret of the hold Mr. Lloyd George has on the popular imagination is the impression he gives to everybody of that iron and inflexible courage, which makes him never count the cost whenever he has convinced himself that he ought to take a certain course. He told me once that when he was making up his mind about anything he passed through a hard, an anxious, and an unhappy time; but when once he had made up his mind, all care dropped from him as a mantle, and he then went on without any further worry, wherever the course he adopted might lead him. This was the kind of courage the man in the street knew was especially necessary in one who had to take the chief responsibility for the conduct of the war.

HOUR OF CONVERSION.

Another secret of the hold which Mr. Lloyd George has got of the imagination of the nation, is that almost from the first hour of the war he seemed to be the first, and except for Lord Kitchener, the only one who grasped its gigantic difficulties. I do not know whether he began the war like that—few people did, especially few civilians. Mr. Lloyd George's hour of conversion came, I think, during his first visit to the front. I remember well the first time he returned from that expedition. His companions were Lord Reading and Sir Charles Henry. I remember that all three spoke of this adventure—now sufficiently repeated as to have become common-place—in a whisper, as if it were something so new, so terrible, so unexampled, as not to be mentioned above a breath. Lord Reading, who has seen much of the world, began life, you will remember, by running away to sea, like so many another adventurous and high-spirited English boy; but he avowed that never had he gathered so many strange, memorable, striking impressions as he had during this visit. One little incident I may now repeat without indiscretion: When Lord Reading got into the motor car that was to take him to some ponit in the front, the chauffeur—grimy I have no doubt and in overalls, of whom doubtless he would have taken little notice—dropped the observation that they had met before in very different surroundings. "I am Bernstein," said the grimy chauffeur—Bernstein, one of the greatest of modern French dramatists—now taking the duty of a chauffeur!

TAKEN TO THE FRONT.

When Mr. Lloyd George was taken to the front he set to work to find out things for himself with that extraordinary promptitude which is part of his character. We met all kinds and sorts and conditions of men; he spoke to General after General. By the way, I may here interject the remark that Mr. Lloyd George knows French very well; you remember how he learned—from a French dictionary with his old uncle marking out the words they didn't know with a piece of chalk on sole leather. He devours French novels—especially when he is tired; and can repeat every scene and almost every word in them if they strike his imuncomfortable shyness of the British-uncomfortable shyess of the British-er overcomes him until he gets to know a man; and then he gets on all right. A few words are sufficient for him indeed in any language, such is the extraordinary quickness of his intelligence. He gets quite easily through a trip in Germany with a knowledge of fewer than a hundred German words. Some of the questions he asked must have been a bit embarassing to his French friends; for he grasped the difficulty of trench warfare on the spot; and he saw all it would mean in delay, in difficulty, in finding men and munitions. And when he came back he said at once to all his friends that it was going to be a long war and a difficult war, and that we must put all our strength into it if we were going to win it. "Yes," I said, "we must set our teeth." "Ay," was his reply, "and perhaps tighten our belts."

WAS SHOCKED.

This conversation took place in the November of 1914. I was shocked; I was even a little incredulous when Mr. Lloyd George spoke to me like that—remember, I am talking of nearly two years ago.

Probably he perceived that, for he reminded me that by temperament he was a sanguine man, an incurable optimist, and that if he spoke thus pessimistically—it was because he had proofs of what he said. It was as far back as that, too, that Mr. Lloyd George spoke to me of the part that big guns and innumerable shells would play in the war. But the big guns were not coming nor the big shells. In these tones he spoke to me whenever I saw him; until at last one morning in the month of March, 1915, he drew such a picture of what part munitions would play in this war, that I could stand it no longer; and at a St. Patrick's Day celebration among my own constituents, I made a speech to which I gave myself the title, "Shells, Shells, Shells." How commonplace, how obvious, it all seems now; yet how hard it was to get it into the mind of the nation—at least into the minds of her rulers—a year ago. The story of the Ministry of Munitions will let the world know the shameful and affrighting truth some day; but this is not the moment to wash our dirty linen.

ANOTHER REASON.

Another of the reasons why Mr. Lloyd George was called to the War Office by the voice of the nation, was that the people realized that he had a full grasp and conception of the war from every point of view. Indeed to hear him talk about the war is an almost uncanny experience. For you listen to a lesson in strategy, a lesson in geography, a lesson in military history, a lesson in political warfare which might do credit to a man who had spent all his life in a military school and had been lecturing to young soldiers for years. And this from the little Welsh attorney! I cannot account for it; but there it is. Others have formed the same impression of this strange and unexpected genius for grasping war problems, which I had formed independently.

CONTINUOUS WORK.

What sort of a life does this man lead who has responsibilities so heavy? It is a life of continuous work. It begins early in the morning, sometimes too early — for now and then over-work and over-anxiety interfere with his sleep, and at five or six o'clock he is staring awake. He then turns to some of the papers beside his bed, and begins his work when he ought to be asleep. In olden days he had always his Saturday and Sunday at Walton Teath; and on Saturdays he played golf all day long with the same keenness as he gives to every other occupation. I have often said that though I like his company always, I prefer any other partner at golf to him; he is so keen that he makes his partner nervous—especially when a match depends on a short putt. Now he rarely gets to Walton Heath till late on Saturday. Sometimes he is very tired; sometimes that extraordinary power of recuperation he has finds him fresh even at the end of a week. He sees his friends at certain hours; at others he throws himself into a hammock or sits across two chairs, and makes up for his arrears in sleep. If you want to see him at his best you must go to Walton Heath and watch him among his friends. The simplicity and modesty which he retains amid all his dazzling changes of fortune have left him the same pleasant unpretentious genial companion he was in the days of his obscurity; and accounts largely for the personal popularity he enjoys. Walton Heath is one of the best places for sleep in the United Kingdom, and even the day and a helf he spends there weekly make a great difference to him.

SUCH IS THE MAN.

Such is the man on whose shoulders is borne the heavy burden of this war. The energy, the cheerfulness and the courage which he has retained through all these trying years, justify the confidence the nation has in his power to win through. He is fortune's favourite child; and it is just his luck—though luck has had little to do with it—that from the moment he entered the War Office the turn of the military tide has come; and we all take up our papers with the hope and almost the certainty that it will bring us news of another milestone passed on the road to resounding Victory.

FOR CANADIAN PORTS.

Active Campaign by Credit Men's Association.

An active campaign is being carried out by the Canadian Credit Men's Association with the object of urging on Canadian importers the desirability of routing Canadian imports through Canadian ports, on the ground that such routing helps to build up Canadian trade. The members of the Association in their recent national council meeting in Vancouver unanimously resolved that wherever possible they should give instructions for such import as they controlled to be routed via Canadian ocean ports.

Old Sol Shrinking, Heat Being Squeezed Out of Luminary

If we could build up a solid column of ice from the earth to the sun two miles and a half in diameter, spanning the intervening distance of 93,000,000 miles, and if the sun should concentrate his entire power upon it, it would dissolve in a single second, according to a calculation made by Professor Young.

To produce this enormous amount of heat would require the hourly burning of a layer of anthracite coal more than 19 feet thick over the entire surface of the sun. If the sun were composed of solid coal and we derived our heat from the burning of that coal, the sun would burn out in less than 5,000 years. Since the earth is millions of years old, the sun cannot be burning. Its heat must be generated in some more persistent way.

The great physicist Helmholtz was the first to explain satisfactorily what keeps the sun hot. The sun is not burning; it is heated to the glowing point, like a piece of white hot iron. Helmholtz found that if we suppose the sun to be contracting by only 260 feet a year we would receive our present amount of heat.

In other words, heat is being literally squeezed out of the sun. Professor Newcomb estimated that when the squeezing process has continued for about 7,000,000 years, the sun will be one-half its present size.

Rev. Aaron Saltzman Has Been Elected to The Hebrew Congregation of This City

Will Conduct Services Each Friday Evening and Saturday Morning of Each Week Together With a Special Lecture on Sunday—Will Also Establish a School for the Benefit of the Hebrew Children of Peterboro

COMMERCIAL LAST EVENING

Rev. Aaron Saltzman has been elected to minister to the spiritual needs of the Hebrew congregation of Peterborough. The Hebrew population is represented by about thirty families.

REV. AARON SALTZMAN, who has been elected to minister to the spiritual needs of the Hebrew congregation of Peterborough.

morning in the Woodmen of the World Hall until such time as more suitable and children. Services will be held each Friday evening and Saturday quarters are provided. Rev. Mr. Saltzman will also give a lecture each Sunday commencing to-morrow. The subject for to-morrow will be "The Change in Our Life." Services will be conducted each Friday evening from seven until eight o'clock and on Saturday morning from eight until ten o'clock.

In addition to this the Rev. Aaron Saltzman will conduct a school for the benefit of the Hebrew children of the city on five days of each week, Saturday and Sunday excluded. This school will be conducted along lines similar to that of the regular public schools of the city. The first of the services under the ministration of the Rev. Mr. Saltzman was accounted for last evening. A large number were present. The President of the congregation is Mr. A. Low of this city.

The Rev. Mr. Saltzman is a native of Russia. He is thirty years of age and has been in Canada and the United States for the past eight years. He was educated in the Old Country. Prior to coming to Peterborough, Mr. Saltzman was located in Kansas City Missouri.

The Hebrew congregation of this city hope to establish more permanent quarters within the next year.

Asked as to how he liked Peterborough, Mr. Saltzman said it was too soon to express an opinion. He had only been here a couple of weeks, but what he had seen of it appealed to him strongly. He hoped that he would enjoy his stay here, and that his labours would be productive of much good. This is not his first sojourn in Canada, having spent two years in New Brunswick and some other parts of the Dominion, where he made many friends. Mr. Saltzman has many pleasant recollections of his stay in Canada, and while in Peterborough hopes to meet with a large measure of success.

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading, containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

August 25th, 1916.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—For a good few years I have been a regular subscriber to your paper "The Peterborough Examiner," and I believe it to be a paper that appreciates truth and justice. Believing so I would like to bring before you, a scene that was enacted this morning about half-past and a quarter to seven just opposite my house, and hear your opinion of the same, as I don't know of any branch of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, in this city, that I could otherwise state the case to, so in the cause of humanity I take the responsibilty to voice my opinion to the people if you think it deserves a place in your paper. While preparing breakfast for the workers of my family, two of whom are girls, I was attracted by the piteous mewing of a kitten. I looked out and say it on a step of the opposite house from me and felt sorry for the poor mite. A few minutes after the owner of the said house came out and kicked it two or three times hard across his lawn. I was about to remonstrate but my husband said not to. However, the said man must have heard my remarks as I thought, for as the little thing came creeping back again he enticed it up on to his verandah towards the door, so we thought he was sorry for the kicks it had got, and was taking it inside. Instead, however, he caught the poor defenceless little kitty and choked it till he thought enough, and then went down to his side walk and pitched it over to the other side of the road, where the poor kitty lay struggling and kicking, (girls going past to their employment witnessing the cruelty of the act) turned away shuddering, saying as they past, that is a cruel business. Well the said man sat over on his chair watching it and seeing the poor thing struggle up on to its fore-paws, went and got a thick stick and going over gave the poor litle defenceless kitty quite a number of hard whacks on the head. Imagine the horror of the people who were passing to and fro to their work in the meantime. I know for one, one of my girls who witnessed part of his proceedings, made her faint and she could eat no breakfast before going to work. What I want to know is this: "Is that sort of conduct permissible in this city?" As a progressive city I have admired it within this last seven years, but where cruelty to animals is concerned I am afraid it is sadly behind in the prevention of, as I have witnessed many cases just as a casual observer, where had they happened in Scotland, would have been in court.

Trusting to hear your advice on this case, I am,

Yours Respectfully,
MRS. WM. THOMPSON,
165 Stewart St., City.

LINDSAY HAS A LADY BLACKSMITH

While Many Girls Have Turned Farmers Down Belleville Direction

BELLEVILLE, Aug. 25.—"I was given the afternoon off to come to Belleville to get some feed and grist," said a bright young lady the other day who is giving able assistance on her home farm in harvesting the crop. The scarcity of men in the country to do the farm work has called out a large number of women in Hastings and Prince Edward Counties, who are apparently ready and willing to take up these added duties in order that they may leave more men free to fight the Empire's battles. The same can truthfully be said of Victoria, Durham, Northumberland and other counties.

Lindsay possibly can go one better than most places, for this thriving town boasts of a young lady who has taken her place in a blacksmith shop, having donned the apron and taken up work at the forge, where she swings the anvil to good purpose. In another town in this district a young girl has taken a chauffeur's place and every day may be seen driving tourists to and from points of interest.

With the grain ripening so fast and coming so close upon the immense crop of hay, many farmers at the present time are sorely in need of help and are offering wages that were never before heard of on the farm. However, prices are good for their produce and it is the only way out of their dilemma.

In an Ontario county farm, it is stated that the farmers have discussed making a raid upon the factories, or rather of requesting them to close down for a few days and let their employes assist in saving the crops. The question of co-operation, which is opened up by such a suggestion, presents a wide field for thought.

To make a faded cotton dress pure white, boil it in water which has half a cupful of cream of tartar to two gallons of water.

"NIFTY ANNIE" IN THE GREAT PUSH

BY CANADIAN OVERSEAS

The history of "Hefty Annie" was told to me by a wounded Tommy.

The young newcomer to the billet sat up with a start and stared in wonderment while the ground rocked under him. "Needn't be alarmed, sonny," quoth an old timer as he unconcernedly lighted a "fag." "That's only Hefty Annie, doing a cough and spit at the Boches. Never heard big guns barking before, I s'pose?"

The youngster admitted that he had not. "Well you'll soon get used to thim here, and then you won't mind thim no more'n if they was your mother singing y' to sleep. It's fine music m' boy, fine music when it's made by your own side and damned unwelcome when it's made by the other." With this the old timer made himself comfortable and whiffed his "fag" with great enjoyment.

"Hefty Annie" lay out in the fields near by, cunningly screened from the keen eyes of the hawk-men from over the barbed-wire border, who were always trying to locate her whereabouts.

In official documents this instrument of death is described as howitzer 15 in. mark—and so on, but the more understanding minds of the men who have expended much loving care on her, think of her as "Annie," and a creature with a soul. "Annie" is not only "hefty" herself, but she will respond to no weaklings nor those slow of foot. When she moves her train spreads out in considerable length along the roadway. A huge petrol tractor leads the van, then comes "Annie" herself on a special carriage, robed in tarpaulins; after her roll the "pill-boxes," otherwise the ammunition waggons (so called because some one chalked "Pills for the Kaiser" on the dull grey sides); then follow the wireless truck and sundry other vehicles, conveying the various needs of "Hefty Annie." Alongside slides a swift grey motor car in which ride the officers, who look after "Annie" in action. Scattered about the waggons are various men, stalwart fellows in khaki, who let loose humorous sallies at the passers-by and make merry in general, not giving a thought to the fact that they are bound on a service that shall perhaps lead them to death.

At last, "Somewhere in France," "Hefty Annie" is carefully erected and made ready for action. First the bed plates are laid, which form the base of it, then with tackles "Annie" is put on her foundation, swiftly, deftly, and correctly the work continues.

"All ready for action, sir," shouted a subaltern, poking his head into a hole and addressing some one down underground. "Righto, what's your full range, did you say?" "Fifteen miles or a bit more, sir," replied the subaltern. Thus does "Hefty Annie" begin her reign of terror. Some men hang dizzily in the air in search of her, while other men, far forward and hidden in lairs, "obserb" and telephone back what happens each time "Hefty Annie" speaks. Just behind her a busy little telegraph-room is kept going, and in response to requests that come through this, "Hefty Annie" raises or lowers her long "snout" or cranes it to the right or the left, seeking out the place where she can do most mischief.

At intervals she coughs a deep, hoarse "hoof" that ripples its way through her whole body.

Sometimes she does this just once or twice, at other times quite a long fit seizes her. As she coughs she belches forth great mouthfuls of bright yellow flame, from the midst of which is ejected a huge shell that shrieks viciously away to a place so far off, that only the observers aloof and in the lairs ahead can get even the dimmest sight of it.

Of late "Annie's" cough has become worse and more incessanst. But it is music in the ears of thousands of men in khaki, who are relying upon the aid of "Hefty Annie" and her sisters to accomplish successfully the big push.

The Gospel of Good Butter

Peterborough Creamery Called Up From Michigan for a Supply of its Favorite By-Product

It appears that this gentleman had been spending his summer vacation in the vicinity of Peterborough, some time ago, and was so delighted with the rich quality and flavor of the butter with which he was served that, on his return home, he longed for more. And so he forwarded his order, and was quite satisfied to pay the duty, and other extra charges, to get a supply of Peterborough Creamery for his own home table.

Will a few more American clergymen kindly spend their summer vacations in this neighborhood, and help spread the glad tidings of the Gospel of Good Butter in Peterborough? It's not opinions on church services; not the sacredness of one's creed, but the quality of one's bread and butter that often makes a man's life.

FIRE RELIEF IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

The Northern Ontario Fire Relief Committee has opened a clothing receiving station at 40 Melinda Street, Toronto, where all donations of clothing will be received, sorted, and shipped to the points in the burned areas where most needed. Several merchants have given qualities of slow-moving stock in the nature of garments slightly out of style. These are most acceptable.

In response to an urgent appeal for clothing for families in the neighborhood of New Liskeard who were burnt out in the fires of Wednesday morning, all donations of this kind received at the committee's station in Toronto were shipped north.

These new fires have left hundreds more people without food, clothing or shelter, and as much warm apparel will be required by the fire sufferers in all districts as the fall and the winter months approach, further donations of this nature are urgently added. Mr. F. D. Tolchard, secretary of the committee, Royal Bank Building, Toronto, will be glad to arrange for free transportation of clothing upon request.

With The Boy Scouts

Arrangements have been made, whereby the flags which have flown over the Canadian Boy Scouts' Hut at the front will be preserved as mementos of the war and of the share that the Boy Scouts of Canada had in it. This action was suggested by Sir Robert Baden-Powell, and was heartily approved of by the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts' Association. At the end of the war the flags will be sent back to the Canadian Scout Headquarters. It is quite probable that they will be used as challenge flags for presentation to deserving troops.

The death, recently, of Capt. the Hon. Roland Philipps, who was killed in action at the front, removes one of the most gallant members of the great Brotherhood of Boy Scouts. Capt. Phillips was, in every sense, a "good Scout." It was due mainly to his efforts that many troops sprang into existence throughout the British Isles. The point about his life, which should commend itself to every Scout in the world, is that throughout his career as a "Scout" the ten Scout Laws were to him, the guide in all that he did; therefore, he knew what he was talking about when he urged every Scout, whatever his work or place in the world might be, to stick to his promise and carry out those laws.

"Don't take tips" is the caption of an article which appeared in one of the recent issues of the "Scout," the official organ of the Boy Scouts. The warning note in this item is that one cannot do a good turn for another in a really friendly way if one is thinking of the 'tip' that is to follow. This very lofty ideal has always been urged upon Canadian Boy Scouts by their Scoutmasters and other officers, and while some may be wont to accept tips for doing odd jobs the average Canadian Scout will not accept a tip for doing a good turn.

There are 100,000 ex-Scouts in the British Army of to-day. This information comes to hand in a recent newspaper interview with Sir Robert Baden-Powell. The British Navy also has its quota of Boy Scouts. In this connection Sir Robert said: "Admiral Beatty and the late Admiral Hood, who lost his life in the battle of Jutland, have testified to the efficiency of our methods through their experience of the ex-Scouts in the Royal Navy. The influence of these boys has told enormously on the fleet, according to Admiral Hood. Generals in the army have said the same thing concerning ex-Scouts who have served under them."

Sir Robert added: "Our boys are trained for peace work, for good citizenship, which is the basis for success in whatever career they may ultimately adopt. To train them solely for soldiering would make them too much a part of a great machine. We try to make a boy more or less dependent upon himself—in a word, self-reliant."

CHEMONG PARK LADIES RAISE $43 FOR THE PRISONERS OF WAR FUND

The patriotic tea given by the ladies of Chemong Park on Mr. Hopwood's island on Thursday afternoon proved a most enjoyable and successful affair. The proceeds netted $43.00, which the secretary, Miss Denne, will forward to the central fund for the relief of Canadian prisoners of war in Germany.

There were seven tables of bridge, Mrs. (Dr.) King winning first prize and Mrs. J. A. Aylmer second. Mrs. Baldwin donated the prizes. The cake presented by Mrs. Wolfe, was won by Mrs. W. R. Morris. During the afternoon Capt. Pearson, recently invalided home, gave a very interesting talk on the life and conditions of the men at the front. Adjt. McElheney moved a vote of thanks to Capt. Pearson, whose address was greatly appreciated.

Dub Really Has as Much Fun as Star Golfer When Two Meet on Green and Try Their Skill

When the newcomer takes up the game of golf he usually asks: "How long shall it be before I can play sufficiently well to enjoy the game?" The general reply is to the effect that given ordinary aptitude for the pastime they will get as much fun out of it in two or three months time as they will at any period in their golfing lives. Opinions may differ as to the correctness of this view, but it is sure that anyone with a "bit of sport" in him finds learning quite as fascinating as the realization of early hopes.

Of course, "learning to play" is only a compartive term: It is understood that there is no finality to the process. A player who is quite an expert in some circles, is only a novice in others. As an example of this, a golfer was talking once to George Duncan about a certain player with a handicap. Duncan interrupted by saying: 'Ach! you don't call a three handicap man a good player! Why, I give some of them half a stroke a hole.' So everything suffers by comparison.

There you are. The best players in many clubs would be just novices to a player of Duncan's calibre, so that as practically all amteurs are novices in the eyes of some one, there is no more necessity for a twenty-four man to be ashamed of his handicap when playing a single figure expert than there is for the latter to be perky because he is giving away strokes.

With the exception of those giants of the game we all have to accept strokes from some one at times. Our mutual friend, the beginner, may take courage by recollecting this, and consequently his friend Jones, who is going to pilot him round on the first occasion and who boasts a handicap of ten, is not such a marvel after all, although it does seem wonderful how he whacks the ball such a tremendous distance-occasionally.

Some one actually said not long ago that the duffer probably got more fun out of his game than the scratch player, because if the latter ran up a seven in the course of a round or duffed one or two shots, all his interest in the struggle was gone. Whether he win or not would not console him for a bad round. He was out of form and so on. Whereas the duffer would be extremely happy if he accidentally hit two or three good drives and managed to vanquish a bigger duffer than himself, even though the respective scores were in the region of 150.

There is no doubt that the lower our handicaps the more exacting we become regarding our play. We are less interested in the mere fact of winning than in whether we are playing up to our form. So long as the beginner has attained sufficient skill to get a fair number of his tee shots away and can get 150 yards or so occasionally with his iron he should enjoy his golf quite as well as any one. And there is no denying that the majority do. A few weeks' practice will enable any ordinarily active man to attain this end and until he can do as much as indicated it might be well for him to refrain from attempting to play matches. Rather cultivate a good swing and learn how to pick up the ball in a proper manner—not to be satisfied with any sort of shot so long as he gets the ball along.

A lot of disappointment is in store for the would-be golfer who has not sufficient patience to learn but persists in what he call his natural style. He should get rid of this idea at the outset, although the correct methods seem at first so much more ineffective.

Voice of The People

Dear Editor,—Having been threatened with legal action, and retracted what I said, in regard to the remarks I made to our worthy Mayor at the meeting of the Property committee last Thursday evening, I take this opportunity of stating that I have been misunderstood in regard to my statements, and I am extremely sorry if I have in any way injured anyone actively engaged in the plumbing business in the City of Peterborough, and if the by-law is lived up to I give them all the more credit.

And, dear Editor, I take this chance to demand a meeting in regard to the plumbing by-law in justice to the master plumbers and ratepayers and your humble servant.

KAISER DAZZLED THE GREEKS WITH PLEDGES

Why part of the Greek people are fighting on the side of the Entente Allies against the Bulgarians and another part are hanging back in a very uncertain attitude, was explained by Dr. Petros C. Constantinides, himself a Canadian by virtue of 60 years' residence in the country, but a Greek of the Greeks in spirit, an authority on Greek history and hater of everything German. The Greeks fight the Bulgarians because they hate them worse than they hate anything else in the world except the Turks, says the doctor; and they, as a nation, do not side in with the Allies because they have a last lingering hope that the Russians will not take Constantinople, which has already been promised to Greece by Germany as a realization of Greece's ancient dream of a larger empire.

"The principal idea of the Greek people since they became a nation has been to be free from the Turkish yoke—to secure for themselves and to consolidate into one great nation—the whole of the ancient Byzantine Empire," said the doctor. "We have been taught to think, to pray, to labour to that end. All the time we feared Russian aggrandization. Russia wanted as her capital the city of Constantinople—the very city which the Greeks had set their heart upon. Other great powers conspired to keep Turkey intact, and the Greek people learned the art of keeping quiet and biding their time.

"Why, then, you ask, has Greece taken no part in the present war? Unfortunately, the present King is not a Greek. Our country for the past twenty years has been ruled by Germans. Learning the ideas, the hopes of the Greek people, they brought money and bribed the Greek King and a lot of public men. They said: 'If we succeed in the present war we will give you Constantinople.' The Kaiser said: 'My beloved sister will be your Empress, and she will sit, a ruler of the Greek people, on the throne of Constantine the Great.'

"And so the Greek people are still waiting." All the inducements offered them by the Entente Allies are as nothing compared with the prize of prizes on which their hearts are set—the city of Constantinople. To-day they are losing heart. They have a last lingering hope that Russia will not succeed in her ambitions; but it is slowly dying. If Russia succeeds then perhaps the Greeks will fight someone—they will fight with the Anglo-Saxons who once helped them to secure their freedom from the hated Turks, and with whose cause they, as a nation, sympathize."

Ex-Aldermen Accused of Offering $1,000 Bribe

He Denies Charge—Montreal May Have Another Scandal in Civic Affairs.

MONTREAL, Aug. 25.—Another alleged municipal scandal was unearthed yesterday at the City Hall, when Raoul Bolte, Superintendent of Purchases and Supplies, accused ex-Alderman J. H. Lavanger of having offered him a bribe of $1,000 if he would put through a requisition for drills and other supplies costing $12,000. Ex-Alderman Lavanger denied the accusation.

The evidence was brought out at the investigation begun by the Board of Control yesterday into the attempt to sell a lot of second-hand drills to the corporation at a price higher than new drills could be bought for.

C. H. Martin, who wanted the city to take the second-hand drills off his hands, stated in reply to a series of questions put by Mr. P. E. Lamarche, City Attorney, that he had discounted a note for $700 for Controller Cote.

A FAR AWAY POST FOR KUROPATKIN

The report that General Alexi Kuropatkin has been appointed Governor General of Turkestan, says the Philadelphia Press, marks the passing of another great military figure into practical retirement. Like von Moltke, like French, like the Grand Duke Nicholas, Kuropatkin has been removed from high military command because in the judgment of his government he has failed. But Kuropatkin's case is distinctive because it is the second time he has been retired in the midst of a great campaign.

The first time was in the Russo-Japanese war. For four years Kuropatkin had been Minister of War, and at the outbreak of the war he was made commander in chief of the armies in the field. The disastrous Manchurin campaign was begun under his direction and continued until the Russian defeat at Mukden, when he was removed from command. Though neutral opinion exonerated him from a great deal of the blame for that disaster he was permitted to liye in retirement until last summer when the Russian armies were retreating with all speed before the advance of Von Hindenberg and Von Mackensen through Poland and Galicia.

Then Kuropatkin was given his second chance. The Grand Duke, despite his masterful tactics in retreat, was removed to the Caucasus front, and the Tsar himself took the supreme command. The most vital point along the long fighting line at that time seemed to be Riga against which Von Hindenberg was striving with all his power in an offensive that was believed to have the capture of Perograd for its ultimate objective. It is indicative of the change of feeling towards Kuropatkin that he was entrusted with the command of the Riga sector.

It is not on record how Kuropatkin failed, if he failed at all. Riga did not fall. Von Hindenberg was held along approximately the same lines that he occupied on Feb. 26th, when Kuropatkin assumed the command. Since the beginning of the present Russian offensive Kuropatkin's armies have fought a number of local engagements successfully, and in March made a strong effort to break the enemy's lines. It may the failure of this effort that marked Kuropatkin out for retirement but it is not clear how Kuropatkin was any more to blame than any of the other army group commanders, all of whom excepting Brusiloff, failed to pierce the enemy's line.

Brusiloff receives from the Tsar a sword of the order of St. George, ornamented with diamonds, while Kuropatkin gets an appointment to a Russian province to make way for a younger man like Brusiloff. The great strategist, veteran of 50 years of military service, once an international authority on tactics, has probably led his last army.

MAN FOUND IN BOX CAR

Says He is Michael Ryan, but Police Can Discover Little About Him.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 25.—His face gaunt and his body reduced to a mere skeleton through lack of nourishment, a man who gives his name as Michael Ryan, and apparently is about sixty years old, was taken from a Michigan Central box car here after having been confined in it for five days. Ryan is a mystery to the authorities. He refuses to talk about himself, and at times pears to be mentally unbalanced. Just where he came from is not known. The car he was found in came from Indianapolis. It is believed that he ran away from his home to go to Chicago. From remarks dropped it was gathered that he made a mistake in trains. It is likely he will be sent to jail for thirty days on a vagrancy charge pending further investigation.

PROSPECT OF NEW FACTORY.

Niagara Falls Ratepayers to be Asked to Ratify Conditions

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 25.—The Perfection Tire & Motor Co., Limited, manufacturers of automobile tires and mechanical rubber goods, will erect a factory in this city, providing the ratepayers ratify a by-law which will be presented to them in three weeks. The by-law provides that the city furnish the company with power at $10 a horse-power for a period of ten years, also give the company a fixed assessment for this time. One hundred hands will be employed at the outset of operations.

"Is he rich enough to keep an automobile and a yacht?" "Yes; he is even richer than that. He keeps a lawyer."

Lakefield Man Home from Old 2nd Battalion

Corp. Roy Macdonald, son of J. J. Macdonald of this place, who went overseas with the 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Contingent, arrived home on Sunday last. Corp. Macdonald was one of the escorts in charge of a party of men suffering from shell shock and men discharged on account of wounds. Quite a number of the men were insane. The party came over on the steamship Olympic which sailed from England on July 10th and reached Halifax on July 16th, making the passage in five days. When the first contingent went over it was twenty-three days making the passage. Corp. Macdonald looks very fit, but has a slight limp caused by an injury to his knee received while entering a trench. Up to the time he was injured he had seen considerable service in the trenches and took part in the big battles of Ypres, Festubert and Givenchy, coming through with hardly a scratch. At the present time there are only about fifty of the original members of the battalion serving in the ranks, all the rest being either killed or wounded. Corp. Macdonald received his injury last October and spent eleven weeks in the hospital at Folkstone, England. His injury was of such a character that he was unable to go back to the trenches and was detailed for light duty around the hospital. He has to report back to England for duty by Sept. 20th. Corp. MacDonald received a warm welcome from his many friends in the village. — Lakefield News.

HOW LIEUT. MACNACHTAN.

Promotion Comes to Sergeant of Battery in the Field.

Cobourg, Aug. 26.— Sergeant Edmund L. MacNachtan, son of Lieut.-Colonel, Neil F. MacNachtan, C.V.O., when on duty with his battery in the trenches was recently called up and informed that he had been gazetted "in the field" as a Lieutenant, and posted to a howitzer battery, Major White commanding.

Lieut. MacNachtan was an officer in the 10th Brigade. Before enlisting in August, 1914, he assisted the Officer Commanding the Field Battery (Lieut.-Col. Ralston) while in Cobourg, and until the battery arrived in Valcartier. The complement of officer being made up he resigned his commission and enlisted in the battery, and was at once promoted a Sergeant.

Defender of Kut-el-Amara, Now Prisoner of Turks, Ousted From Heritage by Birth of a Baby Boy

Major-General Townshend Would Have Succeeded to Estates and Title on Death of Viscount Townshend of Raynham, If Child Had Not Arrived—Distinguished Soldier First Gained Fame at Time of Chitral Rebellion in India

BORN—To Sir John James Dudley Stuart Townshend, Viscount Townshend of Raynham, Norfolk, and Baron Townshend of Lynn Regis, and Gladys Ethel Gwendolen Eugenie, his wife, on May 13—a son.

This simple announcement published in the daily papers and the society journals of London recently, created more than passing comment among the gossips who wagged their heads wisely, discussed the affair more or less openly, and speculated on the why and wherefore of things that had been or that were to come.

First of all it announced the coming of a new heir to one of England's leading families.

Secondly, it proclaimed the birth of a child after eleven sluggard years of wedlock had dragged their course to one of Britain's peers who had prayed long and earnestly that a son might be given to perpetuate his lineage.

And finally—and this to all was important—it dealt a death blow to what dreams of rank and power might have been cherished by Major General Charles Vere Ferras Townshend, C.B., D.S.O., the gallant defender of Kut-el-Amara, and, at present, a prisoner of the Turks.

For he was the next in line, and on the death of the present holder would have succeeded to the title, and the estates that accompany it.

But though this soldier could battle the enemy in the face of greatest chances; could withstand the privations of severest siege and acquit himself honorably under the most adverse conditions, he found himself defeated and utterly put to rout before the crying babe who gazed wonderingly from his cradle upon the big world around him and wondered what it was all about.

Townshend could swallow the bitter pill of defeat at Kut-el-Amara, although it galled him sorely; but this, the most unkindest cut of all, swept away rank, fortune and future, at a single blow.

HAD GIVEN UP HOPE.

The birth of Viscount Raynham, as the young heir-presumptive to the marquessate has been christened by his parents, created more of a furore among the cognoscenti of London society from the fact that the parents had themselves long ago given up all hope of a family. Sir John succeeded to the title in 1899 upon the death of his father and six years later married Gladys Ethel Gwendolen, eldest daughter of Thomas Sutherst, barrister-at-law.

The married life of the Townshends was a happy one. He was devoted to her; and she, charming and cultivated, devoted herself to him and to literature, which she had adopted as an avocation early in girlhood. As a child she wrote verses and stories. Later, she turned her attention to stagecraft, writing, and even staging her own plays. "The Novice" is remembered from the fact that she not only wrote it but directed and enacted the leading role. "In the King's Garden," a volume of collected verses, won her praise from leading critics throughout England.

But the married happiness of the couple was married by one sorrow. Each desired most ardently that a child come to bless their household.

And that was denied them.

THE DEFENDER OF KUT.

Major General Charles Vere Ferrars Townshend, who for 143 days defended Kut-el-Amara against all the Turkish advances after the advance on Bagdad had failed, won first fame in 1895 at the time of the Chitral rebellion. Chitral, be it known, is a province in British India, which includes the territory of Swat, famed through a certain newspaper verse which once celebrated the demise of ith Akhoond. It is on the Chitral river, a tributary of the Kabul, and is one of the spots which Kipling celebrated in his ballads and verses in years agone. Lower Chitril enjoyed undisturbed independence until 1894, when the English residents found themselves in the centre of a native uprising. There was a handful of British troops there, in charge of Townshend.

As in the past twelve months he met the situation squarely. For long weeks he withstood a siege of the maddened natives while through the Swat and Gilgat valleys relief reinforcements made their way to his rescue. It finally was accomplished gloriously with the complete annihilation of the revolutionists. Townshend had won his spurs.

Since the outbreak of the great war the man had been too troubled to worry whether or not he were to be cut off from his entailment by the birth of an heir to his predecessor. When the British Indian military authorities decided upon an expedition against Bagdad in 1915, one under General Nixon set out. Turkish forces were rapidly driven back until Townshend who commanded the advance, was within 15 miles of his goal. On November 26 he was decisively defeated by an overwhelming attack, the Turks being augmented by Arabian volunteers, who left the British at the last moment and fought against them.

There was one thing to do—retreat. That Townshend did.

Gathering his men together he beat it back along the Tigris, covering a hundred miles to the southeast until he came upon Kut-el-Amara, a little town of 6,000 inhabitants. Four Turkish infantry divisions and some thousands of tribesmen pursued him, and less than ten miles separated the two when safety was reached.

Kut-el-Amara was reached on December 3rd. The next day the Turkish commander sent a demand for surrender. Townshend, with due ceremony, practically told him to go to the devil, and the siege was on.

To make his position secure the British commander entrenched a position on a peninsula formed by a loop of the river, 3,200 yards from north to south, and 1,700 yards wide. Realizing that he was in for a prolonged siege he sought to dispose of his cavalry. Two days later, all except one squadron made a sortie at daybreak and succeeded in cutting their way through the enemy, arriving safely at Ali Gharbi after a continued flight in which however they suffered many casualties. The next day the Turkish forces completely surrounded Kut-el-Amara.

There was no delay once the Turkish forces prepared for action. From the west, north and south east, the heavy batteries belched forth their fire. All day a hurricane of shells rained upon Kut, stopping only when Turkish columns of infantry swept on in assault. The British bridgehead detachment was beaten back but the second line held firm. That night, fearing the future, Townshend saw to it that the only bridge was destroyed.

All possible communication with the outside world was cut off.

The first day's fighting showed progress for the Turks. Confident in their ability to capture Kut and crush the sturdy little band of fighters they renewed their assault attacks at daybreak. Through that night and the night that followed attack succeeded attack. During those two days the besiegers advanced their trenches until they were within 600 yards of the outskirts of the village. Then under a terrific artillery fire they devoted their efforts to strengthening their works with sand bags and timbers. Ten days passed. At the the end of that time the British had driven back their opponents to a distance of 250 yards, had killed many of them in hand to hand conflicts and had suffered little loss themselves.

By this time the Turkish forces came to the conclusion that while they might have a nutcracker formation. Kut-el-Amara was going to be an exceedingly tough nut to crack. They had in fact proven it to their entire satisfaction. They appealed for reinforcements. To their aid was sent the famous Fifty-second Division from the Caucasus front.

ON CHRISTMAS EVE.

Christmas eve was selected as the occasion for the next notable attack, and the selected troops were given the vantage point of honor. Three times that night the charge was made—from nightfall until dawn the conflict waged back and forth, receding and rising as another frenzied attempt was made to secure the disputed territory. Daylight came and the rising sun lighted the British flag, still floating triumphantly in the breeze, and the besieging force not 250 yards from the outskirts of the village, as they had been the night before, but 500 yards distant, and glad to remain there.

There was desultory fighting that day. Then began the next phase of the siege—starvation.

Blockade investment was, of necessity, a slow process. But it was the surest in the end. To hasten their efforts the Turkish forces indulged in heavy night bombardments of the beleaguered town. Townshend stood his ground and waited. He knew that not far distant Lake and his men were exerting every effort to reach him. Reports had been dropped by the aviators who flew high above him: the wireless instruments had recorded messages of cheer; mile by mile, the relief army was forcing its way. He heartened his men and they responded with strudy Briton grit.

NATURE HELPED TURKS.

Then nature intervened. The floods came. High water covered the surrounding territory. The Tigris and its tributaries overflowed, and miles of green expanse rendered it impossible for the relief to advance. Nature did more for the Turkish victory than the Turks themselves.

Before this time, when relief seemed imminent, Townshend while conserving his supplies had not shortened his rations. Now starvation lowered in the distance. Emergency rations were issued. The native population was urged to evacuate. A few timid bands wandered over to the Turkish lines. They were promptly hanged. The rest, dissuaded from any similar attempt, refused to budge from the British camp.

Large quantities of corn and barley were discovered. There was no way to make them fit for food and Townshend communicated with the outstanding British by wireless. Soon after a fleet of aeroplanes appeared above Kut-el-Amara. Circling high above the Turkish range they dropped strange parcels into the village. The besieged gathered the pieces together, assembled them, and had a mill and engine capable of reducing their grain to flour. Gasoline from an abandoned boat furnished the motive power. Horses and mules were killed for meat.

ANOTHER FOE

Then on February 5, came a new terror to be combated—scurvy. Vegetables, rice and sugar were gone. Turkish snipers rendered bathing impossible. With diminished supplies, and sickness stalking through the camp, the men remained cheerful and unwavering. It was not until death was a matter of hours that the brave commander surrendered his forces to the Turks, who waited without his line of fire.

The end came on April 24. Kalil Pasha Bey, the Turkish commander, had nothing but the highest respect and praise for the men he had fought. Troops to the number of 10,000 and natives numbering 6,000, had been sheltered during the siege and made up the band that was turned over by the British leader. Three pet terriers of the officers were sent by the Pasha to the British troops under a flag of truce, and a request made for provisions for the starving men.

When they had been relieved the prisoners were marched to Constantinople under an escort of honor.

Then came the news that proved the saddest blow of all.

The Marchioness Gladys Ethel Gwendolen Eugenie had presented her husband, Sir John James Dudley Stuart Townshend, Viscount Townshend, of Raynham, Norfolk and Baron Townshend, of Lynn Regis, with a son and heir on May 13.

VANISHED DREAMS.

With this news all dreams of future honor—of a title that was within his grasp, of vast estates to enjoy, and a position among the peers of England to crown his life—were wiped from the brain of Townshend, the warrior.

He had been next in line. He had married a French lady, a daughter of Comte Cahen d'Anvers. He was a recognized authority on the tactics of Napoleon and had received highest praise from Kitchener and Wolseley, as well as from the Crown.

It needed only this last drop to fill his cup of happiness. It would have been a fitting ending to a life well given to his ruler and his land.

But one disappointment followed closely upon the others' heels; and the last was far more bitter than the first.

There is talk to-day among the cognoscenti in London of the possibility of a title being invested upon Townshend, the warrior, by the crown. It may be that he will realise this. Only the future can tell.

So to-day he spends his time a prisoner of war on the pleasant little island of Fringipo at the eastern end of the Sea of Marmora. There he watches the southern sun sink in the golden sea, and ruminates on the whims of fate that have buffeted him so strongly.

And in distant England, a little marquis lies in his cradle and gazes with wondering eyes at the big world about him, ignorant of what ruin his coming hath wrought.

Mr. Ziegler's Men Get Shark in Fight

Hook Slips as Monster is Nearly Landed, and It is Seized by Tail.

STAMFORD, Conn., Aug. 26.—William Ziegler, Jr., wealthy owner of Great Island, Collenders' Point, Noroton, is the possessor of a seven-foot maneating shark caught off his bathing beach at the Island. It was one of a school of twelve which had broken sharp hoks and had seemed immune to bullets fired at them by Mr. Ziegler and his employes during the week.

Joseph Crane, Mr. Zeigler's stable manager, had a hook made of horse shoe iron, and he baited it with black fish. A seven-foot shark swallowed the bait, and tried to run off with the line of heavy rope and chain. It was brought ashore after an hour's fight.

Just as it was being landed, the heavy hook straightened out and slipped from the shark's mouth. The shark was too far gone to swim off and Crane leaped into the water and caught it by the tail. He held on while other employes hauled him and the shark out of the water and killed the man-eater with an anchor. The shark will be mounted and placed over the stable door at Great Island.

SCOTTISH GLENS ARE BEREFT OF ALL THEIR MEN

A Pen-Picture of War Conditions in the Highlands.

There is a kindly wind blowing from over the loch, writes a correspondent of the London Times. It comes stealing down from the slopes of Ben Donich, ruffles the still waters in frosted patches and creeps through the castle porticoes, telling the great oaks something that keeps them whispering all the morn. The little town seems sleeping. The splash of the brown waters over the weir beneath the castle bridge fills the ears. A heron stands motionless in the shallow water, surfeited with the full meal he has just finished. Then from the direction of the town there comes the sound of a drum. If we draw nearer we will see why it is that the loch-side is deserted. In the church square some 200 kilted lads are saying a farewell to their sisters and mothers and other people's mothers and sisters, for they are marching to the wars, as their forefathers have done before them from time immemorial.

This little hamlet has sent men to every war that Britain has engaged in, and no matter how far back you go, every onfall, siege, leaguer, every brawl between nations, has seen Mac Callein Mor's men well in the forefront of battle. And so it is that these men have left the loch-side and the brae, have left the fishing boat on the beach and the sheep without a shepherd.

The last good-byes are being said and a girl with eyes as blue as the waters of the loch on a summer's day calls to her brother, a tall piper. "See and no forget to pipe to the Germans," she says, "and look after Sandy for me. I'm feared he'll be led away by yon French lassies." A corporal answers her. "I'll look after myse' fine," and he kisses the girl and rejoins his ranks.

"THE PIPER'S FAREWELL.

The officer in charge of the company gives a warning, and the men hoist their wob slings over their shoulders. The pipers form up in front of their columns, and as they move off they toss the drone and the stocks of the pipes on to the hollow of their shoulders. There is a chorus of farewells broken into by the wheeze of the filling bags and the buss of the great drones. The drum beats on the setting down of each left foot, and away they go with caps fluttering in the breeze, sporrans swaying to the step. The drum rolls and the glen is wakened as it has been many times in the past with the lilt of one of the finest marches that ever burst from the chanter. "Baile Ionaraora" it is, better known to you as "The Campbells are Coming." Round the town front and past the old inn and the great stone-arched gates to the castle walls, where the pipers change their tune to the salute, "Failte 'Mharcuis." By the burying ground they step out to the march once more, and until they are over the hump-backed bridge the tune continues. It stops with a sad little gasps as the bag deflate and are tucked under each oxter with the stoc ribbons to the fore, fluttering their dark blue, yellow-striped tartan ribbons.

Suddenly a man in the front four breaks into song. His clear voice echoes back to the listening women by the inn:

The Rover o' Lochryan, he's gane
Wi' his merry men sae bravo;
Their hearts are o' steel, an' a better keel
Ne'er bowl'd owre the back o' a wave.
It's no when the loch lies dead in its trough,
When naething disturbs it ave,
But the rack and the ride o' the restless tide,
An' the splash o' the grey seamaw.

Under the shadow of the hill the wind steals the song and carries it away and up the glen, but as the road crosses a tongue that juts into the lake it is still borne faintly down to the listening women.

We wash through the drift and sing to the lift
O' the wave that heaves us on.

From the crags under the beason it is repeated wistfully. "The waves that heaves us on." The light goes and the lamps are lit in the cottages along the front. The tall girl who was anxious about Sandy, is the last to leave. She shades her eyes with her hands and looks again, listening the while, and down the winding waters, "the trough o' the loch," there comes the ghost of a melody. But the wind is fickle and it stays but a moment. The girl turns and goes into a cottage near at hand. "You'll no' be wantin' the light yet 'awhile, mither," she says, and the old woman agrees.

BACK FROM THE WAR.

The seasons have changed the leaves in the glen as the yellow St. John's wort changes the wool for the tartan of the Lachlans. There are no young men left in the town. There are but old men and women, and the sturdy youngsters fretting that they might, too, be allowed to go to the wars. The blue-eyed girl waits on the jetty for a steamship that is as yet ten miles down the loch. She knows this, but she must wait there. At last a puff of smoke heralds the approach of the little boat that soon afterwards creeps around the promontory. As it ties up at the jetty the girl sees two kilted figures on the deck. She sees them through a mist of tears, for one man (her brother) has an empty sleeve. And yet he is the luckier of the two, for he helps the other man to the gangway, putting his hands on the side rails, "Twa steps, Sandy," he warns him, but the blind man is safe at last and softer hands have helped him on to the quay.

"I didn't see much o' they French lasies, Allison," says he bravely, "for it was dark when they took us through to the front, and when I came back it was dark, too, leastways it was for me." "Oh, Sandy, Sandy," cries the girl, and Sandy knows that the splash of wet on his hand was not from the rain that has been threatening for the last hour. So these three go up the little street to the cottage where a very old lady meets them. "Come ben the hoose an' we'll just have prayers," is all she says when she has stepped from the one-armed embrace of her son. And the four of them kneel and offer thanks.

Put the scene back 100 years, to the "45," or back further still, and there is nothing new in it. Think it out for yourself and ask what it is that brings these men of the heather and the glen to fight for England. They have been treated as outlaws, hunted and slain. Their dress and their music was forbidden [illegible] their very language was proscribed [illegible] that it was a crime to speak [illegible] and yet—and yet the music of [illegible] pibrochan echoes over the fields of Flanders and the deserts of Egypt through the ruined colonnades of Grecian temples, and is even heard in the African jungle.

HUN WOOD[illegible] BOOTS

Leather has risen enormously in price in Germany since the beginning of the war, so much so that the cost of all leather prices has more than doubled. This increase in the price of leather has hit the Germans very hard in the case of boots and shoes. In most towns now, for the poorer people, all sorts of substitutes for leather are being sold. Felt is replacing the leather in the uppers of boots while another favorite substitute is sailcloth warmly lined. Wood is being used for soles, and, according to the German papers, a method has been found of making the wood flexible so doing away with the noise that clogs and wooden shoes generally make. The price of these new wooden boots and shoes is from 70c to $1.20 a pair, an immense saving on leather ones. But they don't last half as long.

The first known use of asbestos was in the manufacture of cremation robes for the ancient Romans.

TROOPS ON THE HUNT FOR ESCAPED GERMANS

KINGSTON, Aug. 26.—The majority of the troops of the Barriefield Camp were called out to scour the immediate district for the two German prisoners who escaped from Fort Henry on Wednesday, it being reported that the missing men were in the neighbourhood, not being able to get away. They are still at large.

TEMPTATION TO ESCAPE FROM REFORMATORY GREAT

AT HIS OWN PLEA RECAPTURED MAN IS SENT TO KINGSTON FOR TWO YEARS.

GUELPH, August 26.—"I don't want to go back to the Reformatory. It's a place for mere boys; it's no place for men. At the Reformatory there's a great temptation to run away, there's no wall around it." This was the plea of Gorge Paley an American, charged with escaping from the Prison Farm near here, when he appeared in court before Judge Hayes. At his own request he was given two years in Kingston. Ed. Snider, James Henderson, Pte. Bacon and Fred Whittaker were each sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. They have all previously served terms on the farm here, and recently escaped. A Roach, who is only eighteen years old, was given an extra six months. He is serving time for stealing a horse at Cornwall. Peter Lawson aged twenty, also of Cornwall, got an extra year for attempting to escape.

British Advance 4,00 Yards on the Thiepval Front

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The British left wing on the Somme River broke out with a new attack against the German positions defending Thiepval village last night and advanced another four hundred yards, capturing trenches by bayonet and grenade charges, Sir Douglas Haig reported to the War Office this afternoon. The British line at this point is steadily encircling German fortified positions and threatening the capture of Thiepval, which has interfered with General Haig's advance since the Somme battle began. All counter attacks were repulsed. The new British gain reported by General Haig, was made near Mouquet Farm.

British Air Fleet Counter Attacked

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Aug. 26.—British air forces made a counter attack yesterday on Zeppelins that raided England's east coast twice within 24 hours, and bombarded German airship sheds at Namur, Belgium. It was impossible to observe the amount of damage done. One British machine is miss-

FEW PUPILS PASSED; TEACHERS ASKED TO QUIT

Petrolea High School Board Will Advertise to Fill Vacancies.

Petrolea, ug. 26.—The High School Board at a full meeting last night passed a resolution by the casting vote of the Chairman asking the staff consisting at present of three men teachers, to resign. The lady teacher who completed the staff has resigned since midsummer. The reason alleged for the board's action is the small percentage of pupils passed at the recent examinations. The board will advertise to fill the vacancies.

Ladies' Work Prize List Is Attractive

Attention of the ladies of Peterborough and district is directed toward the ladies' work prize for the Industrial Exhibition. The list has been completely revised and brought up to date. There are prizes offered for articles that have not been previously included. The directors expect a big entry list, especially in this department.

OBITUARY

JOHN COSTELLO.

The death occurred in St. Joseph's Hospital, yesterday, of John Costello, of Ennismore. Deceased, who was a son of the late Edward Costello, was in his thirty-sixth year. He was born in Ennismore. The survivors are: One sister, Margaret of this city, and one brother, Daniel, of Ennismore. Deceased had been ailing for upwards of one year.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon from the family residence, Ennismore, to St. Martin's Church, thence to St. Martin's cemetery.

MRS. D'ARCY DUNLOP.

Died at her home, No. 5 Park street, on Saturday morning, Aug. 26th, Emma Kin Kaid, beloved wife of D'Arcy Dunlop, in her 62nd year. Although having been in ill health for some time, she retired last night as usual, and later becoming suddenly ill, passed away at 2.30 a.m.

She leaves to mourn her loss, her husband, one sister, Mrs. Howard Shurter, 599 King street, city, and four sons and four daughters, all of Peterborough, namely: D'Arcy, James, Robert and William and Mrs. Nathan Stabler, Mrs. Robert Carter, Mrs. Stanley Smith and Gertrude at home.

Funeral from the family residence, No. 5 Park street, to Little Lake cemetery, on Monday, August 28th at 2.30 p.m.

EMMA LOUISA SAWERS.

This morning, death claimed a well known and highly respected citizen in the person of Emma Louisa Moore, beloved wife of William H. Moore, K.C., 310 London street. Deceased was a daughter of the late Augustus Sawers, ex-mayor of Peterborough. The survivors are the husband and five children, namely, Mrs. Foster Ambery, of Toronto; Mrs. W. L. Allen, Cobourg; Mrs. Guy Whittaker, of Calgary, whose husband, Major Guy Whittaker, is overseas, and two sons, Allan P. Moore, Manager of the Union Bank, Tompkins, Saskatchewan, and Lieut. Cyril A. Moore, of the 93nd Battalion now in France. The following brothers also survive: Augustus Sawers, of Peterborough; Campbell W. Sawers, barister, of Vancouver, and Dr. F. H. Sawers, of Rochester, N.Y. The Rev. F. H. Sawers, former rector of St. Luke's Church, and now of St. Peter's Church, Cobourg, is a nephew.

Service wil be held at the house on Tuesday evening at two-thirty o'clock and the funeral at thre o'clock from the "Maples," 310 London street, to Little Lake cemetery. The Rev. F. H. Sawers of Cobourg wil conduct the service.

WALTER ROBSON.

The Limerick (Sask.) Leader: It becomes our sad duty to record in this issue the death of a young and popular resident of the Limerick district in the person of Mr. Walter Robson, who passed away on the morning of July 26th, at his home, north of town. Though Mr. Robson's health had not been the best for a year past, the end came rather suddenly, following only two days' confinement to his bed. He was one of the bright young adventurers who some eight years ago staked their fortunes in the then opening district, pushing in the seventy-mile distance from Moose Jaw over the old Pole Trail that has now passed into history. Of a cheerful and happy disposition, a keen lover of sport, and a champion of fair play in all dealings, he gained for himself friends on every hand and his demise will leave a void in the community difficult to fill. Orinoco Loyal Orange Lodge No. 2592, of which deceased was a respected member, turned out in a body Friday morning and accompanied the remains to Limerick, where they were placed aboard the train for shipment to his old home at Peterborough Ont. His brother, Wm. Robson,, of Regina, and two sisters accompanied the remains.

SOUR MILK LOSSES

Why it Pays to Buy PASTEURIZED Milk

Just sit down and connect up the excessively hot weather of this Summer with the quantity of ordinary raw milk that has gone sour with the heat, and see if it would not have paid to have been among the growing number of Pasteurized Milk users.

THE KEEPING QUALITIES OF

have been well demonstrated all this Summer. It has stood the test of the severe temperatures, and proved its Safety.

The Relative Difference in the Price of Pasteurized and Clarified Milk, as compared with ordinary raw milk, is more than made up by the sour milk losses and annoyances.

DO YOUR CHILDREN HAVE LOTS OF SOUR MILK?

The food of first importance in the sustenance of human life from infancy is PURE MILK, and the greater the purity the greater the advantage.

While Pasteurization, properly executed is an efficient and practical means of protecting the consuming public against danger from infected milk, it interferes in no way with its digestibility or strengthening properties. It retains all its important values and is free from the danger of raw milk.

MORNING, NOON AND NIGHT

It is delivered in Sterilised Sealed Bottles, superceding the former primitive method of ladling with a dipper from large cans,—hence eliminating the danger of contamination from dust, dirt, smoke and debris from the street while the cans are open.

All the danger from infected milk does not originate on the farms where there is plenty of pure air, green clover and fresh running water, but from exposure of milk cans and bottles to the impurities of the city streets.

Clarification, in like manner contributes to the cleanliness of milk, because it removes all sediment and other objectional matter, whether it came from the cow, or the cans, or the milker.

Let us Put Your Name on One of Our Milk Routes

The Toronto Grain Market

Grain Prices Dropped Off a Few Points Yesterday

It was a demoralized wheat market yesterday, with September futures selling down 11 1-4c in Chicago; December down 10 3-8c, and May down 9 5-8c. Winnipeg options were still better, selling off from 8 3-4c to 10 1-4c a bushel. Cash wheat was also strongly affected, all grades of Manitoba wheat dropping 9 1-4c, with oats easier, too. Ontario wheat dropped 9c a bushel, all grades; and new rye was 5c lss. Manitoba flour kept firm, but Ontario flour dropped 40c. In the farmers' market both new and old wheat dropped 5c, and oats were down 1c to 2c.

Wheat Took A Drop Yesterday

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

CHICAGO, Aug. 29. — Sensational drops of 9 to 11 cents in wheat values on the local grain market yesterday threw pit traders into a frenzy. News that Rumania had declared war on Austria, and less favourable news in regard to the strike situation were said by traders to be responsible At noon September was down eight cents over the close Saturday. December was down eight cents, while May was down seven.

RUMANIAN THIRD ARMY WITHIN STRIKING DISTANCE OF HUNGARIAN FRONTIER

Rumanian Troops Are Well Advanced Into Austrian Territory—The General Staff Will Send Every Available Man into the Invasion of Hungary—Rumania's Decision is Expected to be Followed by a Great Allied Offensive in the Balkans.

RUMANIA'S MILITARY POWER

BUCHAREST, August 29.—Roumanian troops are already well advanced into Austrian territory.

The Roumanian third army, already mobilized within striking distance of the Hungarian frontier, is expected to invade Transylvania before the end of the week, striking westward against Besztercze. The Roumanian general staff probably will send every available man into the invasion of Hungary in an effort to conquer the rich Province of Transylvania, long coveted by the Roumanians. At the same time a strong force will be maintained along the southern Roumanian frontier to guard against attack by the Bulgarians.

Roumania's decision is expected to be followed shortly by the opening of a great allied offensive in the Balkans that will aim to squeeze the Bulgars between two opposing forces, closing the pathway the Germans cut through Serbia to Constantinople.

The Roumanian entrance into the war was the greatest diplomatic achievement for the allies since the European struggle began. Despatches from The Hague declared that Berlin received the news calmly, though the German press blames Foreign Secretary Von Jagow and Under-Foreign Secretary Zimmerman for Germany's diplomatic defeat.

The Berlin military authorities stationed a guard about the Roumanian legation, but there was no hostile demonstration. A Berlin crowd vented its wrath against Italy for declaring war against Germany yesterday by stoning the Italian Embassy until police reserves arrived. Thus far no serious trouble has occurred.

ROUMANIA ACTED WITH ITALY.

Roumania entered the war at almost the same hour that Italy declared war on Germany. The two events had close connection, it is believed here, since Roumania and Italy had acted in concert in other Balkan matters and were understaad to have agreed more than a year ago to join the allies at the same time.

News of the allied diplomatic victory at Bucharest was hailed with the greatest enthusiasm in London. Everywhere the view was taken that Roumania's entrance into the war means the speedy elimination of both Austria and Bulgaria from the conflict.

Long after the news had been received from Berlin the Roumanian legation was without official information from Bucharest. Press despatches from that capital were 24 hours old.

Besides conferring with the members of the Crown Council, with whom the final decision rested, King Ferdinand had prolonged conferences with the leaders of all Roumanian political parties, including those favourable to intervention in the great war and those who had been the strongest supporters of Roumania continuing her neutrality.

The Roumanian military officials had discussed for some days what probably would be the first step taken when war was declared, and had dismissed all alien employees, many of whom were Germans. An especially large number of Germans were employed in the technical services.

ROUMANIA'S MILITARY POWER.

Roumania has a total of 250,000 first line troops and about 400,000 reserves. The regular permanent standing army consists of 5,000 officers, 1,000 military students, 100,000 troops, 25,000 horses, 600 cannons and 200 machine guns. Part of the army has been mobilized for some time near the Hungarian frontier.

The infantry organization of first-line troops consists of 40 regiments composed of three battalions of four companies each per regiment. Each regiment has also an extra company at the depot, together with one section of two machine guns. There are also 80 (eighty) battalions of reserves and 12 companies of gendarmes.

The cavalry consists of 10 regiments of Red Hussars and 10 regiments of Black Hussars. The cavalry regiments consist of four squadrons for service at the front and one squadron for depot work. The men are armed with sabres, lances, revolvers and short harbines.

HAVE FULL ORGANIZATION.

The artillery consists of 20 regiments of first-line troops, eadh regiment being composed of six batteries of four guns each. There are also 20 regiments of artillery reserves. In addition there is a full organization of engineers and transport trains.

A factor which separates Roumania from the other Balkan States is that of race. The Roumanian prides himself on being of Latin origin and traces his stock back to one of the colonies sent out by Emperor Hrajan. It is partly for this reason that Roumania has always looked to Italy for political guidance, while the other Balkan States, being largely of Slav origin, have turned their eyes toward Russia.

A LONG-CHERISHED AMBITION.

The motive which prompts Roumania to enter the war is the satisfaction of her "national aspirations," described by Take Jonescu, the Roumanian Liberal leader, as the "policy of national instinct." Concisely this means national expansion. In the southern half of Bukowina, the Austrian crown land, the Roumanians are the dominant race. The mass of the people of eastern Transylvania, a part of Hungary, is Roumanian by race and language.

It is said 4,000,000 Roumaians live in Transylvania.

Roumania has been credited with a long-cherished ambition to annex these provinces, and at the same time "liberate" the Roumanians now under Austrian domination. Recently it was reported Russia had offered Czernowitz to Roumania as a reward if she would unite with the Entente.

Roumania covets Bessarabia, the extreme southwestern Province of Russia, on the Black Sea, which was taken from her by the Berlin treaty of 1878. Reports have stated that Russia also has consented to restore Bessarabia as a war prize, with its population of 2,000,000, mostly Roumanians, and an area of 20,000 square miles. This, with Transylvania, would give Roumania a total population approaching 12,000,000, and, should all her aspirations be satisfied, a territory as great in area as that of England, Scotland and Wales.

HAS A LONG BORDERLINE

Roumania has a borderline as long as the whole Russian western war front on which to choose her point of military attack. In what direction her first blow might be aimed is only indicated by her desire to pour her troops through the passes of the Transylvanian Alps and the Carpathians into Transylvania. On the other hand, Austria has been accumulating military forces at Orsova, prepared to attempt to force the "Iron Gates," where the Danube River touches the western Roumanian border. Bulgaria is said to have stationed 100,000 or more troops along the southern bank of the Danube to protect her northern frontier fro ma Roumanian invasion.

Apprehension in Germany that Roumania intends to permit a Russian army to march through her territory to attack the Bulgarians, has been apparent for some time. Military authorities in Budapest assert that the chief factor for the consideration of the central powers is not the half a million or more men of the Roumanian army, but the opportunity offered for a new Russian invasion of Hungary. Roumania sympathizers in Transylvania have been sent to other sections and the Roumanian priests and churches there have been kept under military supervision. The Transylvania-Roumania frontier defences have been strengthened by Austria as a precaution against Roumanian invasion.

Powerful influences on the part of most of the central powers and the entente allies have been exerted at Bucharest to influence her decision in the war for the past two years. Recently reports from the capital have stated that Roumania awaited only the beginning of the Anglo-French offensive in Macedonia before joining her fortunes with those of the entente allies.

Another reason for delay in her decision it is said has been lack of ammunition, which now has been relieved by large supplies coming from Japan by the way of Vladivostok, according to recent reports.

Great Britain Has Seized One Hundred Dutch Fishing Vessels For Prize Court

Provisioning of Prussians from Fleet Leads to Action—Important Source of Revenue to Holland Affected and a Complicated International Question is Raised—Even Before the War Germany Was the Best Customer of the Dutch Fishermen—The Effect of the Blockade of the Allies Has Been to Increase Germany's Trade With Holland.

FISHERMEN ARE A HINDRANCE

THE HAGUE, August 29.—Great Britain, which has been regarding with growing displeasure the provisioning of Germany with fish from Holland, has now brought the matter to a head by seizure of some one hundred vessels of the Dutch fishing fleet and they are now lying under arrest in the Scotch ports of Peterhead, Aberdeen, Lerwick and Kirkwall. Unless an arrangement is reached, they are apparently to be taken before the British Prize Court on the ground that their catches are contraband because the final destination thereof is Germany.

Even before the war Germany was the best customer of the Dutch fishermen, but the effect of the maritime blockade of the Allies had been to increase that country's purchases on the fish market here so as to give it a practical monopoly of Holland's exports. The net export of various sorts of sea fish in recent years has amounted to about 110,000 tons a year, representing a value between $9,000,000 and $12,000,000. Partly as a result of less competition on the fishing grounds of the North Sea and consequent bigger catches and doubtless partly owing to the highly remunerative prices obtainable, there was an enormous increase in the exports last year, 165,000 tons of fresh sea fish and salted and smoked herring alone being sent out of the country. Germany's share of the exports of fresh sea fish and salted herring was no less than 144,900 tons, as against only 88,700 in 1914 and 86,300 in 1913. Sales to other countries fell off proportionately. America, for instance, at ordinary times draws a certain amount of herring from Holland, but the total of 14,947 tons despatched thither in 1913 fell to 1,588 tons last year, and now the herring export to the United States seems to have entirely stopped, the total for the first six months of the current year being only 8 tons.

Such figures make clear what a hindrance the Dutch fishing industry has constituted to the Allies' blockade of the Central Powers and sufficiently explain their anxiety to bring about a change in this state of affairs, particularly if it be remembered that, while British fishing trawlers are being sent to the bottom of the sea by Prussian submarines, these Dutch craft are hauling in their loaded nets right under the noses of British naval guns.

A DIFFICULT QUESTION.

The question is, however, an exceedingly difficult and complicated one, for some 20,000 to 25,000 seamen and others earn their livelihood in the Dutch fishing and connected industries; Holland's own fish supply is also involved; an indemnity, it is argued, could not counterbalance the far reaching harmful effects of the laying up of the fishing fleet, and beyond these material considerations is the fact that the Netherlands, with its proud record as a seafaring Power, would deeply resent as a humiliation the annulment of its right to fish freely on the open North Sea and thus carry on one of its oldest industries. Neutrality forbids the singling out of the Central Powers for a fish export prohibition, while a general export prohibition would cut away the main basis of the industry's existence.

Meetings of protest already have been held by various fishing interests and the trades unions affected; the press has echoed the same note, and the Foreign Minister has explained the matter in Parliament. It is strongly urged from the Dutch side that there can be no question of contraband, as the fish is all destined for the open market in Holland, where any one is free to buy. On the other hand, there is the fact that a company has been formed by leading fishing craft owners, dealers and others, which acts as the buying medium for the big Prussian company that undertakes Germany's purchases of foodstuffs in this country, under an arrangement whereby it may deliver all the fish it can at a fixed price, viz., $1.80 a cask, as against the price of sixty American cents prevailing before the war.

However the position may stand from the point of view of equity, it is quite possible that, now the Declaration of London has been abandoned and Great Britain has fallen back on the pre-existing principles of maritime law, the Prize Court would decide against the fishermen if the matter went so far, and condemn the Dutch craft on the ground that the ultimate destination of three-quarters of their cargo catches may be presumed to be for the enemy, and, therefore, contraband. But it seems probable some arrangement will be made.

WILSON BREAKS OFF NEGOTIATIONS

Conference With Railway Presidents Yesterday Had No Result—Statement is to be Issued

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29. —It was officially stated late yesterday that negotiations between the President and the railway presidents have been broken off.

Strike Likely on September 4.

Washington, Aug. 29.—A statement issued late yesterday by the committee of eight railway presidents placed stress on a report that a strike was to be called for September 4. Their authority for the report was not given, but the Brotherhood representatives charged the railroad heads with having had spies at recent Brotherhood meetings.

Washington, Aug. 29.—The committee of eight railway presidentts, representing the more than sixty executives with whom President Wilson has been negotiating, reached the White House at 2.30 p.m. yesterday with their "final" proposal regarding settlement of the dispute with the brotherhood employes.

The President already had received their proposal privately and they already had been apprised of the plan which he has worked out, modifying his original proposal to them.

At the conclusion of the conference President Holden, of the Burlington, said the executives would issue a statement in a short time.

"It will not be a final statement," he said, but beyond this declined to throw any light on developments.

President Wilson will now ask Congress to pass legislation to avert a railroad strike.

German Diplomats Are Blamed

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Aug. 29.—Italy's declaration of war against Germany and the declaration of war by Rumania against Austria-Hungary have created a most profound impression in the German capital, says a despatch from Berlin by way of The Hague to the Exchange Telegraph Company.

The Berlin newspapers, the despatch adds, express themselves bitterly against Gottlieb Von Jagow, the German Foreign Minister, and Dr. Alfred Zimmerman, the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, those statesmen being considered by the journals to be partially responsible for what is declared to be Germany's diplomatic defeat.

"He's a self made man." "What a pity he didn't consult an expert while the making was in progress."

How The Famous Seventy-Five Was Saved

Dreyfus Case Recalled and A New Chapter Told, by Gaston Rive Correspondent of "LE Siecle," of Paris

The famous or infamous Dreyfus affair, as one may choose to call it, which has been buried ever since the Court of Cessation pronounced the rehabilitation of the leading actor of that historical drama, is again the leading topic of conversation among the people of France.

But instead of breeding discord, passion and hatred as of yore, the discussion to-day leads to rejoicing, and mutual contentment. The reason for this metamorphose is that the entire gist of the Dreyfus case rested upon the alleged delivery to the German military authorities of the secrets governing the mechanism of the firing of the little 75 mm. gun.

Its connection with the Dreyfus case is so close and dramatic that it is first necessary to summarize as briefly as possible the story and the martyrdom of Capt. Dreyfus. Volums have been written on that famous case but the leading incidents connected with it are not known and thereby hangs a remarkable story that no fiction writer with the wildest stretch of imagination could ever have conceived.

One day in the spring of 1894, the concierge or janitor of the building in which were the officers of Colonel Von Schwarzkoppen, the German military attache at Paris, found on the floor near the waste paper basket of the colonel's secretary, a little scrap of paper on which were written in French, the words: "The Minister of War has sent," and nearby another bit of paper with the words, "difficult to obtain."

It is necessary by way of digression to state that a concierge in Paris is in every way the same personage as a janitor in New York. He is the same curious individual. As a matter of fact curiosity is one of the ethics of the profession and the Parisian concierge, whose activities in this instance are about to be related, fortunately was no exception to the rule. But to come back to the story.

That humble functionary, whose task it was to clean the offices, laid down the traditional feather duster, which every French janitor carries, locked the door of that room so as not to be disturbed and plunged into the contents of the waste paper basket. One by one he took out crumpled bits of papers similar to the ones that he had picked up on the floor and bearing the same handwriting.

For hours and hours with an angelic patience that only curiosity can produce our janitor slowly and deliberately straightened out the bits of papers, co-ordinated the sentences and finally placed them on a large sheet of paper. The document thus scraped out was as follows:

WHAT THE MEMORANDUM SAID

"Without news indicating to me that you desire to see me, I address you nevertheless, sir, some interesting information:

"1. A note on the hydraulic brake of the 120 and the manner in which this piece conducted and behaved itself.

"2. A note on the troops of cover (Border troops). (Few modifications will be added to the new plan.)

"3. A note on a modification of artillery formation.

"4. A note on Madagascar.

"5. The project of a manual of shooting of the field artillery (14th of March, 1894.) This last document is extremely difficult to obtain and I can have it at my disposition only for a few days. The minister of war has sent a limited number to the Army corps and these corps are responsible for the same. Each officer who holds one must return it after the manoeuvres. If you are to take from it what interests you and keep it at my disposition afterwards I will take it unless you want me to copy it myself, in extenso, in which case I would give you a copy.

"I'm off to manoeuvres."

That memorandum or bordereau, as it is called in French, bore no address, no date and no signatures. By its contents, however, the janitor, a retired military man, could see that someone, somewhere in French high military circles, was in criminal communication with the German military attache.

That same night the janitor rushed to the minister of war, Rue St. Dominique, and aroused the attendants. At the sight of the excited man, whose gesticulations and broken sentences led them to believe that he was one of those innumerable cranks who daily pester the minister of war with new inventions, the attendants jollied the man along while one of them went out in search of a policeman.

Before that official arrived, however the janitor, after explaining that he was employed in the Rue de Lille, in the building of the German military attache, insisted on seeing at once, one of the attaff officers. A young officer was summoned and after a few minutes of private conversation with the janitor, he in turn called a few of his colleagues, and after consultation they aroused General De Boisdiffre, the chief of the general staff, to whom the janitor, trembling, handed the precious document. The general read it slowly, became pale and said: "I must see the minister of war at once."

These two highest officials of the French army conferred until early morning and then said to the staff who, by this time, were showing anxiety, that "a monstrous crime had been committed against France."

What caused the chief distress and worry to the French staff was that part of the bordereau relating to the "note on the hydraulic brake of the 120 mm. gun. That brake had been tested a few weeks before the discovery of this bordereau and in view of its success it had been applied to the test of the now famous 75 mm. gun, the working or the manoeuvring of which had been elaborately set forth in the "manual of shooting of the field artillery," which the writer of the bordereau also promised to forward to the German military attache. Owing to the discovery of the leakage the tests were stopped on the 75 mm. gun and only resumed after the Dreyfus trial. It was in 1896 that the committee on artillery definitely adopted the hydraulic brake. This secret, the great war has proven, was one of the most important of the French army, for the seventy-fives have saved France.

It may be stated right here the sending of documents was intercepted and that to the dismay of the German general staff, the secret was well kept.

ITS VALUE TO GERMANY.

Had Berlin come into possession of the description of the hydraulic brake it would have been a death blow to France.

The little 75, as the gun is generally designated in French circles, is manufactured at the Schneider works, a private enterprise, at Le Creusot. The Schneiders are to France what the Krupps are to Germany. The hydraulic brake prevents any appreciable recoil of the gun, which automatically returns to its normal position; once it is set for the right aim, no time is lost in the firing. The position of the gun is not changed and an unlimited number of shots may be fired. To be accurate the gun at the time we speak of could fire fifteen shots to the minute; it has been perfected since then so that in the present war it fires up to thirty shots to the minute. That accounts for that "curtain of fire" which expression figures so conspicuously in the daily official bulletins of commiques issued by the French war office. Now let the reader bear in mind for a moment that, protecting Verdun are one hundred of these guns ready to pour out three thousand shots to the minute at the least sign of an attack by the invaders and let him judge for himself of the indescribable havoc raised by such an outpouring of shots among the German forces.

Does one wonder then that the French staff moved heaven and earth to discover the traitor, the writer of the bordereau, which by the very nature of its contents was the work of an artillery officer attached to the general staff.

For a year or so after these events a certain anti-Jewish campaign was waged by certain Parisian newspapers. Edward Drumont, the editor of the anti-semitic "Libre Parole" was one of the most vigient anti-Jewish writers; the immense success of his book "La France Juive" ("Jewish France") in which he arraigned with a vitriolic pen every notable Jew in France, encouraged him in writing daily editorials in his widely circulated paper, condemning not only the Jews but all Frenchmen who had dealings with them. Another newspaper "L'Intransigeant" through the pen of the late Henri Rochefort, a brilliant writer, followed in the footsteps of his confrere, Drumont, and their joint ability and reputation created an anti-Semitic feeling all over France.

It was under these circumstances, that the general staff ordered an investigation and entrusted the task to Col. Du Paty Du Clam to find the writer of the bordereau. That official, a noted anti-Semit by the way, first compared the handwriting on the bordereau with the handwriting of Capt. Dreyfus. The similarity of certain letters and of certain words convinced Col. Du Paty that Dreyfus was the writer of the incriminating document. Consequently, on the evening of October 13 he ordered Dreyfus to come to the ministry of war in civilian clothes.

He at once handed the captain a pen and a sheet of paper and dictated a few words taken from the bordereau. Dreyfus was bewildered. He was not told nor could he understand the purpose of this handwriting test. The colonel watched him closely and said:

DREYFUS ACCUSED.

"Captain, why are you trembling so?"

Dreyfus answered:

"Colonel, I don't know whether I am dreaming or not."

"You will soon wake up," retorted the colonel.

Naturally nervous in the circumstances under which he was summoned this trembling of his hand was the first step towards Dreyfus' conviction.

After the test Dreyfus was arrested and taken handcuffed to the military prison where he was locked up. Special guards were assigned to him for fear that "Jewish gold might help him to escape" as Colonel Du Paty later testified before the court martial. It is interesting to note in order to show that the entire affair was an anti-Jewish plot, that only anti-Jewish newspapers were informed of the arrest. The Libre Parole and the Intransigeant, above referred to, published a couple of lines stating that a Jewish officer was detained at the military prison on charges of treason.

Little by little the news spread, and as the fact was generally known public opinion became inflamed against the Jews and culminated in anti-Jewish demonstrations in the streets of Paris and corresponding sympathetic manifestations in front of the offices of the anti-Jewish press.

Dreyfus was tried in December, 1894, by a court martial composed of seven superior officers, the highest in grade being the presiding general and the lowest in grade a captain. The proceedings were secret. No civilian was admitted save the handwriting experts and Dreyfus' counsel, Mr. Demange, the noted Parisian criminal lawyer. The entire case rested on the bordereau. Was it the handwriting of the accused or not? Mr. Gobert, the expert in the employ of the Bank of France, the greatest financial institution of the republic, testified, after having had for weeks in his possession samples of the handwriting, that it was not the writing of Dreyfus.

Mr. Bertillon, on the contrary, who is an authority on the matter, and originator of the famous Bertillon system of measurements for criminals, adopted by the police department of New York, concluded that it was Dreyfus who had written the bordereau.

The judges felt somewhat troubled at the conflicting opinion of two such eminent experts and retired in their chambers to deliberate. It is then that a monstrous crime was committed.

THE DAMNING TELEGRAM.

Contrary to all criminal procedure an envoy of the ministry of war was admitted by the judges while they were deliberating, who submitted to them a document which sealed the fate of Dreyfus. The document was a telegram sent by the German military attache, Col. Von Schwarzkoppen, to Col. Panizzardi, the Italian military attache, and was read to the court as follows:

"That animal of Dreyfus is becoming too exacting."

After hearing that the judges did not waste any time weighing the testimony of the handwriting experts and took a vote on the guilt or innocence of Dreyfus. In French court martials the judges vote separately by yes or no as their names are called by the recording clerk. It is the inferior officer who votes first, then the second in grade and so on, up to the presiding officer, who votes last. This is done so as to avoid any undue influence being brought upon an inferior officer by a superior officer.

The verdict was unanimous against Dreyfus, and the accused was then and there according to French law, sentenced to perpetual banishment in a fortified place and to public degradation.

The latter punishment is by far the most cruel. On the 5th of January, 1895, Dreyfus was taken in front of the troops on the drilling ground of the Champ de Mars and there a general in a stentorian voice exclaimed:

Then turning to a subordinate, a lieutenant, he said, "Do your duty."

That officer took Dreyfus' sabre, and broke it over his knee. The pieces fell on the ground; he then cut the buttons of his grade. His work was done. But the torture was not yet over for Dreyfus. Taken handcuffed between four armed soldiers, he was marched in front of all the troops. An immense crowd standing behind the soldiers shouted the worst insults at the martyr, who was looking straight at the soldiers as he passed them. He kept saying "I am innocent—I swear on my children's heads and I am innocent—I am not a traitor—I am not a spy—Vive la France!"

Dreyfus was then taken to the port of St. Nazaire and from there put on a convicts' transport, his destination being Devil's Island, in French Guinea, to serve his life sentence. Here whenever any agitation in his favor was started in France, he was more cruelly treated. The heat was intense. He was manacled to his iron bed by his feet, and hands and he could not even brush off the swarm of insects of that well named island, which pestered him. His enemies hoped never to hear from him again, but his family and their friends continued to believe implicitly that a great judicial error had been committed and that the captain was innocent. They worked silently and investigated the life and the past of the other officers, the colleagues of Dreyfus, but without any success. One day, however, an enterprising Paris newspaper—Le Matin—published a facsimile of the famous bordereau. Thousands of copies of that paper were sold by the newsboys on the boulevards calling out the sensational document. A certain Mr. Castro, a stock broker, bought a copy, and recognized in the facsimile the handwriting of one of his clients, Count Esterhazy, a major of the Seventy-fourth infantry regiment. He hurried to his office and became convinced that it was one and the same handwriting. He called on Mrs. Dreyfus, the wife of the prisoner of Devil's Island, who in turn directed him to Mathieu Dreyfus, a brother of the convicted man. A few days afterwards that gentleman wrote a letter to Gen. Billot, minister of war, in which he formally accused Major Esterhazy of being the author of the bordereau and asking justice for his innocent brother. That letter, published next morning in all the newspapers, created a sensation. When Esterhazy read it he at once asked the minister of war to be tried by a court martial. The investigation preceding the trial brought out the fact that Esterhazy was a man of low morals, and an adventurer, with an army of creditors at his heels. He had a friend on the general staff, Col. Henri, with whom he stood on very intimate terms, and who at times loaned him a little money. But all such evidence was not sufficient to prove Esterhazy to be a traitor, so that the court martial could not find him guilty of treason, but recommended that he be dismissed from the army for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.

ANOTHER STEP FOR DREYFUS.

Right after the acquittal, Paris was startled by the publication in the newspaper "L'Aurore" of an open letter written and signed by Emil Zola, preferring charges of conspiracy against several French officers and the general staff. His letter, which bore the title, "I Accuse," was like a thunderbolt. He charged at the conclusion that the court martial had violated the law in its conviction of Dreyfus on the strength of a document which neither Dreyfus nor his counsel had any knowledge of. Zola was tried for libel, convicted and sentenced to one year's imprisonment. In the meantime the head of the intelligence office of the general staff was transferred and was succeeded by Colonel Picquart, a native of Strassburg (Alace) and therefore a countryman of Dreyfus. In the course of his routine work he came across a document extremely confidential, addressed by the German military attache to Esterhazy. Colonel Picquart at once informed his subordinate, Col. Henri, the friend of Esterhazy, of the discovery of that document. He imparted to him his fear that Esterhazy was a paid agent of Germany and that he (and not Dreyfus) was the author of the bordereau. At the suggestion of his chief, Col. Henri promised to keep the affair a secret. But no sooner had Col. Picquart left the office than Col. Henri

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

How She Proposed

A Story For Leap Year

By ELINOR MARSH

Professor Poland of —— Woman's college was lecturing to his class, his subject being customs in India. He had excited considerable attention while dwelling upon the suttee, the girls showing great indignation at the immolation of a widow on her husband's funeral pyre. A hundred pens taking down the lecture scratched fiercely on as many notebooks. From the suttee he passed to the products of the country, and the pen scratching fell off so perceptibly that the professor was admonished that he was losing his hold on the interest of his class. He kept a number of slips, on each of which was written some bit of information calculated to attract the attention of young women, and, taking up one, he interpolated it into his lecture.

"Among the singular marriage customs of different people there is one in India which is very delicate."

Every pen of the hundred young ladies began to send forth a sympathetic sound.

"A father will hold his daughter for a price to be paid by the suitor before marriage. A parent having a very beautiful daughter or being able to settle on her a large dowry will sometimes put so high a price on her that such young men as desire her cannot afford to pay it. This makes a market for marriageable women. Widows may be had at a very low price."

"When a father finds that he has been holding his daughter too high and wishes, so to speak, to put her on the bargain counter [laughter] he does not tack a card to her on which is written 'Special,' as would be done in America if we had any such marriage custom. He adopts a much more poetic method. He marries her to a bouquet of flowers and throws her husband into a well. Since he must be drowned the bride becomes a widow. This is a notification to the young men that she may be had cheap."

Professor Poland, who was a young man of twenty-seven, paused and showed a white set of teeth under his dark mustache in a smile which was meant to be a partial unbending from his professional dignity. A ripple of amusement passed over his auditors, and he was about to return to a finish of the products of India when Belle Halliday, one of those girls who go to college to let off a surplus stock of mischief, arose to ask a question. Professor Poland paused and looked at her inquiringly.

"This being leap year," she said, "it occurs to me that this wedding to the flowers might be used by a girl as a delicate way of proposing to the man of her choice. It would be equivalent to saying, 'I may be had for a song; buy me.'"

The class tittered. The professor looked at the ceiling, then made the following reply:

"Your method, Miss Halliday, would involve a knowledge on the part of the man proposed to of the Indian custom in question, which he would not be likely to possess.

"Oh, I didn't think of that!" And Miss Halliday sat down in pretended confusion. But if there was any confusion in the matter it was with the professor, who was at the disadvantage of being one man among many women. He made an attempt to smile, then went on with his lecture, but did not again strike anything as interesting to his class as the matter of a girl being wedded to a bunch of flowers and her husband being thrown into a well.

Professor Poland's lecture was delivered in February, and Miss Belle Halliday was graduated in the following June at the foot of her class. As has been said, she did not go to college to study, but to have a good time. She was philosophic about it. "Why should I make a grind of myself when all the rest of the class are grinds? If I spent my time studying, who would do the deviltry? If I were destined to make my living as a teacher I would need to apply myself. But I'm not to teach; I'm to be married."

"Got him picked out, Belle?" asked a chum.

"Yes."

"Has he proposed?"

"No, and I don't expect him to propose. This is leap year, and I intend to do the proposing myself."

"Going to be married to a bunch of flowers and throw your husband in a well?"

"Maybe."

The chief reason underlying Miss Halliday's indisposition to make a grind of herself she did not mention. Her father was a rich man, and she was an only child. Besides what property she might expect from him, she possessed a fortune in her own right, inherited from a grandmother. Indeed, it would be difficult to find a reason why she should, like the busy bee, improve each shining hour over dead languages, mathematics or philosophy for which she would have little or no use, since the probability of her coming to want was very remote.

But Miss Halliday was bright enough to get what she wanted, and in one respect she knew very well what she wanted. She wanted Professor Poland. But Professor Poland was in receipt of an income of $1,500 a year and possibly might in the course of ten years be worth twice that to the cause of education. Miss Halliday knew very well that the modest young man would never have the assurance to propose for the hand of an heiress.

"I hope," she said to Professor Poland when they separated at commencement time, "that this will not end our acquaintance. I have always been greatly interested in your instruction and am indebted to you for having helped me through several examinations which would without your assistance have sent me home to finish my college course sitting round trying to look pretty. Mamma has directed me to invite you to spend a part of your vacation with us at our country place, and we shall look for you at an early date."

The invitation was followed up by one more specific, and in July Professor Poland found himself at Morning Glory—Belle had named the place from a flower she especially loved—a magnificent place in the center of spacious grounds and commanding a fine view of distant hills and nearby lakes. While Miss Halliday was in college she, like other students, was under his authority. It seemed to him now that the conditions were inverted. He appeared to himself nothing more than a pedagogue with so little income as to be barely able to tip the servants, while his former pupil was arrayed in "purple and fine linen" and occupying a social position to which he could never hope for an entree, and if he was granted an entree he would not be able to support it.

Miss Halliday's treatment of Professor Poland was calculated to throw him into a fever. She was not only gracious; she was as devoted to him as he would have been glad to be devoted to her were their positions reversed, lavishing on him such delicate attentions as a woman will lavish on a man she feels privileged to favor. In other words, a courtship was going on, in which the woman was doing the courting. The professor sometimes drifted, resigning himself to this delightful spell she was throwing about him, and sometimes suddenly came to a realization that he was standing on the brink of a precipice.

Now, if women were the privileged proposers they would doubtless acquit themselves far better than the men. At any rate, they are by a superior delicacy far better fitted for the purpose. To Miss Halliday what she was engaged in was as simple to her as the reconstruction of the Roman forum would have been to Professor Poland. When she was ready for his proposal she took him out into the garden and began to gather a bouquet of flowers.

"Are they for me?" asked the professor.

"For you? No. I'm going to be married."

The professor felt as if some one had knocked the life out of him.

"Who is the fortunate man?" he gasped.

"I'm not going to marry a man. I'm going to marry these flowers."

Several months had passed since Professor Poland had mentioned the Indian custom to his class, and it did not occur to him that Miss Halliday's words referred to what he had then said. However, he was not afraid of such a rival and somewhat recovered his equanimity.

"Oh!" was his sole reply.

Belle went on collecting flowers for a posy and when she had done so made a dumb show of affection for them. There was a stable on the place and a well from which to draw water, which was brought up by a pump. Belle went to the well, lifted a trap-door and threw her bouquet down into the opening. Then, without remark, she sauntered back to the garden.

Now, Professor Poland was not quite so stupid about the art of love as might be supposed. He attended Miss Halliday on her visit to the well, and when she led him to a vine clad recess and sat down on a rustic seat a vague connection between what she had done and the Indian custom he had embodied in his lecture found lodgment in his brain. He realized that this might be in lieu of a proposal. Surely it was not encouragement for him to propose. It was either a proposal or it was nothing. If it was a proposal it was incumbent on him to respond. If he responded and Miss Halliday's act meant nothing he would be in an unfortunate position. If she meant what he suspected and he made no response he would still be in an unfortunate position. What should he do?

His inclinations decided him.

"The honor you do me is, I assure you, fully appreciated. Since I love you and have loved you for some time it is not an absence of love that causes me to hesitate. It is the disparity of our incomes."

"That, I think, can be easily arranged to your satisfaction. I am ready to settle upon you"—

"Pardon me; I cannot accept a settlement. If I marry you I shall do so with the expectation of always remaining self supporting. If I am to be a rich woman's husband you must be a poor professor's wife."

"I shall be very proud of your standing in your profession and shall do nothing to turn you away from it and your enjoyment of it."

And so it was arranged that the professor should still occupy his chair at the university. This he did for a time. Then his wife was calling on him continually for some duty in connection with her estates, and at last, finding that such duties took up the principal part of his time, he resigned his professorship and devoted his whole time to the management of a property which had by this time come to be considered a family matter.

CURE YOUR BAD COUGH BY BREATHING "CATARRHOZONE"

You may dislike taking medicine, but coughs are best cured without medicine. The modern treatment is "Catarrhozone" — it isn't a drug—it's a healing vapor full of pine essences and healing balsams. It spreads over the surfaces that are weak and sore from coughing. Every spot that is congested is healed—irritation is soothed away, phlegm and secretions are cleaned out, and all symptoms of cold and Catarrh are cured. Nothing so quick, so sure, so pleasant as Catarrhozone. Beware of dangerous substitutes meant to deceive you for genuine Catarrhozone. All dealers sell Catarrhozone, large size which lasts two months, price, $1.00; small size, 50c; sample size, 25c.

Making Lemonade.

When making lemonade, try washing the fruit thoroughly, running it, rind and all, through the meat-chopper, letting it stand for fifteen minutes with sugar and a small quantity of water upon it, and then adding the amount of water necessary to fill your glasses. This method gives the drink a real flavour which much so-called lemonade lacks.

Another experiment which children seem to enjoy on account of its "fizziness" is to add one-quarter teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda to a tumbler of ordinary lemonade, stir it vigorously and drink it while it is effervescing. This is not so sharp as ordinary lemonade, and it is very soothing to a dry or irritated throat. If the acid element happens to be very strong, it will require a trifle more soda to make it effervesce properly.

Continue until the crock is full and finish with a good layer of salt.

SALT DOWN IN THE CELLAR.

Lay a clean cloth over and cover with the lid of the crock. Keep in a cool, dry cellar. When needed for use, wash well and then let soak in soft water for 12 to 24 hours, changing the water two or three times. Cook without salt. The peas and broad beans are, of course, left in the pod before potting.

TO PRESERE VEGETABLES IN SAND.

Have the crocks and plenty of dry, clean sand. Proceed as before, but bury the crock about two feet deep in earth.

TO KEEP VEGETABLE MARROWS.

Let the marrows ripen and grow large and then hang up in a cool, airy place. They will keep until Christmas, and are excellent cooked as fritters or for soup or a curried puree, or egg-crumbed and fried.

They do not taste like the fresh marrow but more like pumpkin.

TO PRESERVE MUSHROOMS.

Choose large button mushrooms, lay them on a sieve, stalks uppermost, and sprinkle well with fine salt to get out the water. When well drained, put them in a deep jar, and set them in a cool oven for an hour, after which take them up carefully, and lay them on a dish to cool. Meanwhile, boil the liquor which has come from them with a blad of of mace till reduced to half; now put the mushrooms into a clean jar, and pour this reduced liquor, when cold, over them, cover with melted suet, and cover down very carefully.

PRESERVED CUCUMBER.

Choose small and young cucumbers, put them into jars, pour a brine over them and cover down, use them in the same way as fresh cucumbers. For the brine: Take two pints of water to one pint of vinegar and one pound of salt, put it all into a pan over the fire till the salt is melted, let it stand to settle, then pour it off clear before using.

PRESERVED CAULIFLOWER

Take up the plants a day or so before they are full grown, and when perfectly dry take off the large under leaves, lay them in rows in a dry shed, and cover the roots of each row with dry leaves of the year, and so on till the whole are stored. Protect them with litter during the frosty weather, but remove the covering as soon as the frost breaks up, and clear away all decayed leaves as they appear.

WHEN CUTTING TEETH
Babies Are Subject to DIARRHOEA

When the baby starts to cut its teeth, then is the time that the poor mother is under the stress of great anxiety. For some reason or other the bowels become loose, and diarrhoea, dysentery, colic, cramps and many other bowel complaints occur; the gums become swollen, cankers form in the mouth, and in many cases the child wastes to a shadow.

When the child gets into this condition the bowels must be looked after very closely, and for this purpose we know of nothing that can equal Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

This sterling remedy has been used for teething children, for over seventy years, by thousands of Canadian mothers who will swear by its efficacy.

Mrs. R. J. Waldruff, South River, Ont., writes: "Two years ago my little girl had diarrhoea while cutting her teeth. She got thin and very weak. I had tried different remedies, but all to vry little good. A friend recommended Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, so I procured a bottle at once, and after she had taken a few doses I could see a change, and by the time she had taken half the bottle she was cured. I think every home should keep it on hand."

ONTARIO CROP STATISTICS FOR THE MONTH OF AUGUST

Acreage of the Principal Field Crops of Ontario and The Probable Yield As Estimated by a Large and Experienced Staff—Fall Wheat Yield is Estimated at Over Fifteen Million Bushels.

The following statistics of the principal field crops of Ontario for 1916 from individual returns made by farmers to the Ontario Bureau of Industries and the yields as estimated by a large and experienced staff of correspondents, who give probable yields according to conditions on August 10th, 1916.

Fall Wheat: 704,867 acres will produce 15,684,923 bush. or 22.2 per acre as against 811,185 acres 24,737, all bush. and 30.5 in 1915. 685,692 acres yielded 14,333,548 bush and 20.9 in 1914. The annual average for 34 years 1882-1915 was 21.3.

Spring Wheat: 144,305 acres 259,257 bush. or 17.7 per acre as against 138,913 acres 2,315,582 bush. or 16.7 per acre in 1915. 118,007 acres 2,169,425 bush. or 18.3 per acre in 1914. Av. 10.1.

Barley: 527,886 acres 13,748,585 bush. 26.0 per acre as against 522,318 acres 19,893,129 bush. and 36.0 in 1915. 579,473 acres 18,096,754 bush or 31.2 per acre. Av. 28.1.

Oats: 2,689,762 acres 77,974,150 bush. or 29.0 per acre as against 2,871,755 acres 120,217,952 bush. or 41.9 in 1915. 2,776,883 acres 103,564,322 bush. or 37.3 in 1914. Av. 35.0.

Rye: 148,788 acres 2,591,233 bush. or 17.4 per acre as against 173,796 acres 3,210,512 bush. and 18.5 in 1915.

Peas: 95,542 acres 1,444,406 bush. or 0.25 per acre as against 3,066,468 acres 2,043,049 bush and 16.1 in 1915. 177,856 acres 2,609,585 bush. or 14.7 per acre in 1914. Av. 19.1.

Beans: 53,999 acres 740,719 bush. or 13.7 per acre as against 69,866 acres 882,819 bush. or 14.0 per acre. 51,149 acres 835,896 bush. or 16.3 in 1914. Av. 17.0.

Hay and Clover: (not including alfalfa): 3,294,419 acres 6,739,259 tons or 20.5 per acre as against 3,066,468 acres 3,925,026 tons and 1.25 in 1915. Av. 1.43.

The acreage in other crops for which no estimates as to yield have been made at this date are as follows. buckwhat, 229,205 against 193,497 in 1916; corn for husking 258,339 and 300,773; corn for silo 439,411 and 443,736; potatoes 139,523 and 173,934; mangel wurzels 42,793 and 50,799; sugar beets 22,482 and 22,890; carrots 2,391 and 2,439; turnips 91,670 and 97,451; mixed grains 485,986 and 475,738; alfalfa 177,565 and 165,284.

There are 3,409,581 acres of cleared land devoted to pasture; 331,796 in summer fallow; 280,653 in orchard; 22,817 in small fruits; 9,807 in vineyard, 57,107 in farm gardens 38,566 in rape; 5,880 in flax; 7,997 in tobacco (Essex 5,826, Kent, 1,444.)

Mass Feeding Is Extended

Food Situation in Germany Found to be Still Serious.

Reports reaching this country in German and London newspapers regarding the conditions under which the system of mass feeding is being extended to the principal cities of the German Empire do not accord with the recent cheery cable notices asserting that in Berlin, for instance, the public kitchens are feeding but comparatively few persons, and that, in general, when the new harvests are all gathered Germany will be able to "hold out" for another year without any particular hardship. When the question of establishing public kitchens in Brunswick was under discussion a delegation from the military headquarters in Hanover, headed by a Captain, appeared before the Food committee and, according to a report reaching the Socialist press, delivered the following ultimatum:

"Headquarters is well aware that the working class of Brunswick is in a ferment and that the agitation is constantly increasing. If steps are not taken to prevent it a general strike will break out and will spread like a flash at Berlin, Hanover, Leipsic, Magdeburg, and other cities. And then it would be all over with the war. This calamity must be avoided! Consequently mass feeding must begin in Brunswick in order to quiet the workers. If the city authorities fail to do this then the commander of the military district will attend to the matter himself. The people must be pacified at all costs!"

Despite the fact that the district around the city of Ulm in Wurttemburg is regarded as one of the richest in Germany, the Strassburger Post announces that Ulm is arranging for mass feeding to continue through the coming winter and continues:

"The mass feeding of the children of the working class has had to be carried through already. Previously it was only the children of soldiers in the field, about 270, that had been fed by the town, but lately it has been necessary to feed daily some 1000 children, who would otherwise have had to go hungry."

In connection with the installation of the communal kitchens in Berlin the Vossische Zeitung reports that a middle class kitchen under the same municipal management will provide the families of civil service employees with three-course meals at 17 cents each.

The municipal authorities of Strassburg, taking into consideration the relatives of its citizens, has, according to the Berliner Tageblatt, established a sliding scale of prices in selling potatoes under which poor persons pay $1.50, those a little better situated, $2, and those in comfortable circumstances, $3 a "zenter." (110 lbs.)

Under the order issued by the Federal Council on June 14, no eggs of any kind may be used in the preparation of dyes or colorings and the Imperial Chancellor is empowered to extend the ban to the uses of eggs for any technical purpose.

Discussing the growing scarcity of butter in Berlin the Tageblatt declares that the real cause is unequal distribution. In running over the list of explanations of the shortage the Tageblatt observes that the first explanation given was lack of fodder. Then when abundant green fodder was available it was said that the cows must get older. Months later the public was informed "with a shrug of the shoulder" that the number of milch cows had greatly diminished. "And now in the middle of summer, with such a crop of fodder as never was, we are driven down to sixty grams (slightly over two ounces) a week."

NEWFOUNDLAND SOLDIERS WERE HEROES OF FIGHT

Men From Island Did "Better Than The Best Says General—Hopeless Task Was Undertaken

MANY DARING DEEDS DONE IN FAMOUS CHARGE OF JULY 1

"Newfoundlanders, I salute you individually. You have done better than the best."

Thus spoke the general to men of the Newfoundland Regiment after its great attack on July 1. The Newfoundlanders were given what is now recognized to have been an impossible task and although they failed, the story of their bravery and their daring will live for ever.

The regiment had been in reserve, waiting to take its appointed place in the great attack—the capture of the third line of German trenches immediately in front of them. The task of capturing the first and the second line was assigned to the English line regiments.

"All the German line," says an eye-witness, "were raked with hundreds of thousands of shells. It seemed impossible that anybody could still be alive. Suddenly the artillery lifted and the English regiments attacked. As if by magic the German lines swarmed with men and machine guns belched out from behind the ruins, and from the mouth of hidden pits, and even from shell holes. The British troops did not waver but they melted away and not many reached the German lines. More shells screamed across this land of dead men, and then other troops rushed to the attack. Again the German machine guns took their toll, and again the attack failed.

NOT A MAN HESITATED.

"Now came the turn of the Newfoundlanders. The fate which had overtaken their comrades daunted them not one bit. These boys—their average age was under 24—were as steady as veterans, as steady as on that parade at St. John's when they embarked for England to fight for the empire. Not a man hesitated. With a cheer they were over the parapet, and with the colonel "Fighting Chitral" Haddo in the van, attempted the impossible.

"Officers fell right and left, but as they fell they waved their men on. 'Right to it, this time,' was the cry. A second lieutenant speedily found himself in charge of a company, and as he fell a sergeant sprang forward to take his place. Companies melted away but as each man fell he always cried, 'Now, right on, boys, right to it this time!' That was their slogan and bounding from shell hole to shell hole these gallant lads struggled toward the German lines. A few of them reached the German wire, which marvellous to relate was almost intact, but they could do not more. The charge was over—they had failed, but in brave company, for at the outset they all realized that what had been impossible for eight English regiments was not possible for them.

SLEEPING EASILY AFTER BATTLE.

"That night few returned to the British lines, but the Newfoundland spirit is indomitable; already the regiment is reshaping itself. For every man that fell in that glorious fight there are two others willing and anxious to take their place, and all burn with the desire to avenge the comrade, the brother and the cousin who fell."

There are now just behind the British lines in this quarter of the field a few mounds of earth which no Newfoundlander fails to salute — the burial ground of those who fell on July 1. Reserves volunteered to a man to recover their dead and under a galling fire from the German rifles and guns they performed their task. "We wanted those at home," said one who did his share, "to know that our comrades sleep easily; that the padre has said the prayer for the dead, and that we who live live to bring the Germans to account."

Survivors are full of stories of the courage of their comrades. They tell how Capt. J. A. Ledingham, the youngest captain, led his company in the charge; how he fell wounded in three places; how he crawled into a shell hole and lay there more dead than alive for upwards of five hours. Then he heard the moaning of a comrade, and peeping over the edge of his shelter, saw lying a few yards away his old Newfoundland chum, Lt. Robertson, almost at his last gasp. Captain Ledingham, hardly able to move crawled to his comrade, and there under a rain of shot and shell, hoisted the lieutenant on his back, and then crawled with him to the British lines.

A FOUR DAYS' ORDEAL.

It is also told how Lieutenant C. S. Frost, a bank clerk from Nova Scotia, three times went out from the comparative safety of the firing trench to bring in wounded comrades. He brought them all in, but two were riddled with bullets as he struggled towards the lines, and died on his back.

In the charge was a young private who but an hour or so before the attack went into the firing line for the first time. He went over the parapet with his comrades and was probably one of those who got nearest to the German lines. All of his comrades were shot down, and he fell into a shell hole that was filled with the dead. He had no idea of direction; he could not tell which were the German and which were the British lines. For four days he stayed there, shells exploding all around him and bullets coming apparently from all quarters if he as much as showed his nose.

His rations were soon exhausted, and he had to take food and water from the dead that were around him. At the end of the fourth day he determined to make for the trenches, but which he did not know. By good fortune he chose the right direction, and was taken in by a British patrol. He was quite unconcerned with regard to his adventure and the only explanation he gave was, "Oh, I was fed up with it out there and determined to get in, that's all."

A machine gun section under an officer and ten N.C.O.'s went into action with 48 men and eight guns. Only a few came back but they brought with them their precious gun. Subsequntly the seven others were recovered.

Everyone speaks in the highest terms of the devotion of the Newfoundland R.A.M.C. They went out time and again under shell fire and snipers' fire to succor the wounded.

HOW THE FAMOUS SEVENTY-FIVE WAS SAVED

telephoned Esterhazy what had happened. After consultation it was decided that Col. Henri forge a document clinching the guilt of Dreyfus. That document was so clumsily made that it proved the undoing of Col. Henri. Being confronted by Col. Picquart, his chief, he admitted his guilt. He was at once arrested, and looked up in Fort Valerien, on the outskirts of Paris. The next morning the prisoner was found dead in his cell, having committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor.

As for Esterhazy, he had disappeared.

Sentiment against Dreyfus commenced to turn. The French law provides that no case can be taken before the Court of Cassation (an institution similar to the supreme court) unless new facts unknown at the first trial have been discovered.

The new facts on which Dreyfus' lawyers based their demands for appeal were numerous. However, the revelation that the document "That animal of Dreyfus" had been communicated to the judges of the court martial and not to the accused, was sufficient to grant a hearing before the Court of Cassation. That court has three separate branches, each composed of 15 members, a correctional, a criminal, and a civil branch.

Owing to the importance of the case, a special law was passed by the chamber of deputies that the Dreyfus case be heard by the three branchs of the court, in joint session; in other words, before the 45 judges composing the supreme court of France.

For weeks and weeks the case was tried, new and startling evidence developed and unanimously the court ordered the acquittal of Dreyfus.

THE STORY OF THE TELEGRAM.

Now as to the telegram that sealed the fate of Dreyfus, read to the judges while deliberating, and sent to the ministry of war. The accused man would undoubtedly have been acquitted but for this damning document. When it fell into the hands of the ministry of war, it read:

"That animal of D. is becoming too exacting."

Only the initial appeared in the message. It was at once assumed that the "D" stood for Dreyfus. It was read to the judges as previously quoted:

"That animal of Dreyfus is becoming too exacting."

It was discovered years afterwards, this telegram referred to another man whose name began with "D" and to another matter far different from this serious trial. Of course, the alliance then existing between Germany and Italy made the suspicion of the telegram stronger since it was from the German military attache to the Italian military attache.

These two men had had affairs with two sisters. One was married to a man whose initial of his last name was "D." It was on the money obtained by the two women he lived, and he kept demanding more from the attaches. The telegram which sent Dreyfus to the tortures of Devil's Island, referred to the demands of this man and not to the secrets of state.

Dreyfus to-day is an old man, broken down in health, by the moral and physical tortures he suffered for nearly five years. He was reintegrated in the army, and on the very spot where he was degraded after his conviction, the ceremony of rehabilitation took place, and the Cross of the Legion of Honor pinned on his uniform. He resigned shortly afterwards owing to his infirmities, which did not prevent him at the outset of the war to offer his services to France. They were refused because of his age, 66. His son, a young sergeant, was killed in one of the battles of Champagne. Dreyfus is still a patriot and still loves France.

As to Esterhazy, the writer met him accidentally in 1899 in the Cafe Metropole, in Brussels. Instead of the dashing officer whom I had seen at the Zola trial, there stood before me a broken down, stooped shouldered, premature old man. He reluctantly consented to an interview.

"What was your object in attributing the writing of the bordereau to Dreyfus?" was my first question.

"His handwriting was similar to mine and I acted under instructions of Col. Henri, who had befriended me. I needed money badly, so did Henri. It was he who suggested to me that I get in touch with the German military attache and offer him certain documents which Col. Henri, owing to his standing in the staff, could easily manufacture. What could I do with an army of creditors bounding me? That is how I came to write the bordereau, which I sold to Colonel von Schwarzkoppen. When that bordereau was discovered by the janitor I had decided to commit suicide but Henri would not hear of it. He had already prepared a way out of the difficulty. He knew that the handwriting of Dreyfus was similar to mine. He knew also that he was very much disliked. Henri's past record and his good notes at the ministry facilitated the manufacturing of proofs which sent Dreyfus to Devil's Island. You know the rest."

That was the first interview ever granted by the ex-major and it was the last. He has since assumed another name and just before the war he was giving French lessons in London, making thereby a scant living.

To-day, with few exceptions, the leading actors of this drama are either dead or in complete oblivion—but the little 75 gun, the star actor, is alive, very much alive.

INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM PERMANENTLY CURED

There are many types of rheumatism, but none worse than inflammatory.

It was this kind that almost killed Mrs. Edw. Warman, of Kent Jct., N.B.

Every known remedy she tried, different doctors gave their advice, but the disease increased.

Weak and despairing, she was at her wits' end when the remarkable cure of Thos. Cullen was published. This gentleman was cured of rheumatism by "Ferrozone." Consequently Mrs. Warman used the same remedy. Here is her statement:

"For five years I have been rheumatic. I tried various forms of relief without success. The disease increased, settled in my joints, and muscles; these swelled, caused excruciating pain and kept me from sleeping. My limbs and arms stiffened, my shoulders were lame and prevented me from working. Week by week I was losing strength and despaired of finding a cure. It was a happy day I heard of Ferrozone. Every day I took Ferrozone I felt better; it eased the painful joints, gave me energy and a feeling of new life.

Ferrozone has power to destroy cured it so that not an ache has ever returned. Even damp weather no longer affects me."

Ferrozone has power to destroy Urie Acid, neutralize and enrich the blood, and therefore does cure the worst cases. Mrs. Warman's statement proves this.

By removing the cause of the disease and building up a reserve of energy, Ferrozone is certain to cure Sufferer, isn't it about time to stop experimenting? Ferrozone is a CURE order to-day, 50c. per box, or six for $2.50, sold by all dealers or direct from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

English Valour The Same Now As It Ever Was

It is good to write the words England and English now and then, and they have not been written enough in this war, because "British" includes all the fighting men of the Empire who have come to these fields of France.

As one of the chroniclers of the war I have done my best, feebly enough, to describe the valour of the Scottish troops, to get something of the Irish spirit into printed words, and to pay honor to Canadians, Australians, New Zealanders, and the gallant Welsh. But the English are also in France, and it is the blood of England that has been poured out upon these battlefields: and it is the old stock and the old spirit of England, from the Border to Land's End, by way of London Town, which has borne the brunt of the great campaign, writes Philip Gibbs.

OLD STOCK IS ALL RIGHT.

One cannot make comparisons in valor, but I know that nothing has gone wrong with the old stock that is bred in Norfolk and Suffolk, Gloucester and Bedford shires, Surrey and Kent and Sussex, and the soil that was Shakespeare's England.

Nothing has gone wrong with it when it produces such battalions as those in the 12th Division out here, which is worth writing about, specially because it has seen some very heavy fighting since it came out in May of last year, among the first instalments of the "New Army," and is entirely recruited from the counties I have named.

The 12th received its baptism of fire in "Plug street" Wood, which was then a quiet part of the line, in spite of the lively little bullets that came with the noise of nuts being cracked from German snipers over the way.

By September of last year these English boys were hard enough and steady enough to be put into one of the hottest parts of the line, where much depended upon their strength of endurance. They relieved the Cavalry and the Guards in the Chalk Pit by Loos, and dug themselves into the Quarries, and held on. Their strength of endurance was tested. Weaker men would have failed and given up ground.

In December they moved on to Givenchy, where they did not have a pleasant time or a safe one, and in February they had the Hohenzollern Redoubt, where they have been off and on ever since.

It was in the Hohenzollern that these English battalions learnt the worst things of war, and because they were so bad gained their greatest honors. It is a foul place, that redoubt, as I know, and those mounds of earth on the bleached and ghastly battlefields of Loos have been wet with the blood of many brave young men—of many hundreds of English lads who were too good to die in such a much-heap, except that they died for England. Scotland, too, has learnt to hate that name of the Hohenzollern, because it has been a graveyard for so many of her men.

WOUNDED CORPORAL'S HEROISM.

A man of Kent named Corp. Cotter, of the Buffs, was one fo those who showed to what heights the courage of English soldiers can go. On the night of March 6 an attack was made by his company along an enemy trench but his own bombing party was cut off owing to heavy casualties in the centre of the attack. Things looked serious and Cotter went back under heavy fire to report and bring up more bombs.

On the return his right leg was blown off close below the knee, and he was wounded in both arms. By a kind of miracle—the miracle of human courage—he did not drop down and die in the mud of the trench, mud so deed that unwounded men found it har to walk—but made his way along fifty yards of trench towards the crater where his comrades were hard pressed. He came up to Lance-Corporal Newman, who was bombing with his sector to the right of the position. Cotter called to him and directed him to bomb six feet towards where help was most needed, and worked his way forward to the crater where the Germans had developed a violent counter-attack.

Men fell rapidly under the enemy's bomb fire, but Cotter, with only one leg, and bleeding from both arms, steadied his comrades, who were beginning to have the wind up, as they say, issued orders, controlled the fire, and then altered dispositions to meet the attack. It was repulsed after two hours' fighting, and only then did Cotter allow his wounds to be dressed. From the dug out where he lay while the bombardment still continued he called out cheery words to the men, until he was carried down—fourteen hours later. He received the V.C., but died of his wounds.

Many of these English soldiers of ours have been buried by mine explosions or shell bursts, but I suppose there are few men who have had such an experience three times on one night. That is the record of Lance-Corporal Boyden of the Middlesex Regiment, during a bombardment of our trenches near the Quarries. He was in charge of a Lewis gun, and no less than three times was completely covered by the earth flung up by the high explosives. Each time he succeeded in getting up, and though he was wounded in the face, remained at his post serving the gun until he was relieved the next day.

ACTS OF SUPREME VALOUR.

Another man, Sergt. Curtis, led a party of volunteers up to this crater during the night under a fierce bombardment in order to get rations to their comrades, who were badly in need of food. Several men fell, but Curtis and others went on through the barrage of shells—and the rations were delivered.

Officers and men vied with each other, yet not for honour or reward, round these craters of the Hohenzollern, and in the mud, and the fumes of shells, the rainswept darkness, and all the black horror of such a time and place, sometimes in groups, and sometimes quite alone, did acts of supreme valor. When all the men in one of these infernal craters were dead or wounded, Lieut. Lea Smith, of the Buffs, ran forward with a Lewis gun, helped by Pte. Bradley, and served it during a fierce attack by German bombers until it jammed.

Then he left the gun and took to bombing, and that single feature of his flinging grenades like an overarm bowler, kept the enemy at bay until reinforcements reached him.

MODEST HEROES.

Another young officer of the Buffs—Lieut. Smeltzer—withdrew his platoon under heavy fire, and although he was wounded fought his way back slowly to prevent the enemy from following up. The men were proud of his gallantry but when he was asked what he had done he could think of nothing except that "when the Boche began shelling I got into a dug out, and when they stopped I came out again."

There were many men like that who do gallant things, and, in the English way, think nothing of them. Of that modesty is Capt. Augrere Dawson, of the Royal West Kents, who did not bother much about a bullet he met on his way to a crater, though it travelled through his chest to his shoulder blade. He had it dressed and then went back to lead his men and remained with them until the German night attack was repulsed. He was again wounded, this time in the thigh, but did not trouble the stretcher men (they had a lot to do on the night of March 18-19), and trudged back alone.

These are but typical deeds done by men of the 12th Division. I should need to write a long tale—and it would be worth writing—to tell all the acts of courage which have won for the 12th so many honors. They include one V.C., two C.B.'s, nine C.M.G.'s, 16 D.S.O.'s, 45 Military Crosses, 85 Distinguished Conduct Medals, and 34 Military Medals.

"THE BLOOD OF ENGLAND."

That is one English division among all those who are with our armies here in France fighting with the same spirit. It is the spirit of those bowmen who came out to these fields when Sir Walter Manny, Sir John Devereux, and other English knights brought their country lads to fight in Flanders, and the spirit of those men-at-arms who faced great odds upon St Crispin's day five hundred years ago, and the spirit of the same type and breed of men who were with Marlborough at St. Omer, and on Cassel, which looks across to Ypres.

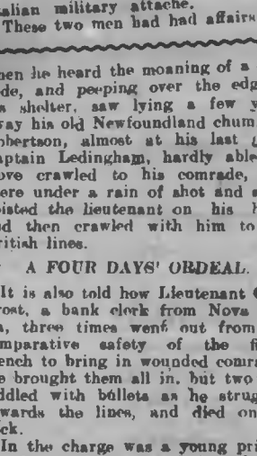
The blood if England running through a thousand years of history has not gone thin or weak, and the old strain is out here again in the old battlefields, though not against the same foe, and is being spilled, alas! like water—upon soil soaked with English blood centuries ago, so that the poppy fields which are flaming red now against the white chalk of the trenches might be the flower of all the English youth which has lain beneath the French earth.

An English inventor has patented a device to push a printer's hands out of danger while he is feeding a platen press.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SKIRT

By Anabel Worthington



With that open air smartness that bespeaks "sport," this skirt, which is cut in four gores and made with front closing, is an excellent model for poplin, pongee, alpaca, striped linen, striped gabardine, crash and similar weaves for real summer wear. Its merit is altogether in its cut and the side pockets that are ornamented with buttons. A stitched seam is noticeable down the centre front. Either a raised or the regulation waistline may be used and a yoke belt arranged about the waist, according to whether the regulation or raised waistline be chosen.

Although a very plain design, this garment shows that the new ideas have been put forward in its making, so that it measures up to the correct standard. It is very much of this season, with just novel pockets and buttons to mark them, and few women desire more than this featured in a skirt for general utility wear.

The pattern of skirt No. 7,900 is cut in sizes 24 to 32 waist measure. To make like the illustration in size 24 you will require 3¼ yards of 36 inch material.

You may obtain the pattern by sending [illegible] to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

ROUMANIANS ATTACK ON WIDE FRONT

FRENCH SCORE SUCCESSES AT VERDUN

The Roumanian Troops Have Joined Forces With Russians

Army Which Entered Transylvania West of Piatra Has Linked Up With Czar's Forces According to Afternoon Report --French Have Made Fresh Gains in Fighting at Verdun---Germany Expects Greece is in Next.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

ZURICH, August 29.—Roumanian troops, which had been concentrated at Jassy near the Russian frontier, entered Transylvania at a point to the west of Piatra, and according to information here are reported to have joined forces with Russian troops coming from Bukowina.

LONDON, August 29.—Roumanian troops attacked on the whole Teutonic front yesterday and obtained successes, said a Bucharest despatch transmitted from Rome by wireless to-day.

PARIS (French Official), August 29.—The French made considerable progress in violent attacks on the Verdun front last night, it was officially announced to-day. Some prisoners were taken. The French gains were made southeast of Thiaumont Works. The Germans made two attacks on Fleury village and in the vicinity of Fort Vaux, but were completely checked, losing heavily.

Pro-Russian Riots In Bulgaria Now

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BUCHAREST, August 29.—According to trustworthy news received by the Journal Epoch the situation in Bulgaria is very critical.

During the last few days pro-Russian demonstrations have taken place at Philipopholis Yamboli, and Stara Zagora, and the Government was compelled to call upon a German division to crush them. The population attacked soldiers, who fired, killing and injuring a great number of rioters.

Von Mackenzen To Fight Roumanians

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

THE HAGUE, August 29.—Field Marshal Von Mackensen, who directed the successful Austro-German campaign through Serbia a year ago, will be in command of the German-Bulgarian armies operating against Roumania, according to Berlin advices to-day.

The German General Staff planes to paralyze the Roumanians with a blow that will eliminate them as a factor in the war within a few months. The Roumanian Minister to Berlin is leaving to-day on a special train. He sought a farewell interview last night with Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg, but the interview was refused.

Germany Prepares For Greece's Entry

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, August 29.—Germany is preparing for Greece's entry into the war, said a Copenhagen despatch to the Exchange Telegraph to-day. A number of Greeks already have left Germany the despatch to-day said, and diplomats at Berlin believe war inevitable. Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg will receive the Greek Minister to-morrow.

Russians Repulsed Is Austrian Claim

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BERLIN, August 29.—An Austrian statement of Monday says Russian attacks in the Carpathians and further north in the region of Mariampol, were repulsed with heavy losses.

Bulgars' Fall Hastened By Entry of Roumania

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

(By Take Jonescu, Leader of the Liberal Party of Roumania, and Former Minister of the Interior.)

BUCHAREST, August 29.—Only a great German victory could have checked Roumanian intervention. It failed to materialize, and we have stepped into the war: First to realize our national aspirations; secondly, inspired by the humanitarian spirit to shorten the war, which will now end six months sooner than was expected a week ago.

The most valuable reward of our intervention will be Transylvania, populated by four million Roumanians. The Banat of Temesvar, also mainly Roumanian, and Bukowina, too, will be in the balance. Hungary will lose a quarter of her territory and population, including the big towns of Temesvar, Kolosvar and Brasso, as well as her richest mining districts.

Regarding the future course of the war, our intervention hastens Bulgaria's downfall and hurries the downfall of Constantinople, enabling Russia to ship much-needed cereals to Britain, France and Italy.

MRS. ADA RUSSELL SEEKING ALIMONY CRUELTY ALLEGED Couple Were Married in Peterborough County on June 7th, 1893—Wife Wants Sufficient to Live on.

COUPLE QUARRELLED

MACLEOD, Aug. 29.—Action for alimony has been started in supreme court by Mrs. Ada M. Russell against Allen Russell, a well-known couple in the farming district around Macleod. The amount of alimony asked is not stated, the claim merely being for sufficient on which to live decently. Johnstone and Ritchie filed the statement of claim for the plaintiff.

According to the causes set forth in the statement of claim, the couple were married in Peterborough County, Ont., on June 7th, 1893, coming west a few years ago to settle at Macleod. Three children were born, one of them now under six years of age. It is alleged that in December, 1915, the defendant, who is claimed to be a man of violent passions and ungovernable temper, ill-treated the plaintiff, saying: "I'll smash you into the earth." Other quarrels followed and it is alleged that on May 24th of this year he drove her and her infant child out of the house at 10 o'clock at night. They went to her son's place close by, for shelter. On June 7th she returned home but was again driven off. It is claimed that defendant has a section of land and $5,000 personal property which was gained partly through plaintiff's help. The court is asked to grant alimony and an injunction restraining defendant from selling the land while the case is pending.

A Wonderful Stock Company At The Grand

The Florence Johnston Stock Company opened a week's engagement at The Grand Opera House last night, a crowded house greeting the opening of a new theatrical season. The company made a hit of the greatest magnitude in their presentation of "The Lion and the Mouse," and it is a safe bet that they will play to capacity business for the balance of the week. Miss Johnston is a very talented and clever actress, and she has surrounded herself with a caste of much ability, the company being surprisingly strong for an attraction at such prices. The company will present a strong list of metropolitan successes during the week, their offering to-night being Bayard Veiller's striking play "Within the Law." There will be matinees on Thursday and Saturday.

OTONABEE AND SMITH EACH CONTRIBUTES TO THE NEW BATTALION

Country is Leading The City so Far in Representation in 247th in Spite of Scarcity of Labour on the Farms---Uniforms Have Been Applied for---235th to Move to Cobourg---To-day's Military News.

Both Otonabee and Smith contributed a recruit to the 247th Battalion this morning and the county is now leading the city in representation in the new unit. Otonabee is represented by Joseph C. Gamey who lives near Mather's Corners; while the Smith contribution is Roland Foster McMahon of Bridgenorth. Both recruits were attested to-day. Several applications faced the medical examination yesterday but were rejected and the day was a blank as far as successful applicants were concerned. Lt.-Col. Johnstone has applied for uniforms for the new battalion and a supply is expected shortly. The commanding officer of the 247th was in uniform himself this morning. He has postponed his trips to the North Hastings end of his district for a few days in order to complete plans here.

KINGSTON, Aug. 28.—To-day County Magistrate Hunter sentenced Pte. McClement, 156th Battalion, to nine months' imprisonment for desertion. McClement had a bad record, having also deserted from the R.C.H.A.

COBOURG, Aug. 28.—It is now stated that the headquarters of the 235th Northumberland and Durham Battalion will be moved to Cobourg from Bowmanville in the Autumn and that the battalion will Winter here. The battalion is now fast approaching a strength of 400. Some two hundred and fifty or three hundred men will be quartered at the Armories and the remainder billeted.

The Kingston Whig Says:

"146th Battalion baseball team beat Irish Rangers to-day 12 runs to 8 for Camp Championship and side bet of $1,000," was the pleasing telegram received by the Whig from Valcartier on Saturday night. It means that in sports the Kingston Battalion is leading a camp of 20,000 men and making the name of Kingston famous all through the Dominion on the quality of the ball team that is in the latest battalion to be sent from its district for overseas. Lieut.-Col. C. A. Low may well be proud of the splendid kind of men in his unit but is no more proud than is every Kingstonian to learn that this team has gathered in all the honors in spite of the competition of all the many battalions now training in the eastern camp grounds.

The defeating of the Irish Rangers (Montreal Battalion) is certainly a worthy honor. The Battalion has the privilege of recruiting Irish Catholics from all over the Dominion and with such a wide opportunity tried to make its ball-team better than the others which did not have such exceptional advantages.

Pte. Harry Knowles of the Bantam's Battalion has been home on leave from Camp Borden.

The Kingston Whig says:

Lieut.-Col. W J. Brown, General Staff officer, is preparing the list of officers for the next draft of subalterns to go from Military District No. 3 Overseas.

There is a large surplus of junior officers waiting for appointments and the method of sending small groups in drafts should do much to relieve the trying situation. When consideration is made of the fact that the great majority made sacrifices to join the service and now having made those sacrifices have little chance of being appointed to an existing unit here, the pleasure that the announcement of a draft causes may be realised. Every officer is anxious that his name should go on the list and urgent means are used to bring this about. The draft is made up from a standpoint of efficiency.

In a recent letter to his wife Lieut. Hubbs stated that Lieut. Harry Rogers was very ill. Lieut. Rogers was shot through the lungs, and it is evident that this is causing him a great deal of trouble.

Mrs. Layfield, Charlotte street, received a letter from her son yesterday, Quartermaster Capt. R. E. Layfield, with the 80th Battalion in England, in which he stated he had called on the 93rd Battalion in camp and had met a great many of the officers and men and that they were located and cared for.

Contract of Lindsay Work For U. S. Firm

Westinghouse, Church, Kerr and Co. Will Build New Arsenal

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, Aug. 29.— The work of constructing the new government arsenal at Lindsay, Ont., has been awarded to Westinghouse, Church, Kerr and Company, of San Francisco, Chicago, New York and Montreal. The work has been awarded on a percentage basis.

The company in question has done much work for the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railways and various other concerns in the Dominion. It has also constructed several arsenals in the United States, and it was principally due to its experience in this line of work, and because reputation for living up to its contracts, that a Canadian contract was awarded to it. It is said that not a single Canadian architect or contractor was given a chance to secure any of this work.

Rumour also has it that the amount involved is between three and four millions.

New Forces of the Allies Strike Into Transylvania Immediately —Germany Declares War on Roumania Berlin Announces.

GREECE IN NEXT

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Germany today declared war on Roumania. The action, decided upon at a hurriedly convoked session of the Federal Council in Berlin, was taken following the announcement from Bucharest that Roumania considers herself in a state of war with Austria-Hungary.

Roumania's decision to throw in her lot with the Quadruple Entente, coming simultaneously almost with Italy's declaration of war against Germany, was quickly followed by a clash between Roumanians and Austrians on Austrian soil.

The Roumanian third army struck into Transylvania, the rich Austro-Hungarian province, immediately word had been flashed from the War Ministry that hostilities had been declared. Advance guards came into contact at Rothenthum Pass, 16 miles south of Hermanstadt, according to an official statement reaching here to-night from Vienna. Fighting also is going on in the passes south of Kronstadt.

A statement issued to-day by the French Foreign Office announces that Roumania has declared war against Germany as well as Austria. This is not reported from any other source.

The entry of Roumania into the war is expected to be the deciding influence on the future action of Greece. King Constantine is reported to-night to have called a War Council at Athens.

Great demonstrations are being held throughout Greece in favour of the Entente. During a tremendous demonstration of 50,000 Greeks before his residence, former Premier Venizelos, pro-ally leader, delivered a speech which is accepted as a practical threat to the King that Greece must join the Entente.

GREEK KING ILL.

King Constantine of Greece is ill. He was operated upon this morning, according to an Athens despatch to the Daily News.

An Exchange Telegraph despatch from Cologne says the Kaiser first heard the news of the declarations of war by Italy and Roumania while visiting Cracow with Gen. von Falkenhayn, the German chief of staff. The visit was at once abandoned, the Kaiser motoring through the city and returning at top speed to the German headquarters in the east at Pless, Silesia. The Emperor is expected in Berlin this week.

A despatch from Bucharest received via The Hague states that Roumania has been making munitions at a tremendous rate for the last three months. All the factories have been working full pressure, 24 hours daily.

Consternation is plainly in evidence in the despatches of German and Austrian correspondents. One wired saying "If King Carol were still alive and in possession of his mental faculties the Entente powers would never have succeeded in obtaining Roumania's intervention."

Roumania's decision to make war was announced at 9 o'clock last night (Bucharest time) but word did not reach here until early this morning. It led to tremendous enthusiasm in London. The opening of a huge Balkan offensive which will cut the communications of the central empires with Bulgaria and Turkey, will win back Serbia and Montenegro from the invaders and end once for all the German dream of a sphere of influence from "Berlin to Bagdad"-is confidently expected.

The Roumanian Ministers to Austria-Hungary and Germany are already on their way home. The representatives of the central empires at Bucharest likewise have received their passports, and are leaving the

COMMITTEE WOULD FAVOUR THE PURCHASE OF CHEMICAL ENGINE

Ald. Evans, Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee Revives a Timeworn Proposal to Motorize the Fire Department —Committee Will Consider Matter at a Latter Date.

REPORT RECEIVED

At last night's meeting of the Fire, Water and Light committee of the City Council, Ald. Evans, chairman of the committee, presented a report dealing with the recent visit of himself and Fire Chief Howard to the Fire Chief's convention, that was held in Windsor. The report, which was signed by Ald. Evans, contained a recommendation for a motor driven chemical engine, to cost five thousand dollars. It was suggested that debentures be issued for the payment of the same. Ald. Saunders was of the opinion that a five thousand dollar truck would be altogether too light for the needs of a city the size of Peterborough.

Avoid a Deficit.

Ald. Stratton assured the committee that next year a truck capable of carrying fifteen hundred feet of fire hose could be purchased for six hundred dollars. "We should go into this matter in a systematic manner if we are to avoid a deficit at the end of the year," said Ald. Stratton.

Ald. Duncan—"We ought to get a good one if we get anything."

Ald. Edagr said he would like to see the department equipped with at least one piece of motor driven apparatus. The committee as a whole were in favour of putting in a motor driven truck of some kind. The report was received on motion of Ald. Stratton. The committee will invite next year's Council to take up the matter and perhaps submit a proposal to the ratepayers in the form of a by-law.

A Whitehead torpedo will be on exhibition at the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition this year, the first to be seen in this city. Mr. Ruddy, K.C., acting for Capt. LIKE CLOCK-WORK.

The clock-work concord of the Entente powers is one of the strongest elements of the quadruple alliance. The new drives have been timed and coordinated almost as exactly as an eclipse, and there is a suspicion of co-relation between Roumania's entry into the war and the Italian declaration of war on Germany. The new situation shows that a decisive moment has arrived in the conduct of the war. The unity of purpose, sentiment and action of the allies in military matters indicates that the same spirit will prevail when Germany's militarism having been crushed, the readjustment of the shattered condition of Europe demands attention. Roumania is the only one of the allied group that frankly confesses that self advantage in the way of territorial gain is her object in entering the fight; and her late entry will require that she do a good deal of effective work in helping the triumph of the common cause before she can claim large consideration on the day of settlement. Thus we may conclude that her share in the fight will measure up to the limit of her ability.

THE BROAD BACK FOR THE BURDEN.

This war is being waged in the interest of the under-dog, the smaller nations, and incidentally, the welfare of the "common people," that is, the masses, generally represented by the labouring classes. As Labour Day is near, one naturally thinks of how the spirit of watching over, and fighting for, the interests of the comparatively weak are being defended to. Wealth has heretofore not only given to its possessor the doubtful benefit its ownership is supposed to confer, but wealth has had the large place upon the sunny side of government favour. But wealth, in Britain is, in a sense, suffering what the population does not have to endure in its full sense—conscription—compulsory proportionate contribution. Premier Asquith recently showed a labour deputation that whereas before the war an income of $9,000 paid $65 income tax, today the tax on that amount is $225; that is nearly ten per cent, as against a former 2 1-2 per cent. The tax on incomes of $5,000 had risen, he said, from $190 to $685, and on an income of $25,000—and there are a plenty of them—the tax had increased from $1,400 to $6,510. He added that he knew of no other country that was exacting anything like similar contributions to public service as Britain was exacting from the wealthier classes, and he did not know that this process was yet at an end. Are the wealthier classes in Canada being made to bear a share proportionate to their means in financing this war? Sir Thomas White, our Minister of Finance, might give the subject some of his official attention.

ANOTHER LIFT OF THE WAR CLOUD.

With the entrance of Rumania into the war we have now fourteen nations under arms, fighting along aggregate battle fronts of nearly fifteen hundred miles. Rumania has shivered on the brink a long time; but it is doubtful if she could have found a more psychological moment for her action to influence the result of the war. Her course will probably decide wavering Greece, and then literally and figuratively the fat will be in the fire—for the Central Powers. Rumania's entrance into the war is one of the most important events of the year in its bearing upon the progress of the Entente Allies. It will not only hearten the already winning armies of the allies on the several fronts but materially aid them by the necessary thinning of the Austro-German lines to man the new front that Rumania's belligerency will make necessary. Rumania will be an important factor. Like all the Balkan people, her soldiers are all good fighters, and she will be able to put from 800,000 to 900,000 well armed soldiers in the field and use them with the greatest effect. The question of transportation will not trouble her for she has two enemies at her gates. On one side is Bulgaria and she has only to right-about-face to confront Austro-Hungary. Russian co-operation is made more conveniently possible for Russia is contiguous to Rumania's eastern boundary from the Black Sea, north as far as it extends. Serbia touches her boundary on the west. Thus Rumania is admirably situated to help very materially in driving the Central Powers from Serbia, and she can be a factor in seizing the Berlin-Sofia-Constantinople railway—cutting the main artery by which Germany provides transfusion of blood to anemic and tottering Turkey. That country is in extremis now, and Rumania, and possibly Greece added to her antagonists will represent the last straw. The situation looks better and the prospects for substantial progress in breaking finally and forever the tyranny of German militarism, brighter than any time since the war began. Rumania adds another to the many disappointments the Kaiser has met. It represents a deadly diplomatic defeat and it paves the way to material defeat. There is no doubt that Germany has long been intriguing to secure Rumania for her side. It is a fact that Rumanian artillery is armed with Krupp guns and it is the irony of fate that Germany has provided Rumania with weapons to be used against herself. The outlook brightens, the ring of fire and steel that engirds Germany and Austria is growing stronger and narrower every day. Every day it becomes stronger and tighter, for every day the Entente Allies are growing stronger in all resources, men, munitions, money and morale. But there is still a great deal of hard fighting to do. Germany will fight to the last ditch to postpone the deadly day of reckoning as long as possible.

SHORT OF MUNITION WORKERS.

Once again, let it be pointed out—while Mr. J. W. Flavelle, Canadian Chairman of the Imperial Munitions Commission, is telling of the shortage of labour—there is, and has been from the first, a nucleus of skilled workers in the Canadian Government shops capable of building up a most valuable national auxiliary to the munitions industry. The Government must surely know what machinery it has, and how many mechanics, skilled machinists and shop labourers are employed by the various departments—railways and canals, marine, public works, mines and other branches of the service.—Ottawa Citizen.

BISHOP'S MOVING APPEAL.

In a most pathetic letter addressed to the German Governor of Lille, Monseigneur Charost, Bishop of Lille, wrote:

"My mission imposes upon me the duty of the protection of the weak and the unarmed which are of my family and whose burdens and griefs are my own.

"To dislocate our family life by carrying off youths and young girls from their homes is not war. It is a torture for us, and worst of tortures—indefinite moral torture.

"With the violation of the rights of families are involved the most delicate exigencies of morality."

DEMOBILIZATION OF BRITISH ARMY

It is clear, from Mr. Asquith's reply to a trade union deputation at the House of Commons on August 3, that the Government is preparing machinery for the smooth return of men from the army to industrial life at the end of the war.

Labour's five proposals on the demobilization problem were submitted by officials of the Miners' Federation, the National Union of Railwaymen and the Transport Workers' Federation, including Messrs. Smillie, Gosling and Bellamy. Mr. J. H. Thomas said that more than half of the 1,250,000 workers they represented were in the army.

The Prime Minister thanked the speakers for the conciliatory and cogent way in which they had presented their case. "The Government and the country recognize," he said, "that the great trades you represent have contributed nobly and on the most generous scale to the necessities of the nation, and it would show a want not only of gratitude, but of justice, if the State did not try to secure that when the war ends proper conditions of work shall be restored, and that men who have shown such a splendid example of patriotic devotion shall be secured, as far as possible, from unavoidable suffering.

The Substitutes.

"On the other hand, you have to consider those men and women who have taken their places. The problems are, first, the reinstatement of those who have been away, and, secondly, the replacement of those who have stood in their places and done their work. I do not suppose a more complex problem has ever presented itself to any nation; and it is right that while peace—although we hope it is not very far off—is not immediately assured, we should prepare for the resumption of normal action in the industrial community."

On the first of the five proposals put before him (restoration of trade union practices after war), the Prime Minister said that most explicit and emphatic pledges had been given that all trade union conditions should be restored after the war, and the Government had no intention of departing from that pledge in the least degree. Provision was made for the interpretation of these agreements in all controlled establishments, and the Government was carefully considering the kind of machinery to be set up to dispose of the difficulties of interpretation in other establishments.

The principles embodied in the second proposal (State maintenance or other work at standard rates for displaced men and women workers) had been recognised by the Government so far as persons engaged in munition work were concerned, and 1,500,000 workers had been temporarily insured against unemployment. They must not assume that the Government was prepared to adopt the precise proposals laid down by the deputation. Undoubtedly there would be some industries where numbers would be displaced at the end of the war, and the matter was engaging their careful attention.

Gradual Demobilization.

As to the third proposal (gradual absorption in civil work of men now in the Army), it was obvious that the demobilisation of the Army, whenever and under whatever conditions it took place, would be a gradual process. Therefore, he did not think there would be any sudden glut in the labour market. At the same time, some period of furlough must inevitably be granted at the close of the war. (Cheers.)

(This also meets proposal 4: Extended furlough at full Army pay; with separation and billeting allowance, while men recuperate before starting civilian work).

"I should like to say," continued Mr. Asquith, "that the Government, having set up a Demobilization Committee on which Labour is powerfully represented—I believe my friend, Mr. Bellamy, is a member—the matter is being carefully examined in all its complications.

"Your fifth point also falls within the general purview of the Demobilisation Committee (Labour Registration Bureaux for transferring men from the Army to civilian employment.) Every representation made by the committee will receive most careful consideration and respectful attention. I hope that in a very short space of time we shall be able to translate those representations into machinery which will enable us to deal with the problems connected with the dispersal of the Army.

Write for Particulars

French Exposure of Germany's Organized System of Lying

The following is a translation of an article by Gabriel Hanotaux of the French Academy, published in the Paris Figaro of July 21:

The German papers write, apropos of the British offensive, "It is a complete new army which now confronts us." It would be more correct if they should say, "It is the whole world."

Mr. Asquith one day defined the British Empire as an ever-increasing community of freed men. These free men grouped themselves spontaneously, not only to save the Empire, but to save the independence and guard the liberty of the peoples of the world, and this group did not confine itself within the limits of Great Britain; they transported to Paris and came, rendering homage, to the soldiers of this sainted universal cause.

These units are invincible in the present and will be indestructible in the future. Germany, following the lead of her professors, her doctors, her junkers, has taken the false route, aiming for the absurd programme of domination and of tyranny. She has sworn that by force alone she shall rule, but, if the force should fail her, what remains there?

Besides, force is going to fail her—from then on—trouble, uncertainty, the anguish which exudes from her official communiques, working to create an atmosphere of calm—from then on—remorse, which even now, is so transparent in the imperial proclamation, "I didn't wish for this."

In many events the German official communique have lied more than once Berlin has had to take down her flags, hoisted in celebration of an officially announced victory, a victory flung to the crowd by the Emperor himself from the balcony of his palace.

The German successes have always been "arranged" in such a fashion that they have kept up in the people a false confidence in victory. First the coming victory, and then the final victory.

In truth, it was time to speak thus, high and clear, and to announce abroad the exact truth. We have been too modest. I can never repeat enough that this error, due to the invisibility of the battlefields, has allowed the Germans to deceive us, to deceive neutral nations, and to deceive even themselves. They have lied impudently, and they still lie in saying that the British communique do not tell the truth.

The German people and the Bavarian people will read, because they will be made to read:

First—The report of a company of the 16th Regiment of Bavarian infantry: "Fire violent; effectives of the company, one officer, twelve men. I demand to be relieved. All the rest of the company wiped out."

Second—The report of another company of the same battalion: "The company has totally lost all military value. The survivors are so used up that they can no longer fight. I demand urgent relief."

Third—The report of the Second Battalion: "The battalion comprises actually three officers, two subalterns and nineteen men."

Excellent matter to communicate. These documents can be submitted to a "severe verification." The information which it contains has even a certain military flavor, and, if they could multiply this species of precise news, controlled every two hours, even every hour, it would be better, and again better. They would finally enter into the craniums of the Boches the fact that they have been deceived.

Payments Double The Work Performed

Kelly Firm's Donation to Patriotic Fund Charged to Buildings Account.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 29. — John S. Ferris, formerly bookkeeper for Thos. Kelly and Sons, swore yesterday afternoon in the ex-Ministers' trial, when he last saw the books of the Kelly firm in April last, the year cost of the work done on the Parliament Buildings was entered in the books at about $700,000, according to his recollection. At that time the records show Kelly had been paid by the Government over $1,600,000. Ferris said Kelly's contribution to the Patriotic Fund, was charged up to the Parliament Buildings, as well as the material on the ground, plant and labour, and material in the work.

Ferris said there was never any lump sum written in the caisson account in the firm's books until after the work was completed. He told of seeing Dr. R. M. Simpson go into Thomas Kelly's private office once or twice about the time the contract was let, and there had been many telephone conversations between Kelly and Simpson.

The possibility of charging storage batteries by exposing them to sunlight is advanced by a German scientist who has charged experimental batteries with ultraviolet rays.

The Right Time.

The right time to reach the members of the family is when they are at home, and the right way to reach them is through the advertising columns of the paper that goes into the homes. There are other methods of advertising that enjoy a certain transitory popularity, because they are new or novel, but the oldest, wisest and most successful advertisers tie their faith to the home newspaper. When people are away from their homes, there are a thousand things to divert their attention, but an advertisement read in the quiet of the family circle will be read and remembered.

REMARKABLE DIARY OF GERMAN COLONEL

Prisoner's Records Show Allies' Somme Drive Prevented German Blow Further South

Lieut. Colonel Bedall, commanding the Sixteenth Bavarian Infantry, Tenth Division, was taken prisoner by the British on July 13th. On him was found a remarkable diary, which gives the writer's impressions of the first twelve days of the Franco-British offensive. A revelation quite amazing is that the Germans had made an enormous concentration on a narrow front at Roye, south of the zone of the offensive, of twenty-two to twenty-five divisions for an assault on the French lines. Their purpose was anticipated and foiled by the drive on the Somme front, which was weakly held by only five German divisions with two or three in reserve. The rest of the story is one long account in detail of the dreadful slaughter wrought by "overwhelming superiority."

The authenticity of the diary is vouched for by the Reuter Agency. On June 30 Colonel Bedall notes that the "British began to bombard Bapaume with guns of very heavy calibre," and he assembled the battalion commanders and explained to them the situation as follows:

"After a very intense bombardment of the entire Second Army front and under cover of the ground haze, the long expected English offensive has set in. With an overwhelming superiority of artillery, the English have maintained for eight days an infernally violent bombardment, and this, in part, with guns of the heaviest calibre, (28 centimeter), and with naval guns.

"This was directed on our trenches, our second and third lines, our billets, and on the villages. It has set fire to and blasted into ruins almost all the hamlets behind our first line, as far back as fifteen to twenty kilometers (nine and a half to twelve and a half miles.)

"This has enabled them at the outset to obtain partial successes south of the Ancre rivulet, but north of it we have been able to maintain our positions, except for a few unimportant alterations in the line.

"The troops who had so far held the lines south of Mametz and south of Montauban (Prussians among them Regiment No. ——) had sustained severe losses from the intense enemy bombardment, which had been maintained for many days without a pause, and for the most part were already shot to pieces.

"While on the German side, the first line, on such part of the Second Army front as was subjected to the attack, was held by only five divisions, with two or three divisions in reserve, according to accounts received on the front Monchy-Roye, twenty-two to twenty-five divisions had been concentrated for an attack on a narrow front, echeloned in considerable depth.

"The necessary artillery and infantry reinforcements were to some extent concentrated toward the end of June. Under these circumstances there was a very heavy task awaiting us.

"The position became even more critical, because it afterwards came out that the Sixth Bavarian Reserve Regiment, which on the morning of July 1st, was thrown into Montauban had been completely destroyed.

WHOLESALE LOSSES.

"Of 3,500 men, only 500 survivors remained and these are for the most part men who have not taken part in the battle, plus two regimental officers and a few stragglers who turned up on the following day.

"All the rest are dead, wounded or missing; only a small fraction fell into the enemy's hands as prisoners. The regimental staff and the battalion staffs have all been captured in their dug outs.

"The Sixth Bavarian Reserve Regiment is said to have surrendered owing to the complete shortage of ammunition, which had all been expended but maintained a heroic resistance until the last moment.

"These dirty, English are said to have slain these brave people without mercy, although the lack of ammunition rendered them all but defenceless, and although by signals they showed their readiness to surrender."

Describing a German counterattack of July 3, the diary says:

"A report came in from the two battalions which were now fighting that they were bearing the brunt of a very intense bombardment, and were also under machine gun fire, so that it was evident that they would be annihilated unless the timely intervention of the Twelfth Reserve Division, eased the position of the Sixteenth Regiment. Also that the support of our artillery must be more effective, seeing that at the present time it could not be said to satisfy imperative needs.

"I therefore make an earnest appeal to this division but at first it insisted on the continuation of the attack—which had no chance of success.

"Only when I declared that my entire regiment would be lost if permission was to be withheld from me to break off this costly battle did the Twenty-eighth Reserve Division consent.

"Therefore, I issued orders to both battalions, 'The attack of the First and Second Battalions of the Sixteenth Regiment will not continue. In the course of the day and during the ensuing night the battalions will break off the engagement and withdraw on the second line, Bazentin-le-Grand—Longueval, but this second line will be strengthened and held at all costs.'

STAFF'S NARROW ESCAPE.

"A heavy battle raged all day; villages, roads, trenches and troops came under an intense artillery fire Only with difficulty could even the regimental staff reach its new battle headquarters after it had left Longueval, for that too, was now exposed to heavy shelling."

The First Battalion, adds the Col., succeeded in reaching its position in the sector Bazentin-le-Grand-Longueval, and maintaining itself there. The retirement towards the morning was effected by splitting up into small groups.

"Towards evening on July 5," proceeds the diary, "a strong English attack matured which had been preceded by several hours of artillery preparation. This attack developed from the direction of Fricourt towards Contalmaison, where the English succeeded in occupying the Jaeger Height, southwest of the village.

"But they were thrown back again by a counter attack undertaken to ward evening by the 185th Infantry Brigade. During the night Bazentin-le-Grand was under heavy shell fire while Longueval was bombed by the English airmen."

The diary then says: "In the afternoon of July 6th the English attacked with strong forces coming from the direction of Boisselle on either side of Contalmaison. The 185th Infantry Brigade was this evening; or rather during the night, by a counter attack, to retake the Jaeger Height south west of Contalmaison.

"Toward midnight the din of battle was very pronounced, coming from the direction of Contalmaison. It continued with undiminished strength throughout the forenoon.

"Strong English forces, in part conveyed by motor lorries, are coming from the direction of Fricourt towards 'Kuchen' ravine and Mametz Wood about noon, which all points to the continuation of English attacks. Some of these were partially repulsed.

THE PRUSSIAN GUARD.

"July 7. The English at once again let off gas. Bazentin-le-Grand and the positions of the Sixteenth Regiment were subjected to a lively bombardment on the evening of the 6th inst., which has completely wrecked them.

"On July 7 the line was pierced as far as Contalmaison; fourteen companies of the Third Guard Division were ordered to counter attack, coming from the direction of Martinpuich and Flers, and advancing southwest on Contalmaison.

"At 10 p.m., Bazentin-le-Grand was subjected to half an hour's surprise fire by the enemy's artillery. This was of unprecedented violence and destroyed the village to such an extent that there is nothing but a heap of bricks to be seen there now.

"In the course of July 10, there was very heavy fighting in the Mametz Wood in which No. 1 section of the Machine Gun Company of the Sixteenth Regiment suffered exceptionally great loss by a direct hit of fifteen men and one platoon commander killed and twelve men wounded.

"Towards evening a furious struggle began in the Mametz Wood. This lasted the entire night until the morning. The Third Battalion of the Sixteenth Regiment and the Second Battalion of the Lehr Regiment were heavily engaged.

"To-day a draft of 300 men arrived from the recruit battalion. Each battalion received 100 men to make up for the losses.

"Bazentin-le-Grand was repeatedly shelled to-day, but during the night less so than usual."

On July 11 the Colonel continues: "During the day very intense and methodical shelling of the regimental sector from 9 a.m. till late evening by guns of very heavy calibre, including 28cm. Bazentin-le-Grand suffered terribly but the sector held by the Third Battalion of the Lehr Regt., suffered no loss (on our immediate right). Bazentin-le-Grand is to-day a scene of war and devastation which cannot be improved upon.

"The Third Battalion of the Sixteenth Regiment found the situation in Mametz Wood to be very unfavorable, and suffered severely in consequence.

"During the day the regimental sector was bombarded in the usual way, and Bazentin was also much damaged. Heavy fighting in Trones Wood."

AMBASSADOR'S RUSE FREED AN AMERICAN

IOWAN WAS HELD SIX WEEKS IN AN AUSTRIAN PRISON, SUSPECTED OF SMUGGLING MINERAL.

NEW YORK, Aug. 28.—Dr. D. Powell Johnson, a dermatologist, of Muscatine, Iowa., who arrived in this city on the steamer La Touraine last Tuesday and is now at the Hotel Manhattan, spent six weeks in a prison in Austria on the charge of attempting to smuggle radium out of the country, he said yesterday. He was saved from a longer term, he said, through the intervention of Ambassador Penfield, who shouldered the responsibility and said that he had sent the radium to this country for Dr. Johnson.

Dr. Johnson lived in Austria thirteen years, returning to this country in June 1915, intending to stay here. He went back last November in order to get $15,000 worth of radium which he had previously made arrangements to purchase from the Austrian Government, which holds the production of radium as a state monopoly. So intense is the feeling against Americans, even those who have lived long and are well known in Austria, Dr. Johnson said, that he was immediately denounced to the police on his return to Austria. The first accusation against him came, he had learned, from a former Austrian friend, who had for years been in the same clinic with him.

"The suspicion against foreigners" Dr. Johnson said, "is especially intense against Americans, because they have a reputation with the police of being ingenious and resourceful in circumventing civil and military regulations."

Although the law which forbids the exportation of radium does not prevent its sale to foreigners so long as it remains in the country, Dr. Johnson found it wise to make his purchase from the Government bureau in charge of radium through an Austrian friend. This practice, he said, was countenanced by the bureau, as it saved it from local suspicion and unpopularity which would be attached to dealings with Americans.

HIDDEN IN PLATINUM RECEPTACLE

The $15,000 worth of radium could be deposited on the thumb-nail. In order to avoid the loss which would be caused by shifting it from one container to another, it was necessary to seal it in the platinum instrument in the form in which it would be used in medical practice. This was not bulky but was sufficiently large to be a difficult article to smuggle.

Dr. Johnson thought at first that he had the right to leave the country with it, and he asked a legal opinion from a Vienna lawyer. He got a written opinion that the export of radium was not forbidden. The specialist was not quite satisfied, because there was in existence a law which made it a crime to export any pharmaceutical preparation. In case of arrest, Dr Johnson realised that the question whether he had committed a grave crime or not would depend on the decision of Austrian customs courts as to whether or not radium was a pharmaceutical preparation. Even if he got safely out of Austria. Dr. Johnson faced the further possibility that a British blockading officer would confiscate the radium as "enemy export".

"Finally," said Dr. Johnson, "I went to the American Embassy, and, after explaining the situation in full, entreated the embassy to transfer the small package to America. Partly on the score of benefit in general to our country, but more as I believe, through their kindness of heart. Ambassador Penfield and First Secretary Grant Smith received the radium and sent it to this country, where it now is."

Dr. Johnson, however, was known to the Austrian police to have purchased radium, and it was suspected that he was prepared to smuggle it out of the country. He was consequently subjected to constant espionage.

"After a few weeks," said Dr. Johnson, "I became actually unwelcome in stores where I had been a valued customer for years—for the people fear the police and once police attention is turned upon some person or his business, he never knows, however innocent he may be, when he may find himself involved. Police methods in Vienna and throughout Austria, without the least exaggeration, are exactly as in Vienna in the days of 'the Lion's Mouth'.

"The secret police act regularly on anonymous information, and a personal enemy can cause arrest and other grave complications for his victim, provided the accusation is made sufficiently important. As a result, Vienna is a hotbed of anonymous letter writers. Most of these letters are not addressed to the police directly, as there is a severe penalty in force for punishing false information to the police, but anonymous private letters often result in police action.

"A month after I had arrived in Vienna the apartment of a friend was subjected to a thorough domiciliary search on the theory that I had concealed there a quantity of drugs which I intended to smuggle to America."

Police Didn't Believe Truth.

Dr. Johnson said that he finally sought a better understanding with the Viennese police by going to the head of the secret bureau, telling him that his mission in Austria was to purchase radium, and he already had sent it out of the country. The official said nothing of the fact that Dr. Johnson had already committed a violation of the embargo, assured him that the police did not suspect him, and parted with him with a hearty handshake.

"As I afterward had reason to believe," said Dr. Johnston, "he thought I was trying to mislead him, and judged that I had not yet, in fact, sent the radium out of Austria, but that I was planning to take it with me, and could be caught with the evidence at the frontier."

Seven weeks later he got his passports and proceeded to the German frontier at Tetschen, Bohemia. Here his person and his baggage were searched, and was later lodged in solitary confinement in the great prison at Leitmeritz. Dr. Johnson was allowed to telegraph news of his arrest to the American Ambassador, and received an encouraging reply.

Dr. Johnson, of course, had from the first treated as highly confidential the fact that the Ambassador had sent the radium for him, and he said yesterday he did not see how the Ambassador could help him, considering his admission to the head of the secret police that he had sent the radium out of the country.

"I had great faith in Mr. Penfield's resourcefulness, however, and it was justified. After six weeks I was released and told that I was free to travel as I wished. I learned later that Mr. Penfield had himself shouldered the whole blame of the affair. He paid a personal visit to Baron Burian, the Austrian Prime Minister, told the facts, and then said: 'Now, if you are going to hold this man for smuggling the radium you will have to come down and arrest the American Ambassador and the whole personnel of the embassy as accessories.'"

After Baron Burian had communicated with the police and the Ministry of Trade, Dr. Johnson was notified that the proceedings against him had been dropped and he started on his way for this country. He said he had learned while in Vienna that Ambassador Penfield had personally obtained the release of Joseph Conrad and his two sons after their arrest in Galicia in 1914, where the novelist, who had lived in England, for forty years and was a British subject, was revisiting the estate where he was born.

"Mr. Penfield simply made a personal request for the release of Conrad," said Dr. Johnson. "He was told that if Mr. Penfield wanted him the Austrian government would let him have him. After his release Conrad and his two sons came to Vienna and thanked the Ambassador, and were dispatched with this help to Italy."

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON.

The blood must be filtered, otherwise the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid, you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail, too. By using Dr Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also ensure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are an ideal family medicine. They cure biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and kidney disease.

ADDING TO THE GROUP.

Loyalty Associated with Faith, Hope, and Charity.

Faith, Hope and Charity are known as the three graces. There is a fourth grace which has been overlooked. It is loyalty.

If you have in your heart a large measure of loyalty, it will cover and atone for a multitude of sins and shortcomings. Without loyalty you cannot be a good husband, a good friend, a good employee or a good citizen. Smoke that doctrine of loyalty in your pipe and govern yourself accordingly if you care anything about being true to yourself, well thought of while you live and loved after you have journeyed on.

The slacker, who is more loyal to the hands of the clock than he is to his job, will never rise above the mediocre line, and when to disloyalty to his job he adds disloyalty to his boss he becomes an ulcer in the office and deserves the shoe-leather boost. To knock the man on whom you depend for your bread, butter, and molasses is a graceless, ungrateful act. When you do that, you knock your bed and board. If you don't like your job, quit—but don't knock.

Loyalty is the cement of friendship—it fills up, smoothes over, and heals the cracks in character; it takes a man for what he is, not for what you would have him be; it helps to give of your love and to receive the love of those to whom you stand true in spite of their faults.

Loyalty is the reinforced concrete base on which individual patriotism is built. Loyalty gave birth to and baptized in blood the Stars and Stripes under which you live and work and play and sleep secure at night. Loyalty of countless lives bravely sacrificed before you were born hold forth to-day equal liberty, opportunity, and protection alike to the son of the soil and to the alien. If you were born under the sweep of the eagle's wings, be loyal to your country, or find another that suits you better. If you came to Sam's land and, a stranger, are making good under Old Glory, then dissect the hyphen from your name.—Boston Post.

ATTACKS COLONIAL POLICY

German Social Democrat Says It Brought on the War.

Germany's colonial policy was sharply attacked and named as a contributing factor in causing the present world war during a debate on the colonial budget in the session of the Reichstag that closed in June, according to the following report of the proceedings appearing in the Berliner Tageblatt:

"The second discussion of the budget for the protectorates is opened by the reported, Deputy Waldstein, (Progressive people's Party.) Amid the applause of the House he pays tribute to the heroism of the colonial troops and of the settlers and to the loyalty of the native population, and gives voice to the hope that the conclusion of peace, may it come earlier or later, will give Germany increased opportunity for colonial activities to the benefit of the entire civilized world. (Lively applause.)

"Deputy Henke, (Social Democratic Working Group): 'We cannot, and will not be a party to a colonial policy such as has been followed up to the present and which has many times turned out to be a disgrace to civilization. 'Quite right,' from the Social Democratic Working Group.) Has Herr Waldstein already forgotten the debates about it? The world war has not, after all, got away from the material interests of the ruling classes. Imperialism and capitalistic profit interests bring colonial wars with them. The State Secretary is making propaganda at meeting for these colonial interests. The race of competitive armaments at sea that originated in the colonial policy has contributed to the outbreak of the world war.

"In answer to one of Dr. Solf's speeches, I wish to say that the real Social Democrats have not changed their opinion regarding capitalistic colonial policy. ('Very true!' from the Social Democratic Working Group.) My friends will continue to oppose the colonial policy as sharply as ever before. This old standpoint of the Social Democracy has never been more thoroughly justified than at present. Now, as before, our slogan is: 'Down with the exploitation of man by man. Freedom and equality for every one who bears a human face!'" (Applause from the Social Democratic Working Group.)

"The budget was approved, as was also the case with the budget for the Imperial Colonial Bureau."

DID NOT HAVE TO PAY.

Andy Mactavish was "no" feeling just weel," so he went to the doctor and stated his complaints. "What do you drink?" demanded the medico. "Whusky." "How much?" "Oh, maybe a bottle a day." "Do you smoke?" "Yes." "Well, give up the whisky and tobacco altogether." Andy took up his cap and in three steps reached the door. "Andy," called the doctor, "you have not paid for my advice." "I'm no takkin' it," snapped Andy, as he clanged the door behind him.

Collegiate Institute Results of Departmental Examinations

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—As the results of the 1916 Departmental examinations have now been published in full, and as the reports in the Toronto press were given by Counties, I am asking you to publish the following list of the successful pupils from the Peterborough Collegiate Institute:

LOWER SCHOOL NORMAL ENTRANCE.

Isabel Baird, (honours); Violet Buckham, Margaret Connal, Clara Dobbin, Kathleen Dunbar, Mary Eastwood, Quinnie Johnston, Irene Mahoney, Audrey Miller, Ethel Morrison, Elizabeth Mowatt, May Nelson, Wilhelmine Perrin, Grace Purvis, Ethel Rowe, Florence Staunton, Myra Ward.

Hazel Austen, (allowed to carry over one subject).

Helen Moore, (allowed to carry over one subject).

Agnes Neill, (allowed to carry over one subject).

Bernard Park, (allowed to carry over one subject).

Twenty-five pupils from the Collegiate Institute wrote on this examination twenty-one were successful—84 per cent. As only thirty-five per cent in the province were successful in passing this examination the above pupils are to be congratulated.

Charles Elliott, Gladstone Finnie, Scott Hutchison, Roy White.

The above four pupils, on May 20, left school to do three months' work on farms. They were considered by their teachers quite competent to pass this examination and in due time will receive their certificates as per special departmental regulations.

MIDDLE SCHOOL NORMAL ENTRANCE.

Olive Armstrong, Katherine Adee, Jack Brandon, Carrie Crookshanks, Viola Fusie, Elva Jackson, Marion Grady, Vernon Lyle, Thelma Paxman, Ethel Steele, Daisy Stocker, Doris Pilling, Emmons Crawford (allowed to carry over one subject.

Twenty-two candidates wrote, 12 were successful—59 per cent.

There was a general slaughter throughout the province in this examination, but the figures are not yet given out for publication.

FACULTY ENTRANCE—PART I.

Florence Roadman, (honours); Gladys Collinson, Hilliard Williamson.

Six candidates wrote; three were successful, or 50 per cent. This might have been better.

FACULTY ENTRANCE—PART II.

Jean Armstrong, Virginia Coughlin, Hazel Crowe, Marion Moore, Roderick Pakenham, Marjorie Smith, Helen Thompson, Elsie Sherin (allowed to carry over one subject), Nine wrote, Eight were successful, 90 per cent.

HONOUR MATRICULATION.

Margaret Stevenson: II. Class honours in French; II. Class honours in German.

First Class Honours	7
Second Class Honours	10
Third Class Honours	11
Total	28

JUNIOR MATRICULATION.

Complete Matriculation—Group A.

Olive Armstrong, Katharine Adee, Gretchen Gladman, Marjorie Gladman, Marion Grady, Marion Harstone, Doris Pilling, Harry Smith, Ethel Steele, Louis Sukloff.

PARTIAL MATRICULATION.

Group (b)—Marion Mills.

Group (c)—Jack Brandon, Leslie Carver, Emmons Crawford, Joe. Feinburg, Frank Jobbitt, Vernon Lyle, Muzitta Nelson, Gregory O'Connell, Thelma Paxman, Herbert Webb.

Joe Feinburg should be credited with complete matriculation as owing to his having been quarantined he was unable to write on French and German.

Twenty-three wrote on the Junior Matriculation examination, twenty-one were successful—91 per cent.

John Finn and Marvin Kirn were thought by their teachers able to pass this examination, and all left school in May to do three months' work on farms. They will be granted their certificates.

The above is a splendid showing.

WONDERS OF THE RED CROSS

BY CANADIAN OVERSEAS

Of all the organized preparations for the British offensive I think none is more complete and ready for an emergency than the arrangement for reviving the wounded in the field and at the bases in France, and at the hospitals at home. Also it can be said that the departments of our army were ready so early for any demands that might be made upon them.

The result is that whenever and wherever the offensive might take place there is a certainty of not a moment's delay in dealing with the wounded.

Our hospitals in France have been indispensible to the army authorities who send men to them, knowing that nothing will be left undone in the way of surgical skill and good nursing. So far the battle of Loos put the greatest strain yet experienced on the Red Cross resources.

The rush was so heavy and so continuous.

In the present greater offensive which is on a much larger front, with many more units engaged, the work is naturally spread over a much wider area, and up to now the pressure has not comparatively speaking been so heavy on any one individual hospital.

Many of our gallant men wounded in the morning of the advance were comfortably in their beds in the London hospitals in the evening of the same day. This reflects the greatest credit on the Royal Army Medical service, whose splendid organization it is one object to assist in every way. Before the offensive began the patients in France who could be sent home were dispatched so that every available bed was ready in France. In the hospitals at home men who could be discharged were sent to their homes to complete their recovery or to ordinary convalescent homes. All leave was stopped for the nurses at the front, and those on leave were called back and additional nursing staffs were sent on and are still being despatched. There are tens of thousands of empty beds waiting for the wounded, and the accommodation can expanded to an unlimited extent.

A striking indication of the elaborate extent of the preparations is shown by the work of the Motor Ambulance Corps. Not only are their sufficient cars for the work but there are reserve cars which can be rushed into any part of the front, where they may be required. During the first week of the great advance, thirty extra cars were sent to France in addition to forty extra cars that were required for the convoys and the train services. All the cars working on the communications were run by the Red Cross.

Five convoys of fifty Motor Ambulances are now working actually on the front lines exposed to the enemy's fire. All have their bases, altogether since the commencement of the war the Red Cross has supplied over 1,500 ambulances and over 500 other types of cars for supplies, equipped with kitchens and workshops. They are now working night and day in England and France the work in London being done by the London Ambulance Column.

At Boulougne there is a huge work shop for all repairs. Now that no time should be lost, spare parts are sent at once and fitted instead of keeping the cars waiting for repairs. These cars are doing marvellous work, running all day and night along roads which have been damaged by the enemies fire. It means circumventing huge shell holes and avoiding all delay in getting the men down to the bases. The wounded are brought from the trenches to the field dressing stations. There the ambulances take them to the clearing hospitals. In each car there is room for four lying cases or as many as 12 sitting cases.

The latest type of ambulance is fitted with electric light. Badly wounded men seem to find the light very comforting. From the clearing hospitals the men are taken in the ambulance to the rail-head for conveyance to the base. From the base the wounded are again taken up by the cars to the hospital ships.

Forty-eight of these cars carried over 5,000 wounded men, doing 12,380 miles in the week ending, June 30.

The statistics about the individual performances of the cars are so exhaustive and kept so up to date that whenever the donor of one of them writes, asking how the car is getting on, the Society is able to tell them the number of wounded, sitting or lying it has carried in a given period, the mileage covered and the expense incurred for repairs. There are rest stations at various railway depots where the wounded are being cared for while waiting for the ambulance.

In addition to work done for the British Army the Red Cross renders assistance to the French. The following report will give some idea of the work done at Verdun: No. 2 M.A.C. There are 50 ambulances attached to this convoy. During the fortnight 604 lying and 917 sitting cases were carried, the estimated mileage being 5687.

Frequently the ambulance cars go right up to the first-aid post; even into the midst of shot and shell and sometimes are badly damaged. At Verdun one patient was actually wounded while sitting by the driver.

It is a great contrast to the state of affairs at the outset of the war, when the arrangements for transporting the wounded were found to be both obsolete and unsufficient. The old house ambulances were still employed. Some of the wounded were collected and conveyed to the base in the lumbering motor waggons, which had brought up stores—are agonising mode of conveyance, especially over the poor roads.

There are now working, three hospital trains which the Red Cross gave to the army and equipped with Red Cross staff of surgeons, nurses and orderlies. Over 40,000 pounds was spent on these trains. There is a fourth train, which recently completed its hundreth journey. In less than a year it has carried over 26,000 patients and travelled 26,000 miles. The train is made up of old French railway carriages and is more than 300 yards long.

Some of the wounded are brought along in barges on a canal to Bergues. A vase amount of time, trouble and expense is saved through the six depots which have been established at various places to which articles for the wounded are sent in bulk. There is nothing required for the equipment of a hospital or the comfort of a sick man that these depots do not contain.

It should be a great satisfaction to the public who have so generously supported the Red Cross, that now that our armies have begun to advance and that heavy casualties are inevitable, our heroic men who are pushing back the Germans, and sustaining grievous injuries are being, and will be promptly and carefully looked after by what must be the most perfectly equipped organization that has ever been created in war for the care of the wounded.—J.E.H. (Canadian Overseas).

Find Human Bones When Loading Car

Police are Notified and Coroner Takes up Matter, Starting An Investigation

ROCHESTER, Aug. 29.—The discovery of the bones of eleven human bodies in a shipment of old bones about to be sent from this city is being investigated by Coroner Thomas A. Killip. While it is believed the bones were sent out from some medical school, the possibility of a wholesale grave robbery in the vicinity is being investigated.

Recently the Monroe Iron, Metal and Cooperage company, 510 State street, received from a phosphate factory a large order for bones. Notices were sent out to smaller dealers and the loading of a box car in the old R., W. and O. railroad yards, at the foot of Ambrose street, was started.

Not having enough bones to fill the car, an order was sent to Max Cohen, a junk dealer at Hudson avenue and Woodbury street, asking for more. Morris M. Gallent was in the car helping to pack Cohen's contribution when he saw a human skull roll toward him. The work of packing the car stopped at once and a call was made for the police from the Lyell avenue station.

Special Officer Legler came to the yards and, when he saw the skull, communicated with Coroner Killip. The coroner started an investigation at once. Cohen told him he could not remember where he got the bones from, but he believed they had been turned in by peddlers and had not been examined at the time.

It is said the bones were clean and dry, and, from marks on them, point to the work of a dissecting room. The bones are being held in the railroad yards awaiting the coroner's orders.

Made Funny Faces To Get More Food

How British Captives Answered Senussi Tribesmen—False Teeth Frightened Guards

LONDON, Aug. 29.—Captain Gwatkin-Williams has just published an interesting account of the nineteen weeks spent by him and the survivors of his crew as prisoners of the Senussi in the Libyan desert after his ship was torpedoed by a German submarine in the Mediterranean.

"Facial expression," he says, "appears to be very limited among the Arabs, and I soon fell into the spirit of the game by doing my 'tricks,' which generally get us a more liberal supply of food, the tricks being no more than assuming an expression of hauteur, superciliousness, contempt or vanity. These caused unfailing yells of laughter and had to be many times repeated, and after displaying my gold tooth, tattoing, medal ribbon, and diary, the show was considered finished and we were generally rewarded with dates and milk."

In another place, he says, the Arabs discussed removing his head as the best way of getting the gold tooth. "Civilized dental treatment always aroused great interest in this land of perfect teeth, and I well remember an occasion when Lieutenant Tanner put the whole of our guards to flight by opening his mouth and letting fall his upper plate of false teeth."

Here is the description of the Arab etiquette of eating dates and milk: "The large wooden bowl of milk goes from hand to hand, and you may only drink it with a loud indrawing of the breath; an exhausting process, but equalizing the amount you all get.

"Dates you eat as fast as you can, stoning them with one hand all the time, and it is de rigeur to throw back the debris in the bowl. I broke my best tooth trying to eat fast enough for my share, but never had a chance, though among my fellow-prisoners I had at one time been very unpopular on account of the rate at which I bolted my food.

"Shoes you always took off, and hats you always kept on. This annoyed me much in bed, where my feet were cold and my head hot, but there was no appeal."

Admiralty Denies German Report

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

British Admiralty Denies Report Emanating From Germany.

London, Aug. 29.—The British Admiralty to-day made denial of a German wireless report of last week that Dutch sailors had sighted, east of the Dogger Bank, a British destroyer which had been abandoned by her crew and was sinking.

"There has been no engagement of any sort," the Admiralty announcement says. "No British destroyer is missing."

NO MALE PERSON HAS A SAY HERE

A new town is being built in southwestern Kansas. It is a town of old maids, bachelor maids—the Kansas headquarters for spinsters—the place from which men are barred, except as they are willing to give up their prerogatives and allow the women to rule.

The founding of Victoria City is an outgrowth of the Kansas Queen Victoria Club, a spinster union, organized by Miss Georgie Hook, of Sabetha. The club was organized to protect the interests of the spinsters. At first it was local, but the idea spread and other clubs were formed throughout the state. It has a membership of several hundred unmarried women.

The idea came to Miss Hook coincidentally with the announcement from the federal government that there were about twenty thousand acres of land in Kansas, especially in the southwest, which was open to homestead entry. Miss Hook investigated.

Convinced by what she discovered that her idea was feasible, she consulted other members of the Queen Victoria clubs. The idea took hold of them. Five spinsters agreed to enter the scheme, give up their former homes and invade the frontier.

Into the southwest they went. Land was obtained and in the centre of the new settlement Victoria City was laid out. It is now far from Dodge City. The town is only in its infancy yet. There are a few scattered houses but many of the women are waiting for clear titles to their land before they begin the development of their city.

However, while the actual building of the town is progressing slowly because of the delay in proving up on the land, the growth along governmental lines is almost completed. And it is in its governmental form that the town has achieved its distinction.

Miss Hook is the mayor, and the city council includes Miss Mabelle Morton, Miss Sylvia Cawker, Miss Mildred Minter and Miss Elizabeth Whiting. These officers were elected by the original fifty members of the townsite company.

MAN AND HIS SON DROWNED IN MICHIGAN

GEORGE S. BEGLEY WAS FORMERLY RESIDENT OF BROCKVILLE—SQUALL UPSET SKIFF.

BROCKVILLE, Aug. 28.—Word has been received here of the drowning at Grand Rapids, Mich., of George S. Begley and his son, formerly of Brockville. Mr. Begley was on a lake in a skiff with his wife and two sons when a squall overturned the boat. Mrs. Begley and one son were saved. Geo. S. Begley was the son of the late Jos. Begley, Brockville, and leaves his wife, one son, a sister and a brother here, another sister in western Canada, and a brother in Rochester.

TELEPHONE PROBE BOON TO WOUNDED

The quick recovery of British wounded in the present war has been facilitated, according to army surgeons, by the invention of the telephone probe, an instrument which locates the presence of bullets or pieces of shrapnel in wounds by establishing an electric contact with the metal and giving an audible noise.

Physicians, when treating gunshot wounds, were formerly forced to spend valuable time searching for bullets with steel probes. Frequently they never knew whether the bullet was still in the body or not, and many soldiers carried the cause of their injuries about with them the rest of their lives. Once the telephone probe, however, comes in contact with the metal in the wound there can be no mistaking its presence. It is the invention of David Findlay, M.D., medical officer in charge of the electrical department, West End Hospital for Nervous Diseases, Edinburgh. It has been in use in the British Army for about a year and bids fair to revolutionize army surgery.

When packed the telephone probe resembles an accusation used by the deaf. The probe consists of a silver rod indulated from a sheath of the same material, forming two electrodes. The electrodes from the probe are attached to a plug in the box by insulated wires incased in rubber tubing. In the lid of the box are fixed the plug holder, a specially wound telephone, and a dry cell of the ordinary flashlight pattern.

When the plug is in its holder an electric current is established on inserting the probe into a wound, contact being effected through the moist surfaces. Any disturbances of the flow or interference with the lines of force of the current, such as occur when a piece of metal is touched by the probe, will be instantly indicated by a sound from the telephone.

Not only is the telephone probe of inestimable value to military surgeons, but Dr. Findlay thinks his invention should prove useful to the general practitioner as well, for needles and other small bits of metal can be located just as easily as bullets.

Modifications of Dr. Findlay's probe have already come into use. According to Dr. R. C. Conti, Junior Demonstrator of Pathology at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, no dry battery need be used with the telephone probe, for the skin of a patient often generates as much as a volt of electricity. Consequently, Dr. Conti suggests that the telephone probe may consist of a telephone receiver, one terminal of which may be connected with the skin of the patient by means of a flat electrode, covered with a wet cloth, the other terminal being connected with a metallic probe.

Upon the probe being introduced along the track of the bullet, contact with it or any other small piece of metal, a sound is produced in the telephone by the resistance of the current. If the area of the metallic substance is large the resistance will be low and the sound in the telephone, loud. If the foreign metallic substance be small the sound in the telephone will be comparatively weak. Therefore, Dr. Conti's probe is able to indicate the size of the object causing the wound.

SIR SAM'S LITHOS.

Forty Thousand Being Run Off at a Local Lithographing Establishment.

Forty thousand lithographs of Sir Sam Hughes are being run off at a Toronto lithographing establishment. They are fine big lithos too, after the style of those that have made Kitchener's face so familiar to all Canadians.

Whether they are intended to encourage recruiting or simply as mementos for the boys who took part in the Camp Borden review, is not stated.

They must, however, be for general distribution as even two for each honourary colonel would hardly exhaust the supply. It is estimated that the cost of the 40,000 copies will probably be in the neighbourhood of $5,000, but whether Sir Sam will have them charged to his own account or figure them as part of the necessary war expenditure the future alone will tell. But the pictures are coming. Save a place on the parlour wall for at least one of them.—Toronto Telegram.

Details of The Fifteenth Country To Enter War

Area.	About 54,000 square miles.
Population	7,600,000
Peace Strength	118,357
Reserves	466,743
Total war strength	580,000
Total available unorganized men	921,602

Agriculture, salt-mining, and petroleum making are the principal industries.

The chief exports of Roumania are: Maise and cereals. Among the fruits exported are gourds, plums, peaches, walnuts, apples, pears and grapes.

The manufacturing industries which before the war were greatly handicapped by cheaper productions in Germany and Austria include flour, sawmilling, match making, petroleum distilling, tanning, boot and shoe making and cement manufacture.

The peasantry are mainly clothed in garments made by themselves, of homespun, woven, and dyed fabrics.

The revenue of Roumania before the was was around $80,000,000 and more than balanced the expenditures.

The national debt some time ago was around $205,000,000.

The value of imports varied in peace times from $60,000,000 to $65,000,000 and the exports from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000.

In peace times nearly half of the exports (chiefly cereals and seed) went to Great Britain, and about ont-third to Germany.

Roumania is situated in South East Europe, lying mainly between the Carpathians, the Pruth, and the Danube, and borders on Hungary, Russia, Bulgaria, and Serbia. It is crescent shaped, the average length being 356 miles and its breadth about 190 miles.

About four and one-half millions of the population belong to the Greek church and it has estimated that when war began in 1914 there were around 4,000,000 subjects outside of the Roumanian Kingdom.

British Workmen Demand That Government Take Over All Foods

"Soldiers Shot for Stealing Food While Men Who Starve Their Dependents Go Free," Declared Ben Tillett.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The most significant expression of popular feeling since the war began was given yesterday, whe, despite a torrential rain, the labor unions held a street parade in Hyde Park, initiated by the powerful railroad men's union, for the purpose of protesting against the great increase in the cost of living.

Many notable labour leaders were present but the speech of the afternoon was made by Ben. Tillet, who recently received the thanks of Gen. Haig and Lord French, for invaluable services both in recruiting and stirring up munition workers.

WORKERS IN ARMY.

"Of the British armies of five million men," he said, "4,000,000 come from the working classes. The proportion of men from the shipping class which have entered the navy is even greater. Yet while these men are risking their lives for their government, it allows their dependants to suffer privation on account of the prices of food which have risen seventy per cent. through the rapacity of the food rings.

VIRILITY SUFFERS.

"The virility of the race is suffering in consequence, which will have a tremendous effect after the war, when with 2,000,000 cripples upon the hands of the nation all the available energy of the people will be required The government has recognized the absolute necessity of giving the best food plentifully to the soldiers but it is equally needed by those supporting them here.

ADMINISTER ALL FOOD.

"Soldiers have been shot for stealing food, but that is not a crime comparable to that of these millers, ship owners and monopolists who are making enormous fortunes out of the hunger of others. The only remedy is that the government commandeer all food supplies and transport and administer them for the public benefit."

Other speakers referred to the fact that the price of the four-pound loaf would rach nineteen or twenty cents by to-day, describing the rise as unreasonable.

ENORMOUS PROFITS.

"The harvest weather is splendid in the west," said one speaker. "Thre are more than than 8,000,000 bushels of the 1916 crop left. The present home harvest is approaching 70,000,000 bushels and the farmers are preparing to uphold their top profits. They already have made enormous profits.

"The price of wheat is now $14 a quarter (eight hundred) against $6 before the war. The government must make them market this immediately, then prices will come down with a bump. It is useless to waste threats on American dealers. Let us make straight for the home producer."

Resolutions were enthusiastically passed demanding that the government immediately regulate all food prices.

Roumanian Army Already On Move

country, it is reported in news agency despatches.

Early declarations of war by Roumania against Bulgaria and Turkey are expected. A great Russian army is ready to move through Roumania and strike at either Hungary or Bulgaria, or both, according to despatches reaching here.

The Roumanian entrance into the war is regarded here as the greatest triumph of the Entente diplomacy since the beginning of the great world clash. Everywhere the view is taken that it means the elimination of both Austria and Bulgaria, and probably Turkey as well, from the conflict.

The Austrians now find themselves compelled to defend a new border almost as long as the entire Russian front. Roumania can select the pionts at which to strike at will.

Her first invasion of Austro-Hungarian soil menaces the two principal cities of Transylvania — Hermanstadt and Kronstadt. Both are near the southern frontier of Hungary. Hermansadt is about 15 miles from the frontier and Kronstadt, Transylvania's greatest commerce centre, is only six miles from the border.

WHOLE ARMY MOVING.

Bucharest, Roumania, Aug. 28.—Roumanian troops to-night are fighting on Austro-Hungarian soil following the declaration of war by this Government upon Austria.

The decision to make war was reached yesterday after a long session of the Crown Council. It marks the end of a two years' neutrality which has kept the nation keyed to the highest tension.

King Ferdinand called into session practically all the noted men of the kingdom Former premiers, former presidents of the chambers and leaders of political parties were summoned to the capital and the monarch obtained from each a declaration of opinion.

Following the final session of the Crown Council, whose sessions had extended over several days, the note declaring that Roumania considered herself at war with Austria-Hungary as from 9 p.m. August 27, was issued.

The War Ministry was merely waiting for the word. News of the Government's decision was flashed to every frontier where the troops are mobilised. The plans of the general staff already are being carried out with wil oiled smoothness. Almost the entire Roumanian army is moving. The Swiss frontier has been closed. The third army was the first to strike. It already is fighting on the soil of Transylvania, the Roumanian populated province of Austria-Hungary whose possession is one of the national desires.

It is estimated that the effective strength of the army which can be mobilised by Roumania is about 900,000 men.

SYMPATHY EXPRESSED

Members of the Peterborough Law Association Attend Funeral of Mrs. W. H. Moore.

At a special meeting of the Peterborough Law Association it was unanimously decided to attend the funeral of the late Mrs. W. H. Moore, in a body, and to send to Mr. Moore the following letter:

Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Mr. Moore,—On behalf of the Law Association of the City, we are instructed to convey, at this time of sorrow and bereavement to you, a message of heartfelt sympathy from every member of the Bar. To most of your brethren the loss of your late beloved wife was personal, because of a more or less intimate acquaintance with her, and they all unite in a sincere expression of condolence at the departure of one so widely respected and so deeply loved.

Fraternally yours,
A. E. DIXON,
Vice President.
JOSEPH WEARING,
Secretary.

CASES OF PILSENER INTERCEPTED ON WAY TO BRIDGENORTH

Five cases of "Pilsener pints," destined for Bridgenorth and Chemong Park were seized at the C.P.R. station on Friday, August 18th, by License Inspector Stewart, and thereby hangs a tale that occupied the greater part of Magistrate Dumble's attention to-day between 10 a. m. and 2 p.m. Mr. O'Connell for the defence and Mr. Wearing, acting for Inspector Stewart, argued all over the Liquor License Act, and it appears that the court was about to deliver a judgment unless Mr. Stewart requested a further consideration of the case by the Magistrate. Such was the Inspector's desire and judgment was reserved for one week.

The full cases are untapped, in the court room, and they're not on ice. Of course they are safe among a total abstaining force.

CIVIC OFFICIALS ATTENDED FUNERAL

Representatives of the City Council, the Utilities Commission and other municipal bodies attended the funeral of the late Mrs. W. H. Moore, which took place this afternoon from 340 London street, the late residence of the deceased, to Little Lake cemetery.

Motor Trip Through New England States

Ideal Method of Taking Vacation, Says Mr. E. G. Patterson Who Just Returned With a Party After One of The Most Delightful Trips of His Life

Mr. E. G. Patterson, Superintendent of the Canadian General Electric Company has returned from a pleasant motor trip. The party consisting of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Patterson and Mr. and Mrs. J. E. L. Goodwill, left here on Saturday morning, August 12th, for Toronto, whence they went to Niagara-on-the-lake the same day They crossed the International Boundary line at Fort Erie and stayed at Buffalo for the night.

The next day the party went from Buffalo to Syracuse a distance of 191 miles in six and one-quarter hours. This is an exceptionally good record, considering the many towns on the way where there are stringent regulations about speed.

From Syracuse to Boston is the motorist' paradise. Worcester, Mass., and Springfield are outstanding pleasure spots in an endless chain of interesting, picturesque beauty spots. The Berkshire Hills have a nation-wide reputation as favoured haunts for holiday seekers and Mr. Patterson says the descriptions do not do them justice.

It is in the Berkshire Hills that the famous mountain, Jacob's Ladder, is located. Jacob's Ladder has baffled many a motorist as it is over 2,000 feet above sea level. In this vicinity the motorist can perform no greater feat than to ascend Jacob's Ladder, but Mr. Patterson with his McLaughlin 55, made the ascent on high gear, without even changing the water in the radiator, a thing which every motorist who attempts the ascent considers absolutely necessary.

Coming back from Boston the party did not retrace their path but took the well known Mohawk tour over the Green Mountains and the White Mountains. The highest peak on the homeward journey was 2,200 feet above the sea level. The party reached the Falls, coming on through Toronto back to Peterborough.

The party all declare this outing one of the most enjoyable they ever experienced. They had very little tire trouble and no motor trouble, which Mr. Patterson says is a tribute to the efficiency of the McLaughlin car.

New Pastor Scores Living Cost As He Finds It In Ottawa

No Reason For Increase in Price of Flour, He Says, After What He Saw in The West

OTTAWA, Aug. 29.—The high cost of living was dealt with by Rev. S. J. Farmer, the new pastor of McPhail Baptist Church, in his sermon Sunday evening. He particularly emphasized the case of flour.

"There is no reason whatsoever," he said, "for the high price of flour. The west is full of wheat. I know it for I came through there recently."

He said that much of the wheat was last year's crop, and instanced the case where the railway commission had to order the railways to move wheat out of the Gull Lake district within a certain specified time.

Mr. Farmer was much surprised at the high cost of living in Ottawa, saying that was as high or higher here than in the west. He gave his audience a little sidelight on the flour situation when he said that a certain brand of flour manufactured in Moose Jaw could be bought for ten cents less in London, England than right where it was manufactured.

Resolution Must Be Carried Out

Fire, Water and Light Committee Will Give the Monthly List of Supplies a Once Over

Sometime ago Ald. Evans, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee was requested to furnish the Committee with monthly reports setting forth the requirements in the way of supplies, for the ensuing month. At last night's meeting of the Committee, Ald. Stratton reminded the Committee that these reports had not been submitted to the Committee as required by resolution of the City Council. Ald. Evans reported that he was of the opinion that his endorsation would be sufficient and that the reports were regularly submitted to him for approval. This, Ald. Stratton, contended was not in accordance with the resolution as passed by the City Council.

Ald. Edgar pointed out that it would be just as reasonable to make a similar demand on other departments. Ald. stratton replied that it was little use passing a resolution in Council if it was not carried out.

FIRE HOSE

The Committee also recommended that a resolution authorising the purchase of three hundred feet of fire hose from the Dunlop Rubber Company be rescinded. The Committee was of the opinion that it was unwise to purchase hose without first soliciting prices from more than one firm. "It was a very unusual proceedure" was Ald. Stratton's comment.

The department has on hand some five thousand feet of good hose. When hose becomes of no further use to the department it is sold to the Board of Works at fifty cents a foot which is about one half of the initial cost. Fire Chief Howard said that the Board of Works was badly in need in hose but he did not think the department was in a position to spare any.

If more hose is required the Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee and the fire chief will be given authority to procure prices.

BOUGHT WHISKEY FOR A MINOR ON JULY 12TH, FINED $18.85

"You ought to be guardian and protector of every young fellow," commented Magistrate Dumble this afternoon in police court when he fined Walter Post of Campbellford $18.85 for procuring liquor on July 12 for Charles Christy, a minor.

Post stated that he did not 'judge' whether Christy was under twenty-one years or not, but candidly admitted in court when asked to form an opinion that the youth did not appear to be that old. Christy at one time lived in Campbellford, and having seen him drinking and "tight" there, Post did not hesitate to purchase two bottles of whiskey for him from a local liquor shop on July 12th.

Chief Thompson supplied the information that Christy was found unconscious on the street that afternoon and removed to the hospital. Magistrate Dumble pointed out to Post the wrongful nature of his act, and reminded him of his duty to protect young boys and not to assist them in their missteps.

DIVIDING UP THE CITY'S BUSINESS

A Feat which Requires a Maximum Amount of Diplomacy.

"Is there any partiality shown towards local dealers so far as the purchase of supplies for the fire department is concerned?" was a question that was asked last evening of the Fire, Water and Light committee by Ald. Stratton. The latter went on to cite the case of a merchant who sold the department a load of oats and failed to make a profit out of the transaction. The committee found little sympathy with a dealer who showed such poor business acumen. A similar complaint was made over a year ago when a local cartage company contended that they were not receiving a fair shape of the city's business. An investigation disclosed the fact that the complainant had received a larger share of business than some of their competitors. Only a short time ago one of the local hospitals complained that they were not receiving an equal share of indigent patients, which are paid for the city. A computation extending over six months of the current year showed a difference of only three patients between the two hospitals.

CHIEF HOWARD AT THE INQUIRY

Represents the Dominion Fire Chiefs in Toronto.

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

TORONTO, Aug. 29.—At the opening of the Fire Insurance inquiry before Justice Maston to-day, E. P. Heaton, Provincial Fire Marshall, said that the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association is a combine and in its dealings with public association both autocratic and arbitrary.

W. J. Vale, Provincial Supt. of Insurance, suggested a number of changes which might apply to the insurance companies.

W. H. Howard, Fire Chief of Peterborough, representing the Dominion Fire Chiefs' Association, assured the Commission that the Fire Chiefs from coast to coast would cheerfully assist in the inquiry.

Was Injured In Toronto

Mrs. John Foster, 218 Wolfe St., Figured in Automobile Accident

Mrs. John Foster, 218 Wolfe street, while in Toronto visiting with Mr. and Mrs. William Ford was injured in an automobile accident, when a runaway horse collided with the automobile in which Mrs. Foster and the Fords were riding. Both Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Foster received slight injuries.

Mr. William Ford is superintendent of Mount Pleasant cemetery, Toronto. He formerly resided in Peterborough.

RUNAWAY TEAM SKIDDED AT TURN ACROSS MARKET

A team of horses belonging to Mr. Richard Sheehy, farmer, of Douro, dashed down Water street at 11.30 o'clock this morning from the vicinity of Victoria Park, and, in attempting to negotiate the turn across the market, swung widely, skidding across the pavement. One of them lost its footing on the concrete surface and slid fifteen feet or more, and before it could get a fresh start, P. C. Blade caught the team, one of which suffered a severe abrasion along its shoulder. The team broke away from their waggon when the bolt attaching the double tree to the tongue dropped out and let them away when nothing remained to hold them but the reins. When the team clattered past the police station, P. C. Blade did a record twenty-five yards spurt, reaching them as they fell, skidding the market turn.

LABOUR DAY TO HEALEY'S FALLS

On Monday, Sept. 4th, Labour Day, the Steamer Stoney Lake will run an excursion to Hastings and Healey's Falls. Boat leaves George St. Wharf at at 7:45 a.m. 1d-49

DANGER OF A STRIKE IS MORE ACUTE

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—Danger of a gigantic railroad strike became acute to-day. The Brotherhoods at the White House last night refused to agree to the President's urgent request, that the strike order calling for a walkout of four hundred thousand trainmen at 7 a.m. Labour Day be called. The railroad executives informed of this latter, assumed a defiant air. "There's going to be a strike, that's certain. Let's have it. It will clear the air, and that's the only thing to do now," one prominent railroad president declared.

IGNORANCE OF TRAFFIC BY-LAW A USELESS PLEA

Magistrate Dumble left no doubt this morning that any and every breach of the Motor Vehicle Act would be punished and with severity.

Dr. Chas. F. W. Ross of Keene was fined the minimum amount for passing a street car stopped at a crossing. In pleading guilty, Dr. Ross, through his counsel, Mr. F. A. Peck, stated that he did not know the clauses of the statute. He had only recently purchased his car.

"Ignorance is no excuse" replied the Magistrate. "You should have read the Act before you bought the car. I will have to treat you as our own citizens. The law must be observed, otherwise some one will make a mistake and kill some one through carelessness."

Dr. Ross was fined $5 and costs amounting to $10.17.

Wilbert Spencely was fined $5 and costs for a similar breach of the automobile act.

On a charge of having been disorderly, Jerry an Norman was fined $2 and costs amounting to $7.60, or ten days.

ADVANCE BIBLE PRICES.

Cost of Paper and Other Raw Material Responsible.

BOSTON, Aug. 29.—The American Bible Society announced that the price of Bibles was likely to be advanced at once. The European war, which has increased the cost of paper and other raw material, was given as the cause.

The stock of Bibles and books printed in foreign languages, previously purchased from Germany, is being rapidly exhausted, it was stated, and the society is unable to fill all orders received. There is no indication at present when the stock will be replenished, according to announcements sent to members and patrons of the society.

RAILWAY PRESIDENTS HOLD OUT

Refuse to Accept President Wilson's Final Proposal.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—(Bulletin) Holding out to the last, the Railway Presidents to-day tendered President Wilson a refusal to accept the final proposal for settlement he submitted yesterday: Concession of an eight-hour day, with all the time necessary for a commission of five to investigate its applications to railroad operation.

Washington, Aug. 29.—As a dramatic climax to his unprecedented negotiations to avert a most disastrous labour war that ever threatened the United States, President Wilson appeared before a joint session of Congress, and urged hurry-up legislation "to safeguard the life and interests of the Nation."

As already outlined, these measures included a law drawn along the lines of the Canadian Disputes Act, prohibiting strikes and lock-outs pending investigation by a commission, and also an eight-hour day for railroad employees with certain provisions.

INTERNATIONAL TOLL BRIDGE TO NIAGARA FALLS

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.— Under unanimous consent agreement the House to-day passed a resolution appropriating $1,000,000 for the construction of an International toll bridge across the Niagara river with American approach at Niagara Falls.

WATERFORD STREET WILL BE ILLUMINATED

Matter was Brought up at Last Night's Meeting of the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

Waterford street and the surrounding vicinity has a new champion in the form of Ald. G. H. Duncan. If the latter's wishes are carried the jungles of Waterford street will be illuminated. At last night's meeting of the Fire, Water and Light committee, Ald. Duncan reminded the committee that Waterford street was entitled to some form of artificial illumination even if it were necessary to move the arc light near the corner of McDougal and College street further east so that its rays would penetrate the gloom of the aforesaid mentioned street. The committee will also arrange to have a light placed at the corner of Lock and Romaine streets. This particular locality has been described as a dangerous corner.

THE CLOSING EXERCISES FOR BOTH PLAYGROUNDS

Event Will Take Place To-morrow Afternoon—Special Programme Has Been Provided for The Occasion

The closing exercises for both playgrounds will take place to-morrow afternoon instead of in the evening. The grounds will be open all afternoon but the special programme of sports, etc., will begin at four o'clock.

The King Edward ground will be open until 7 o'clock in order to give the older boys and girls time for one more good play.

Ice cream will be served at the King Edward grounds, each regular attendant having one cone free; extra cones and those for adults at the regular price of 5c.

At this ground there will be an exhibition of industrial work, games and dances by the girls. One special feature will be an illustrated story, "The Three Bears." The boys and girls will have baseball games, boxing and races.

At the Central playgrounds the following programme will be carried out;

Organized free play.
Exhibition of industrial work.
Competitive Games: Relay, basket ball, dodge ball.
Races: 28-yard dash, 50-yard dash, sack race, relay race, two-legged race,
Team games: Basket ball, baseball, volley ball, tether tennis.
Folk Dances: Russian dance, Barn dance, Irish Jig.
Singing Games: Oats, beans, barley grow; Did you ever see a Lassie; Farmer in his Den.
Games; Filling the Gap; Cat and Mouse; Fox and Geese; Two's and Three's.

All parents and friends are especially invited to come, and don't be later than 4 o'clock if possible. The supervisors and members of the Playgrounds Committee will be glad to know if the playgrounds have been a help to you.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Pitching Star And Ball Club In League Race

"One great pitcher can make any sort of a ball club perform miracles" says Joe Tinker of the Cubs. "The history of baseball shows that a moundsman who can win from 60 to 70 per cent. of his games can lift any ball club to or near the top of any league.

"Miner Brown was such a man. His wonderful work back in the old days was the one big reason for the success of the old Cub machine. If we hadn't been possessed of Brown, the chances are we never would have been in the fight for so many years. When Brown faded you knew what happened to the Cubs. They no longer had a star of first magnitude to depend upon; they didn't have a man they could shoot in and be reasonably sure at the outset that the game was won.

"The season the Giants of 1914, 1915 and 1916 haven't achieved anything remarkable is because they haven't a real pitching staff. Matty kept that club in the fight for ten years, and more. He was the mainstay.

CONFIDENCE IN MATTY.

"When he went into the box the old gang behind him was so confident of his power that they played behind him with a 'we can't lose' spirit—and they rarely did lose with Matty at work. Whenever McGraw wanted to win an important game he called upon Matty. He knew that Matty could deliver, if any man could.

"The Washington team has been a factor in the American league races for the last three or four years. Why? The answer is Walter Johnston. Take him away from that club and it leaves little more than a mediocre collection.

"The Cleveland club on paper, does not look strong" continued Tinker, "but it has a grand pitcher in Morton, a chap who is being touted as a second Johnston. He has been pitching a brand of baseball that is almost flawless, and this has inspired the other players behind him. They have played with a dash and speed that is startling, and they will continue to play that way as long as Morton pitches superhuman baseball.

LOOK WHERE DODGERS ARE!

"Look where the Dodgers are this year. What's the answer? Great all around playing, yes. That is part of it. But the real reason is that Jeff Pfeffer, the big fellow, is whistling along this year at an amazing clip. The Dodgers play their greatest ball behind him. They have worlds of confidence in him; they feel he cannot lose. And by winning with Pfeffer in it gives them a higher notch in the average column. That increases their natural confidence and makes them strive all the harder for the pennant honors.

"Early in 1914 the Braves were in the rut, but the players had confidence in 'Big Bill' James. They figured that he would round into winning shape soon and sweep them on toward the goal. 'Big Bill' did come around, and when he swung he carried Rudolph and Tyler with him. Instead of having but one star to depend upon, the Braves had three. And so they shot up from the cellar to the top, remained there until the race was over, and then beat the Athletics in record time.

"And so it has been all along. The team with a star pitcher has been the team that wins."

Tobacco Ball Is The Latest

Coast Pitcher Uncorks New Fangled Delivery

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 28.—Jack Ryan of Los Angeles, has a new one. The Angel flinger is always uncorking some newfangled kind of a delivery. Jack's latest could best be called the "tobacco ball."

That, however, would be nothing new, as pitchers have been nown to squirt tobacco juice on the ball ever since the art of chewing tobacco was first invented. Others say that Jack's new delivery is nothing more or less than a new way of delivering a "spitter," so as to control the direction of its break.

Whatever it is, Ryan figured it out during one of the rainy days when the Angels were here last.

Early one morning Jack announced to Frank LeRoy Chance and the rest of the gang that he had evolved a curve that would set them all down. The day before he had spent experimenting with the spitter.

After leaving Portland he tried it out in Salt Lake. His ability to make the ball break four different ways aroused the suspicions of Umpire Phyle and Doyle and they scrutinized the ball, but could find nothing wrong. The same thing happened last Thursday when Ryan beat the Tigers.

Once the entire Vernon team clustered about the ball and submitted it to a searching investigation. Umpire Ed. Finney, after the game, declared that he could find nothing wrong with the sphere, except in the cases when he threw two out which had been cut by the wire netting.

It will be remembered that Ryan originated the "mud ball" here last season. It is the height of his glory to get hold of a ball that has been roughed by hitting the sand or in some other manner, and toss it to a batter, for the veteran can make it curve thirty-six different ways.

Jim Jefferies May Lose Arm by Poisoning

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 29.—As a result of the cut on the first finger of the right hand from a hunting knife, Jim Jeffries, former heavyweight champion, is in danger of losing his arm. Blood poisoning has set in, and has swollen the arm to an alarming extent. Physicians say the finger at least will have to be amputated.

WHITE-WELSH BATTLE NEXT MONDAY

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., Aug. 29.—With Freddie Welsh and Charlie White on the scene of battle and settled down to the hard grind of daily training, Colorado Springs, where the struggle to win and retain the world's lightweight crown is to take place on Labor Day afternoon, is fast becoming the mecca of sportsmen from every nook and corner of Uncle Sam's domain. All roads seem to lead to the pretty little city nestled down under the shadow of Pike's Peak, where Promoter Eddie Pitts is preparing to dish out the fistic tidbit of the decade.

That both boys are in deadly earnest is already being attested to by the battered appearance of the small army of sparring partners who are helping condition these two gladiators. White's powerful punch is already the talk of the sharpshooters who are trying to fix the odds for the coming contest. In fact, Knock-'em-dead Charlie is a wonderful impression, because of the accuracy and terrible driving power of his world-famed left. And well he might be. A glance at the dope on C. White of Chicago is enough to get on the nerves of any prospective opponent.

The wheels of progress at Colorado Springs seem to be running very smoothly for the promoters of the big bout as well as for the two stars. The arena is climbing to the skies without a hitch, and the seat sale goes on as merrily as it started. Starting to promote the match simply for the purpose of putting Colorado Springs on the map, the Hundred Million Dollar club has tumbled into a bonanza. The Jeffries-Johnson historical scrap at Reno, and the recent Willard-Moran go at Madison Square Garden, the first playing to over $250,000, and the second to more than $150,000, will be the only gate receipts to top the amount of cash that is going to push its way into the coffers of the Springs club on Labor Day.

U. S. Soccer Players Mobbed by Swedes

After Defeat of the Home Team—None of Players Injured.

Stockholm, Aug. 29.—The all-American association football team, playing Sunday at Gothenburg, defeated the Gergryte Sports Club, one of the best teams in Sweden, by two goals to one.

At the conclusion of the match a furious mob attacked several of the American players, and stones were thrown at their automobile as they drove to their hotel. None of the Americans are reported to have been injured.

SETTLE IRISH PROBLEM.

Strong Efforts to Be Again Made During Parliamentary Recess.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Strong efforts are to be made during the parliamentary recess for resumption of negotiations for settlement of the Irish question, according to reports in Irish political circles.

It is understood that both the Unionist and Nationalist leaders are inclined to regard these efforts sympathetically.

BRITISH PEOPLE HAVE THEIR BACK TO WALL

Sir George Perley States War Will be Carried to Successful Conclusion

TORONTO, Aug. 29.—"They have their back to the wall, and will not stop until a successful conclusion is reached."

Sir George Perley, Acting Canadian High Commissioner in London, made this statement at the opening luncheon at the C.N.E., referring to what he had seen of the attitude of the British people with regard to the world struggle.

It was rather unusual for a speech to be made at the opening luncheon and it was a genuine pleasure to the audience to hear Sir George called on before he made his official opening speech.

"It would have been worth while to have crossed the ocean to have been here," he commenced, and intimated that it was only because Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce was in London, to take the reins while he was away, that Sir George was able to come to Canada at this time.

He referred to the C.N.E. as a great object lesson to all sections of society. Sir George took the opportunity to correct an impression that might be taken out of an interview given by him to-day. He referred to the words "At first there was freedom which almost amounted to lack of discipline in the troops from Canada, but this had always been excused."

Sir George Perley.—Acting Canadian High Commissioner who, upon opening the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto, stated that the entrance into the war of Roumania meant the beginning of the end. "Canada will have a great opportunity in the period of reconstruction," said Sir George.

Sir George said that he would not like a wrong impression to be taken out of this. There were, he said, 35,000 troops in London at one time. Less than one-half of one per cent. of the soldiers had behaved in a manner to evoke any criticism, and that the "Canadian soldiers and soldiers from other parts of the Empire had conducted themselves like soldiers and gentlemen."

The audience applauded vigorously the statement of Sir George.

He paid complimentary references to the work of the Canadian Red Cross Society under President and Colonel Noel Marshall. In London a new organization had been formed called the Canadian War Contingent Association, and President Marshall stated in his opening remarks that he was so well pleased with this organization in London, that it was going to do all the work of this kind for Canada.

Sir George said the work of caring for the wounded, and the men who were unfit after their return from the front, was most important, but pointed out that caring for the fit soldiers at the front was very important, as the war would be won by fit men.

This organization was for caring for the soldier at the front. He described the work of the organization for supplying food to prisoners of war in Germany," to supplement the scanty rations supplied them by the Germans."

Lady Drummond, at the head of the Canadian Red Cross in London, was doing splendid work and the Canadian wounded soldiers were well cared for.

He stated that the mention of Canadians at any meeting in Great Britain was the signal for tumultuous applause.

The impression made by the Canadian soldiers was splendid, and the sentimental feeling had made it much better for Canadian business men to do business in the British Empire. It provided them with a better reception than ever, and all this would work out to the advantage of Canada. He thought that the very grave problem of demobilization after the war couldn't be better studied and looked after than by the business men, such as were associated with the great Canadian National Exposition.

CHAPLAINS ON DUTY.

Anglicans Have Largest Number With the Canadian Forces.

London, Aug. 29.—Chaplain Abbott returned from France and Chaplain Day from Salonika to work at Shorncliffe. The latest arrivals from Canada include Dean Starr, Reverends J. O. Murray, W. H. Morehead, L. Day, J. Pirot. Chaplains on active service, including in England, are: 39 Anglican, 15 Catholic, 21 Presbyterian, 12 Methodist, 6 Baptist, 3 Salvationists. One chaplain has been killed, one was taken prisoner, and fourteen resigned through illness.

Ten Dollars to Soon Be Price For Your Boots

Leading Member of Trade in St. John, N. B., Says Day Is Not Far Off—Forty Per Cent. Profit is Correct

THIS, HE SAYS, UNDER PRESENT CONDITIONS — HISTORY OF SHOE MANUFACTURING.

"Let me warn you that ten dollar shoes are coming and coming fast. The five dollar shoe of last year is the six and the six and a half dollar one of to-day. Some lines of shoes that we bought this spring have advanced from twenty-five to thirty per cent. I notice a number of trade journals are advocating that the retailer should get a gross profit of forty per cent. Now his may seem a large margin except to some of you business men who are making from fifty to two hundred per cent. We must all admit that it is necessary to make a fair average profit if we are to satisfy the banks and meet our obligations fully and promptly. If a shoe costs five dollars, at forty per cent. profit on the cost price it means retailing that pair at seven dollars. If he figure advances to six dollars it means to the merchant not alone the one dollar increase, but forty per cent. on that one dollar when a sale is made to the customer. This brings the selling figure up to eight dollars and forty cents. You can readily understand how soon some of the retail shoemen will be asking you ten dollars a pair. Why should we not get it, particularly on ladies styles. The fair sex will often pay this sum and frequently much more for a hat which will not even keep out a few drops of rain."

So spoke C. Henry Smyth, manager of the Union Street branch store of Waterbury and Rising, Limited, of St. John, N.B., in an instructive and timely address on the present shoe and leather situation before the members of the Rotary Club in that city. Mr. Smyth has devoted considerable study to the present state of affairs in the footwear world and his review and comment will doubtless be read with much interest. He has been in the shoe game since 1879, working his way up from messenger boy to Manager.

In the course of his remarks Mr. Smyth said: "We in the footwear business can look back to the third century and claim a lineage to a saint. St. George, St. Andrew and St. Patrick societies can claim their patron saint and we have ours in the first shoe maker, Saint Crispin. The lineage dates back to the third century, when olden days were not golden days any more than are the present. 'When might was right and knights would fight,' the man who developed brain power had to seek a sanctuary in a monastery. It was then a monarch who wore the accustomed sandal of the day stubbed his royal toe and in heated language, which probably would not bear repeating, ordered that the ground be strewn with rushes the same as his castle yard. It was then that St. Crispin, born of an inspiration and in sympathy with the monarch, made the following request: 'Sire, if thou wilt place thy foot upon this measure, I will in twelve hours cover the earth with leather.' Much as the monarch doubted, the request was granted while the courtiers stood near ready to accuse the Rev. Genius of heresy. Next day the royal feet were encased in a pair of leather shoes. So the legend ascribes this poor monk as the maker of the first pair of shoes.

"Since then we have the shoemaker and the cobbler doing their missions, not alone repairing soles, but trying to save souls. We have to our credit that in 1793 A.D. the first foreign missionary to India was a Baptist cobbler by name, Wm. Carey, who also organized the first Foreign Missionary Society in England. We have today the cobbler doing his bit in France. Some of these men have left their benches and families and for the English shilling have joined or enlisted in the A.M.S.C. A recent lecturer in this city who was engaged in Y.M.C.A. work back of the front stated he saw old army boots stacked ten feet high that looked fit for nothing, but were in a short while made fit by these men of the A.M.S.C. So you see in these cases, and no doubt others could be mentioned, the errands of mercy which are falling to the workers of leather.

IT SURPRISED HER.

Clarke has a weakness for tramping in the country and usually dresses for the part. The result was that one day when he took a seat on a homeward bound train the young lady opposite him mistook him for a farm hand.

But bless her, her soul was so high to bursting with beautiful thoughts that she must speak or go off pop! So she turned patronizing to Clarke. "Don't you feel an utterly passionful sympathy with nature's most incarnate aspirations" she gushed, with a rapt look in her eyes, "when you are walking on the illimitable sky, touching moors or riding through the dim aisles of the horizon bound woods, my good man?"

The "rough looking person," as she would have described him, promptly replied:

"Yes, that is so, and I am frequently drawn into an exultation of rapt soulfulness and beatific incandescent infinity of abstract contiguity when my feet catches in the burrowed domicile of the lepus cuniculus — otherwise a rabbit hole."

"Indeed!" gasped the young lady, much surprised. "I had no idea that the lower classes felt like that!"

Mix Meat and Matrimony And You May Be Murdered

WASHINGTON, D.C., Aug. 29.—The relation of raw meat to wild husbands and the psychological effect of a chipped beef omelet upon a nervous wife were discussed to-day by Dr. D. H. Kress of this city. Dr. Kress explained that he had given the matter attention and had reached the conclusion that the high price of meat is a saving element in the prevention of divorce. One portion of filet mignon, he contends, is enough to fell a family tree.

"Meat is a blood heater," said Dr. Kress, and is so stimulating that those who eat meat regularly are much more easily irritated than are those who confine themselves to vegetable diets. With the cost of meat soaring, it is obvious that less of it will be eaten and countless quarrels built upon irritable natures will be prevented. It also is obvious that the number of divorces, in the same course of reasoning will decrease noticeably."

The simple recipe for obtaining milder men and gentler women aroused considerable interest here to-day, and there was a falling off in the demand for meat between noon and 3 o'clock, at which time the iceboxes were closed.

Those familiar with marital matters were inclined to doubt the value of vegetables as an element in the preservation of home ties. It was confidently stated by those with opinions differing from Dr. Kress, that onions have broken up more homes than peroxide, and that burned potatoes have caused more heartache and crashed crockery than any other item or domestic menus.

FOWLER'S PEBLO GLASSES

HOW QUICK SERVICE IS APPRECIATED

Dr. Fowler's repair department has surprises for everyone. A traveller who had a broken lens replaced in fifteen minutes remarked "well, that's nice."

A young man who wears a complicated lens, had a frame break. He is helpless without glasses. When he got them back good as new in an hour he was delighted.

Visitors who find they can have bad breaks repaired, or difficult lenses supplied same day they leave their glasses in are astonished.

Test it when your glasses break.

New York Stock Market

Summary of To-day's Activities on the New York Stock Exchange

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—Despite the gravity of the railroad situation, the market showed no marked signs of nervousness. Small recessions in prices during the first few minutes and rails at the low level of yesterday were the only evidences of a crisis. U. S. Steel was inactive at 96 1-2, a point above yesterday's low. Copper showed fractional declines.

FUNERAL OF MRS. W. H. MOORE

Large Attendance Testified to the Esteem in which Deceased was Held.

The funeral of Mrs. W. H. Moore took place this afternoon from the family residence, "The Maples," 310 London street, to Little Lake cemetery, and was largely attended. The members of the City Council, Public Utilities Commission, Law Association, and other local bodies, were largely represented in the cortege that followed the remains to their last resting place. The service was conducted by Rev. F. J. Sawers, of Cobourg, a nephew of the deceased.

CONFERRED WITH BOARD OF HEALTH

Civic Officials were in Toronto, Yesterday—Matter will be Dealt with on Tuesday Next.

Mayor Duffus, Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the Works Committee, Ald. Weir, S. R. Armstrong, City Clerk, and R. H. Parsons, City Engineer, all of Peterborough, conferred with Dr. McCullough, Provincial Health Officer, yesterday regarding the site for the proposed activated slug sewage disposal system for the city of Peterborough to cost $15,000. The Provincial Board of Health will send its engineer to Peterborough to report and the matter will be acted upon at a meeting of the Provincial Board of Health on Tuesday.

A water heater has been invented to utilise the heat wasted by the exhaust of stationary engines.

FLANGES OF STEAM ENGINE CUT THE WATER ST. PAVEMENT

Mr. Richard Hurd, agent of White & Sons, of London, Ont., drove a threshing engine past the police station this morning on the way to the freight yards, where it was loaded to be forwarded to London. It has been taken in exchange for a new engine. Not only did its noisy progress interrupt the police court session, but the sharp flanges of the wheels dug deeply into the pavement.

City Solicitor Gordon, Chief Thompson, Detective Newhall, P. C. Blade and others held up the procession to question Hurd as to his right to drive the engine over the pavement contrary to the law. No action was taken at the time, but there is a possibility that the authorities may have found that Mr. Hurd's claim of a special permission was insufficient.

CASES REMANDED UNTIL WED. SEPT. 6

In the absence of County Magistrate Langley, five charges, involving Andrew Magee, Dolly Taylor, Alice Douglas and Annie Douglas, of Asphodel, were remanded by Magistrate Dumble this afternoon until Wednesday, Sept. 6th, and their bail renewed for that period. These cases have been gradually developing since the inquest into the death of the infant child of Annie Douglas in July.

The charge against Andrew Magee is that on May 7, 1916, he disposed of the dead body of Dolly Taylor's baby, secretly burying it with the intention to conceal the fact of its birth. A similar charge of concealment is laid against Dolly Taylor.

Annie Douglas is alleged to have given birth to a child on July 4th, 1916, and on the following day, the child being dead, was secretly buried with the intention of concealing the fact of its birth. Her sister, Alice Douglas, is charged with burying the body of the infant with an intent to conceal the fact of its birth.

FATHER DRIVES DAUGHTER MAD ON WEDDING EVE

TUSKALOOSA, Ala. (Special).—Hundreds of visitors to Tuscaloosa have noted and commented on the fact that a quite palatial home, but subsequently run down because no one would occupy it for any length of time, and some years ago purchased for a song by the city for municipal purposes, is avoided by nearly all the nego population and my many whites late at night.

The dingy, weather-beaten old Drish home, a residence of ante-bellum days, was built by Dr. Drish, one of the wealthiest men of the old south, cultured, proud, and aristocratic.

He had a daughter with beauty of a rich southern type—raven hair, fair complexion, and deep blue eyes. Dr. Drish idolized her and gratified her every wish. She was carefully educated, sent abroad with a governess, and a maid, and surrounded by a hundred luxuries.

FATHER WORSHIPS GIRL.

An accomplished equestrienne and a talented musician and artist, with all the allurements of wealth and position, old Dr. Drish literally worshipped her when she matured to womanhood. For her he built this mansion, with its elaborate parlours, reception rooms, exquisite gardens, and costly conservatories.

It pleased her father to have aristocrats at his daughter's feet. Yet the noblest of them were not accounted worthy of her. He became intensely jealous of the young man who won her love and asked for her hand. He was handsome, cultured, rich and an ardent wooer. Dr. Drish, however, flatly, refused the greatest wish his daughter ever cherished and declined to permit the marriage.

BIG WEDDING PLANNED.

But her stepmother conspired with the girl, and secret arrangements went forward for a most elaborate wedding. When Drish discovered the conspiracy he became morose and shut himself in his apartments two days without eating. At length he came from his seclusion with a strange glare in his eyes and consented to the marriage.

When all was in readiness on the night for rehearsal of the ceremony the old man, who had sullenly viewed the arrangements, asked his daughter to don her bridal costume, and come into his study so he could look on her beauty the last time as unshared with another. She complied but was in the room only a few minutes when the bridal party was startled by unearthly shrieks.

All rushed in to learn what had happened. They found the bride in a frenzy, groping about the room and uttering weird souds, while the gray haired father stared exultantly at her. Then the girl darted through the door to the great verandah encircling the house, where she began to pace to and fro, muttering: "Pretty bride! Pretty bride!" Soon she reached the long avenue of pines stretching away from the house.

PHYSICIANS ARE PUZZLED.

Th wedding guests followed her with vain entreaties. Physicians were summoned, who administered sedatives and forced her to bed. When the guests left old man Drish was still sitting in his study with a vacant stare and speechless. Efforts to make him explain were unavailable. The wedding was abandoned.

Physicians failed to restore the mind of the strangely disappointed bride, who soon returned to the avenue of pins to resume her march. Years passed, and Dr. Drish, whose conduct created much resentment and incurred the hostility of all who had known Catherine Drish, disappeared.

What he said or did to cause his lovely daughter to lose her mind so suddenly nobody ever could explain. The mystery was even deeper in view of a clause in his will that the girl should never be carried to an asylum and providing ample means for constant care and private attendants.

HYPNOTISM BELIEVED CAUSE.

Some say Dr. Drish was a powerful hypnotist, put his daughter in this sad mental condition to prevent the marriage, then hurried away.

Others hold the theory that the old man was for many years a deep student and analyst of strange eastern drugs and their effects in combination with certain forms of oriental mysticism; that he devoted years of research to this field of science in his study and laboratory, and administered to the girl a prescription which was supplemented in its effects by a powerful influence at a time when her nervous system was keyed up and supersensitive.

Still others declare the old man had some sort of bargain with an evil spirit for means to prevent the wedding.

How to Lose Your Tan, Freckles or Wrinkles

A day's motoring, an afternoon on the tennis ground or golf links, a sunbath on the beach or exposure on a sea trip, often bring on a deep tan or vivid crimson or more perplexing still a vigorous crop of freckles. A very necessary thing then is mercolized wax, which removes tan, redness or freckles quite easily. It literally peels off the affected skin, just a little at a time, so there's no hurt or injury. As the skin comes off in almost invisible flaky particles, no trace of the treatment is shown. Get an ounce of mercolized wax at your druggist's and use this nightly as you would cold cream, washing it off mornings. In a week or so you will have an entirely new skin, beautifully clear, transparent and of most delicate whiteness.

Wrinkles, so apt to form at this season, may be easily and quickly removed by bathing the face the in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 ounce dissolved in witch hazel, ½ pint. This is not only a valuable astringent, but has a beneficial tonic effect also.

MOTOR RIDE CUT SHORT

QUEBEC POLICE HOLD FOUR YOUNG TOURISTS FROM LEWISTON, MAINE.

Quebec, Que., August 29.—What promised to be an exceptionally "good time," as the group called it, was marred yesterday evening when the police held four young tourists and their chauffeur, who came from Lewiston, Me., to Canada. One of the girls, Valeda Mathieu, is charged with the theft of $1500 from her father, in Lewiston. Yesterday afternoon, shortly before four o'clock, Chief of Police Marsan of Levis, received a telephone call from Lewiston asking him to keep a sharp look out for four young tourists liable to pass Levis on their joy ride. Guards were set at all the roads and at the river ferry, and at six last night the car was captured with its occupants.

The group consists of Valeda Mathieu, 16, Nap Boilard, 20; Fred Beaulieu, 18, and a girl who says she is his wife, Mary Beaulieu, nee Bourget, 19. The police allege the couple are not married.

Detective M. Beaulieu, of the Lewiston police, came here last night and returned to-day with the fugitives.

The Death of The Betrayer

Story of Roger de la Marck, Who Killed the Spy That Betrayed Miss Cavell to the Huns

The International News Bureau publishes what purports to be a verbal story of Roger de la Marck, the man who killed the spy, Nels de Rode who betrayed Miss Cavell to the Huns. The news of de Rode's death was published long ago but the details of the affair have never been given to the public before. The story bears the character of veracity. De la Marck was a member of a Belgian secret society organised for the purpose of punishing spies and traitors, and when it became known that de Rode was a traitor and guilty of Miss Cavell's death, he was selected to carry out the work of vengeance. He tells how he waited at night near the residence of de Rode's parents, and at length saw the traitor approaching:

"In two minutes I was face to face with the unfortunate object of my night vigilance.

"Standing within three or four feet of him I informed him of what I was about to do. I told him if he kept silent I told him I would give him as many minutes as he wished in which to make his peace with his Maker. I told him that so long as no one approached us from either direction so long would I permit him to offer his prayers.

SCREAMED FOR HELP.

"But I had scarcely finished my proposal when he began to scream at the top of his voice for help."

"Even then, holding my revolver at his breast, I informed him that an entire army could not save his life, and I again urged him.

"Now, from this distance, this act of mine seems to me rather reckless. I can ascribe this apparently foolhardy act of mine to my utter timidity or perhaps nervousness. I was younger than my victim by five years, yet he looked just at that horrible moment like a mere child. I had never taken the life of a fellow man; at the outbreak of the war I was even under military age. Further, I had never in all my life held a revolver in my hand. I did not even know its mechanism.

"All that I knew and all that was necessary for me to know, was to pull the trigger while I aimed its muzzle until its death dealing contents had been emptied.

"I KILLED YOUR SON."

"I remember it as one remembers a horrible dream. I lifted the dead body of my victim clean from the ground, threw it over my shoulder, bore it some distance, and stood him against the door of his father's house.

The slayer was taken by the Belgian civil police and handed over to the Germans, but no evidence being found against him he was allowed to go free, the German officer making the significant remark: "Time will obscure the deeds of both good and bad men but the deed of a traitor is never forgotten." Afterwards de la Marck went to the home of de Rode's father and told him of the deed.

"I announced my name but they did not know my name. Then I told them, 'I killed your son.' I was excited otherwise I would not have announced it so brutally.

NO SORROW FOR TRAITOR.

"I must have been fully insane, or why should I have visited my victim's aged parents? I would not have done such a thing in my sober senses.

"However, I had not visited the house for the purpose of boasting of my act of murder. Forgetting the gravity of my act I visited Major de Rode's house in person to apologize to him in person for having suspected him of being a traitor like his son. He was not a traitor, and I told him so.

"To my utter surprise it was the aged woman who first spoke. She told me it was not the death of their son that caused their tears; it was the death of the soul of their only child that moved their hearts. What shame for the living ones! she wept, and the aged major joined.

"I left them abruptly and awkwardly. I found myself speechless."

As is well know the father of de Rode, refused to recognise or give burial to his dead son who had proved such a traitor to his country. Three or four others who were connected with the Cavell affair also suffered death at the hands of the secret society to which de la Marck belonged.

RATS CAUSE BIG SUNDAY BLAZE?

OTTAWA, Aug. 29.—Ramsayville was visited by a fire at 8 o'clock Sunday morning that caused the destruction of the group of buildings consisting of store, shed and dwelling rented by Mr. Robert Slinn from Mr. W. A. Ramsay. In less than sixty minutes the buildings went up in flames and smoke. Desperate efforts by the neighbors are considered responsible for the safety of a fine Presbyterian church just across the road from Mr. Slinn's dwellings. A blacksmith shop and a dwelling owned by Mr. Smith caught fire but were saved after hard work.

The supposition is that mice or rats gnawing matches on the shelves of Mr. Slinn's general store started the fire. It is the only solution so far offered.

When the fire broke out Mr. and Mrs. Slinn were in bed. They escaped in their night clothes after the flames had made great headway. Everything they possessed was lost.

A farmer passing along the road perceived smoke coming from the store. He rushed in and gave the alarm. By means of the telephone a large number of the neighbors were summoned and a vigorous attempt to combat the blaze was commenced. A large number of women also rallied and did excellent work in bringing up supplies of water and filling buckets. It was soon realized that to save the burning buildings was an utter impossibility so attention was directed towards saving adjacent buildings. Mr. Smith's home and the blacksmith did catch fire, but the flames were extinguished in time to prevent serious damage.

The Presbyterian church also had a narrow escape. Many of the fire fighters worked to the point of exhaustion and had to give up temporarily.

It is learned that the buildings were insured but as to the stock carried by Mr. Slinn nothing could be ascertained regarding insurance. Mr. and Mrs. Slinn were taken care of by the neighbors, having lost everything they had. The loss runs to several thousand.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

BOY'S SUIT

By Anabel Worthington

Individual styles in boys' suits are in more than fair request, so the style creators are giving themselves much latitude and as a result we have a variety of designs.

In the picture 7,865 the little boy wears a suit that is in real "sports style"—fishing being one of the sports, he has cause to feel proud of his "catch" and his suit. The fabric combination is effective in this model, but all one material may be employed.

Either straight or bloomer trousers may be buttoned to a waist that will have a front closing as illustrated or be made to slip on over the head. If the slip on over the head style be preferred the front of the waist should be slashed in the centre and the edges of the opening finished for lacing.

Linen, galatea, roly poly cloth, Indian Head, crash and similar weaves will be appropriate for developing a summer suit.

The pattern of No. 7,865 is cut in sizes 2, 4 and 6 years. To make in the medium size will require 1 yard of 36 inch material for the waist and 1½ yards for the trousers. Or, in all one material, 1⅞ yards will be plenty.

You may obtain the pattern by sending to the office of this publication

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Miss Hitty's Discovery

A Story of the "Movies"

By CLARISSA MACKIE

In the village of Edgewood were many straitlaced persons. To visit that town and become acquainted with the inhabitants was like going back a century, when the theater, playing cards and all manner of amusements were considered wicked. There is a story of a man who paved the way for the enjoyment of the game of billiards in the God fearing town of Philadelphia during the early part of the last century. He said that marbles were not considered wicked—why billiards? Marbles were stone, while billiard balls were ivory. Marbles were shot by the hand, billiard balls by a stick. Marbles were played on the sidewalk out of doors, while billiards were played on a level bed in the house. Wherein lay the difference?

The good people of the Quaker City, whose children could not be prevented from playing marbles, concluded after this discovery had been made that billiards were no more sinful and withdrew their opposition, and thereafter billiards became fashionable.

It was the fate of Miss Hitty to make a similar discovery in Edgewood.

Miss Hitty met Dick Hedges at a church sociable. Had she not met him at a church sociable she would probably never have met him at all, for dancing was frowned upon in Edgewood, and without dancing young people's parties are considered dull. The consequence was that, no one caring to go to the trouble of getting up a party that was sure to be dull, parties were not given.

But it would have made no difference where these two happened to meet, for at once both recognized that they were made for each other, and after that they provided their own places of meeting, and very soon they were engaged. Unfortunately Hedges was poor and but one opening appeared for him; that was a position in an American tea house in China. Dick availed himself of it and tore himself away from his betrothed. Weeks, months, even years, passed, and he did not return.

When the Palace movie theater opened its doors in Edgewood the house of entertainment was looked upon with disapproval by the church members.

At first many of them declined to even penetrate the mysteries beyond the white painted doors and the many posters outside, but gradually one by one the villagers were lured inside until the venture promised to be a profitable one. Even the ministers of the different churches visited the theater from time to time to censor the plays, but on the whole it was decided that it was a harmless diversion.

After Miss Hitty Morton made her important discovery Edgewood took the Palace theater to its heart.

Every one knew that Hitty Morton would have been married long ago if Dick Hedges had ever returned from his long voyage to China. But Dick had never returned, and it was believed that he had died. One by one his family had died or moved away from Edgewood until there remained only his old sweetheart, Hitty Morton, who lived on Honeypot road, in a little red cottage near the bay. Some people whispered that Dick had been faithless to Hitty.

The first time Hitty entered the walls of the Palace she was bewildered by the crowd of silent people, the flashing pictures on the screen, the novelty of it all, for she had never been in a theater in all her simple life.

But the screen pictures laid their magic spell upon her, and she became a devotee of the movies. Twice a week as regularly as the program was changed Hitty Morton could be found sitting in the same seat halfway down the room, her bright eyes eagerly following the stories told by the screen.

Deacon Peddle, who passed the collection plate in church, always scrutinized Hitty's contribution to detect whether or not she was enjoying the semiweekly amusement at the expense of the church, but invariably Hitty's silver dime would drop into the plate. Perhaps Hime Dayton, the butcher, might have told another story—that Hitty was skimping on her food. She was eating meat only twice a week now instead of three times.

One night in particular the posters were more alluring than ever. There had been a change of program that day, but there was a missionary meeting, and Hitty had postponed her going to the following night. Now she paused in front of the brightly lighted entrance and studied the colored posters.

"All For Love." That sounded thrilling, with a rescue at sea. Pictures of the sea always attracted her.

"Visits to Strange Lands." Hitty thrilled with anticipated pleasure, for she dearly loved these travel pictures, giving glimpses of strange lands and strange people, perhaps the countries that Dick Hedges had visited. He used to say that when he got a vessel of his own he would take her with him to the far east. Hitty still lived these voyages in her day dreams.

She glanced up and down the village street.

Yonder was the church. The basement was brightly lighted, for there was to be a missionary barrel packed that night. In Hitty's arms were half a dozen white shirts she had stitched for some unknown missionary in Asia. She was expected to help pack the barrel.

Before her were the alluring posters. Hitty glanced once up and down the street and then disappeared through the swinging doors. She did not know that Mrs. Deacon Peddle, passing on the other side of the street, had glimpsed her backsliding sister and was even now detailing the circumstances to a shocked group of listeners about the missionary barrel.

Hitty found her accustomed seat, and being rather short in stature she sat down on the bundle of shirts and so did not miss a thing all evening.

The sweet romance of "All For Love" was slowly reeled off to the sentimental rapture of the very young and a few lonely souls like our own Miss Hitty. She sat through it all, her round, sweet little face uplifted to the screen, with a look of wistfulness that a newcomer saw as he sat down nearby.

If any one had been interested it might have been noticed that the bronzed newcomer divided his interest between the pictures and Hitty Morton's face. After awhile the seat beside Hitty became vacant and in the darkened theater the stranger glided across the aisle and occupied it. Hitty never even turned her eyes from the screen; she was accustomed to this change of neighbors.

On the screen appeared the first of the travel pictures, which were Hitty's delight.

A great steamer was sailing from San Francisco for Japan. She felt herself one of that group of travelers hurrying up the gangplank of the great liner.

The scene shifted to the first port of call, Honolulu. Dark eyed maidens with garlands of flowers about their necks and other garlands for sale, queer vehicles, a swift view of a volcano, then aboard the steamer. A glimpse of the social life on board, then the approach to the fairy islands of Japan.

Breathlessly Hitty watched the shifting scenes, fascinated by the oriental sights. She almost thought herself there with Dick, as she had dreamed. While she watched she turned a little worn ring on her engagement finger. Any woman in Edgewood would have told you that it was Hitty Morton's engagement ring.

The man beside her glimpsed the ring, and his face grew pale.

At last the steamer approached the yellow shore line of China. Then she dropped anchor off Wusung, in the mouth of the Yangtze river, and transferred her passengers to the small tugs which were to convey them up the shallow tidal river called Whangpo to the city of Shanghai.

When the picture of the public wharf at Shanghai was thrown upon the screen Hitty leaned forward. She wanted to scream.

There in the crowd of eager faces watching the arriving passengers was a familiar one—the face of Dick Hedges, grown older, perhaps, but Dick Hedges, nevertheless, smooth shaven, with a captain's uniform on his broad shoulders and a gold laced cap on his handsome head.

It was Dick—Dick Hedges, her Dick in faraway Shanghai!

The much maligned moving picture screen had shown her that he was alive!

"Dick! Dick! Oh, Dick!" she whispered sobbingly.

A strong, warm hand covered hers, and the man beside her looked down out of Dick Hedges' eyes. He wore a captain's uniform, and in his other hand was a gold laced cap.

"Dick!" Hitty thought she screamed the word, but it did not leave her lips.

"Easy, lass; easy, lass!" he whispered gently, and then while the screen displayed further pictures of these far countries Hitty saw no more. Was not life unreeling for her a greater romance than could be depicted on a screen? Had not the sea given up the dead?

Dick whispered the meager details of his story. He had been lost at sea and then rescued, and when he had returned to civilization some one from Edgewood had maliciously told him that Hitty Morton had forgotten him and was married to another man.

Only a little while ago had Dick heard that Hitty was still unmarried, and so he had returned to Edgewood to ascertain if she still cared for him. He had dropped into the theater and glimpsed her face. He sat beside her and saw that she wore his ring above her third finger. He had seen her face when his own picture—taken unknown to himself—had leaped out of the crowd upon the wharf in Shanghai. He had heard her murmured words, her unconscious cry of joy at seeing him.

"Then I knew that you still loved me and that I was not too late," he whispered as they followed the crowd outside. "My ship sails from San Francisco on the 21st, Hitty, so we must be married at once so that we can start on our honeymoon voyage. You remember how we planned it, eh?"

Of course Hitty remembered. They walked along in happy conversation, the package of shirts tucked under Dick's free arm.

Mrs. Deacon Peddle and a group of missionary ladies overtook Hitty Morton and brought her to a realization of her sins.

"Hitty Morton! Where are those missionary shirts?" demanded Mrs. Peddle. "We're holding the barrel open till morning so's they can be put in."

Hitty took the package from Dick's grasp, but he snatched it back again.

"If these are shirts, men's size," he said genially, "I guess I'm the missionary they'll about fit. I want 'em for my trousseau. Hitty and I'm going to be married in a day or so."

People more Particular

THE demand for package goods grows greater every year.

Why?

Because the world is ever growing more and more particular about foods.

Packages keep the goods in wholesome, sanitary condition. They keep out dust, flies, moisture and odors, preventing deterioration.

They preserve flavor, freshness and strength, insuring value for the money.

In sealed packages only.

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

WE NOW THINK IN TERMS OF BILLIONS

Millions Have Become Small Numbers Since European War and Fly Swatting Began.

In sending out a story from Huntington, W. Va., on the performances of the champion fly swatter of the town, the correspondents, says the Pittsburg Post, realized they would not attract much attention without getting into the terms of billions. Since June 1, it seems, the hero of the sketch has put the quietus on something like 200,000 of the insects; but what are a few hundreds of thousands in these days when our prosperity and the war debts being piled up in Europe have trained us to expect talk in terms of billions. So the correspondents added that if every resident of the town had swatted flies at the same rate as the champion, ten billions of them would have been destroyed.

Watch yourself the next time you are reading figures. Do millions or hundreds of millions seem as big to you now as a few years ago? No matter how lacking a person may be in money or how much a few thousands of dollars might mean to him in a practical way, in his ordinary reading of news supposed to involve big figures he requires billions to impress him. The most serious reflection in this connection is that, while our talk in billions usually refers to prosperity, that of Europe relates to misfortunes. Naturally the prosperity affords us great satisfaction; but no American of normal mind, of course, can bring himself to rejoice over the fact that things are just the other way in many other lands. Still it requires talk in billions to emphasize what their sufferings are.

HOW MRS. BEAN MET THE CRISIS

Carried Safely Through Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Nashville, Tenn.—"When I was going through the Change of Life I had a tumor as large as a child's head. The doctor said it was three years coming and gave me medicine for it until I was called away from the city for some time. Of course I could not go to him then, so my sister-in-law told me that she thought Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would cure it. It helped both the Change of Life and the tumor and when I got home I did not need the doctor. I took the Pinkham remedies until the tumor was gone, the doctor said, and I have not felt it since. I tell every one how I was cured. If this letter will help others you are welcome to use it." —Mrs. E. H. BEAN, 525 Joseph Avenue, Nashville, Tenn.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a pure remedy containing the extractive properties of good old fashioned roots and herbs, meets the needs of woman's system at this critical period of her life. Try it.

If there is any symptom in your case which puzzles you, write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

DAMP WEATHER ABROAD.

Next to the war the abnormal weather which has harassed England so far this year is the most talked of thing in the country, says a despatch from London. A sunny day so far this season is an event. The same holds true of all northern Europe, where weather of the kind resembling March has prevailed throughout June and July. In Russia there has been an unusual amount of rain and excessive cold. In Moscow up to the middle of July there has been no sign of summer or of the hot weather which generally sets in before June. In Scandinavia the weather has been cheerless and very similar to England. In southern Germany violent rains have fallen and Lake Constance is abnormally high, while in Austria there have been tremendous storms. South of the Alps excessively hot weather has been reported for many weeks. In Sardinia there has been a heat wave which has been followed by forest fires.

That Settled It.

She—You remind me so much of my brother.

He—Indeed! In what way?

She—Well, Harry seems awfully fond of me, yet he never offers to kiss me.

After that it was quite unnecessary for her to ring in any of her relatives.

DISCORD IN GERMANY

Government's Arbitrariness Develops Bitterness, Neutral Writer Asserts.

Unless the Kaiser's Government takes steps to bring hostilities to an immediate close the political and economic situation after peace has finally been re-established will be almost worse than war itself, according to a report on conditions in Germany written for the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant by a citizen of a neutral country. The Dutch newspaper, which is regarded in some circles as rather pro-German, describes the writer as "a neutral, not a Dutchman, who has been much in Germany during the war. He is an excellent observer, a very moderate man, rather pro-German. From a feeling of pity, but with calm judgment, he looks upon affairs impartially."

The article, as translated for The London Daily Telegraph of Aug. 2, says in part:

"War weariness presses as a burden which cannot be turned away upon the whole people. This weariness has in the last few months, even weeks, assumed such proportions that people appear no longer able to fight against it. Those who have to go to the front try to get out of it by every possible means. This burden cannot be lifted by any victories.

"The conditions are made still worse by great bitterness against the Government, which allowed a favourable moment for the conclusion of peace to pass in the Spring of 1915. Driven by greed and rage for conquest the Government allowed the right moment to pass without, as people think, any hope of its recurrence.

"The lower classes are becoming more and more radical in their attitude. Their bitterness is continually expressed against everybody standing above them. People in the large towns, especially Berlin, are in a state of ferment. The Government attempts to meet this with general contempt of the facts of the situation and the people's rights. One wildly reactionary measure follows another. Little riots are continually occurring, and they are bloodily suppressed. Especially after the condemnation of Liebknecht such things were the order of the day."

LOST HIS BARN; BUT SAVED CAR

LINDSAY, Aug. 30.—Carelessness in handling gasolene resulted in a big property loss in Wollaston township near Bancroft early one morning last week. A farmer named Rusaw, who owns an automobile, went out before daylight to fill the tank prior to starting on a trip. He used a lantern to furnish light, and the result was an explosion and a fire which destroyed the barn, a quanity of grain, a threshing machine and some live stock. His loss is estimated at over $3,000. He saved the car.

Price of Peace Must Be Removal Of The House of Hohenzollern

With Peace Must Come the End of This House From all Power in the Councils of European Nations—It Alone Wanted War and Threw the World into the Present Great Conflict, Say Diplomats—Germanic Empire Must be Placed Forever in the Impossibility of Renewing the Conflict Which They Have Now Lost.

SHUTTLE NO LONGER WORKS

PARIS, August 30.—"Peace only when the people and the governments of the allied States, confident of their strength and conscious of their moral and political duty, shall decree that the House of Hohenzollern has ceased to rule and that no treaty will be made with it, because it alone wanted war and all this frightful devastation of the world is its work."

This is the view which diplomatists and writers are beginning to take of the first condition of peace—the deposition of the Kaiser and his dynasty. It is thus expressed by Mr. Joseph Reinach in the Paris Figaro, whose ideas are often inspired by statesmen of France and Britain and in cruder form by various societies and civic bodies in England, some going further and urging that William II. be hanged for his crimes against humanity. It is far beyond Sir Edward Grey's statement that the sword would not be sheathed until Belgium was restored, Alsace and Lorraine again French and all the little nations guaranteed in their rights.

NO TIME TO STATE TERMS.

Naturally the British Foreign Secretary could not go further and say he proposed to hang the German Emperor or to depose the Hohenzollern dynasty because, diplomaticlly speaking, the Allies have not yet considered the time opportune to state their terms of peace. Those terms, if formulated now, would appear to the ruling caste in Germany like an invitation to them to commit suicide, which in fact it would be. They will therefore continue to fight as long as the subject peoples of the dual empires will allow them.

Nevertheless, Germany is crying for peace and the cry from the Lake of Constance to the Baltic Sea grows ever louder. But the German people cannot escape responsibility for the war. The Emperor was personally responsible, in the view of the allied diplomatists, because he deliberately sought the war, had been preparing for it a long time and, having had the opportunity to prevent it by a word, he precipitated it.

"But the bulk of the German people made themselves the Kaiser's accomplices," says Mr. Reinach, "because they believed in the success of the abominable undertaking to dominate and exploit the world. And for nearly two years, from the violation of Belgian soil to the wholesale assassination of the Lusitania, they applauded all the atrocities and greeted all the crimes as victories.

"Now that, one after the other, all the German offensives have been stopped before reaching their object, now that the wind is turning and their stomachs cry out, now that millions of Germans have fallen or been mutilated in vain, Germany, without yet disavowing the war, is seeking its end. She does not offer peace. She merely perceives that she cannot win the conflict.

"If it were a question of beginning over again, as in July, 1914, the German Emperor himself would not begin. With conceited disregard, his own newspapers admit, he misjudged his enemies, considering the French people and Russia corrupt and Great Britain decadent. For a long time the war itself did not open his eyes. The French armies were to be winded in a few days; Russia would not be able to organize any more armies; England would only 'fight to the last Belgian.' Now he must realize that he has once more taken for reality the mirage of his moral desert.

SHUTTLE NO LONGER WORKS.

"Germany is besieged together with Austria. She is attacked on all fronts. Her famous shuttle between one front and the other no longer works. Seven divisions which she sent from France to Russia cannot come back without her eastern front breaking. Her reserves are becoming exhausted. The blockade is becoming tighter. Germany would like a truce. But there will be no truce.

"Peace for the Germany of July, 1916, means only the cessation, the suspension of the war she unchained in July, 1914. Peace for our allies and for us is quite different. It means the Germanic empires placed forever in the impossibility of renewing the conflict which they have now lost.

"The two Germanic empires, that of the Hapsburgs as well as the Hohenzollerns, together with that of the Turks, are concerned; for before the criminal law in all countries and all ages no distinction ever has been made between the principal and the accomplice and both are equally charged with atrocities and horrors, the Emperor-King of Vienna and the Emperor-King of Berlin, he who struck the blow and he who ordered it. Neither human nor divine law can distinguish between the two.

EMPIRES ALIKE.

"For the entente between peoples who wish to live independent and free, the Holy Alliance of nations, has been concluded against both empires, and the treaty which the governments signed at London on September 4, to which Italy adhered, is ot a 'scrap of paper,' but a veritable engagement of honour. Unity of action is not alone the unity of front, but exists also in the unity of chancelleries."

Among other things, Mr. Reinach holds, the Eastern question must be settled for all time as the Eastern question has been the basis of, or has influenced, all the great questions of western Europe. Then limits must be set to both the Central Empires, with such regulations and such guarantees that it will be impossible for them ever to renew the terrible years of the present war. It would be foolishness to admit for one extenuating circumstances from which the other might profit. It would be none the less foolish not to consider in advance how the one may be stopped from carrying out the design it already entertains of taking out on its accomplice the impairments it will have suffered from its conquerors.

ROUMANIA'S QUEEN HAS BEEN PRO-ALLY

Has Influenced Her Husband in Decision—Outspoken in Her Sympathies

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—An officer of the Medical Corps of the British army who has been in Russia and Roumania as a member of the British Red Cross Commission in those countries, and who left Roumania only a few weeks ago, told last night of the part that the Roumanian Queen has played in swinging her country in line as an ally of the Entente powers. Owing to his official position, this officer asked that his name be not used.

"If a woman," he said, "has had a powerful influence with respect to the position of Greece in the war, it may also be said that a woman has exercised not a little influence as regards the Roumanian position. The Queen of Roumania is enthusiastically pro-ally in her sympathies, which she has been at no pains to conceal, for she is of a very outspoken disposition. While her husband is a Hohenzollern prince, he is far from hosting the strongly militaristic tendencies of the head of his family, and the Queen is the daughter of an English prince by a Russian princess. Her father was the late Duke of Edinburgh, brother of King Edward, and uncle of the present King George, and her mother was the daughter of the Czar Nicholas I.

Kept Husband Informed.

"The Queen of Roumania is a beautiful and brilliant woman, to whom her husband, himself a man of marked ability, is devoutedly attached. She is somewhat impulsive and unconventional, and is greatly beloved by the people, interesting herself in a number of philanthropic movements. Since the outbreak of the war she has kept herself in touch with the English and Russian relatives, and has been able to enlighten her husband with respect to certain facts which might not possibly have been otherwise duly impressed upon him."

LONDON NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON ROUMANIA'S IMPORTANCE

Catches Bulgaria Between Upper and Nether Millstones of Allied Armies, They Observe, and Opens Road for Russia into Enemy Territory—"Prussia Awakes After an Orgy of Hysterical Delight," Says the Telegraph

THE LEGEND OF VICTORY

LONDON, August 30.—All the London newspapers devote the major part of their editorial space to the discussion of Roumania's entry into the war, emphasizing the economic, political and moral, as well as the military effects of this intervention.

With reference to the military significance of Roumania's action, the papers all assert that the entry of Roumania alters the whole balance of man power in the struggle in the eastern and southeastern theatres, brings Bulgaria between the upper and nether millstones and offers Russia a route to the heart of the enemy's country—a route the defence of which involves a large extension of the enemy's line and an enormous increase in the enemy's responsibilities. The Daily News says:—

"It is the envelopment of the Central Powers which Roumanian success would complete; that is the capital fact of the situation. Economically the importance of Roumania's step is the loss to the Central Powers of the supplies they have been drawing from the big Balkan state."

The Express says:—

"Germany has been receiving cattle, wheat and petroleum from Roumania in great quantities. This supply is now cut off when the demand is more urgent than ever."

Politically, the London newspapers believe that Roumania's entry is likely to have its most immediate effect in Greece, strengthening the hands of Venizelos and the pro-Entente party. The Morning Post says:—

"For her indecision and weakness Greece is now suffering heavily, but there are signs that under the teaching of bitter experience the Greek people are coming to their senses. They will be wise to look to it that their repentance does not come too late."

The editorials speculate considerably on the moral effect on the Prussian people of Roumania's action. The Daily Chronicle asks:—

"Can the masses in the enemy countries continue to believe the legend of victory when they see this verdict passed by neutral statesmanship?"

The Daily Telegraph says:—

"Prussia awakes after an orgy of hysterical delight over the safe return of a submarine from America to hear that the strongest armed European neutral is ranged against her, ready for instant war at the point of greatest peril to her defensive scheme."

$49,225,920 Was C.P.R. Net Earnings For Year

Not Including Profits From Manufacture of Munitions

MONTREAL, Aug. 29.—Gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the year ended June 30, 1916, were $129,491,886. This was disclosed by the annual financial statement which was mailed to shareholders to-day. The working expenses were $80,265,965, and the net earnings $49,225,920.

From this was deducted contribution to pension fund, net earnings of Pacific Coast steamships, and telegraphs, transferred to special income account, and dividends, which left a net surplus of $15,444,158. In addition to the regular dividends on the preference and ordinary stock three per cent. was paid from special income, the details of which account were:

Balance at June 30, 1915, $8,216,144; less dividend $1,950,000.

The sales of agricultural land during the year were 390,715 acres for $6,126,108, being an average of $15.68 per acre. Included in this area were 8,046 acres of irrigated land, which brought $54.67 per acre, so that the average price of the balance was $14.67 per acre.

The directors announce that in consequence of the extraordinary conditions created by the present war it was considered advisable to postpone the effective date of the agreement entered into between the company and the Allan Line Steamship Company and the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services Limited, authorized by resolutions passed at the last annual meeting for the acquisition by the last-named company of the capital stock of the Allan Line now held by the company.

The directors state that the ships of both companies will be operated by the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services Limited.

A resolution would be submitted granting authority to the directors to carry out the transaction with the Ocean Services or some other company created for that purpose, on which company the C. P. R. would have full ownership and control. The profits resulting from the manufacture of munitions of war undertaken at the request of the Government have not been taken into the operating revenue, but have been applied as a set-off against contributions to patriotic and relief funds.

The important falling off in the revenue per ton mile for the carriage of freight traffic from 76 cents in 1915 to 64 cents this year, the report states, was largely due to the abnormal increase in the tonnage of grain handled at the very low rates that apply to that commodity, although the reduced tariff rates in Western Canada had considerable influence.

DRIVERS HEAD CUT OFF IN AUTOMOBILE RACES, KALAMAZOO

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Aug. 29.—Marion Arnold, of Chicago and Jack Peacock, of Brooklyn, were killed and eight other drivers and mechanicians were injured when eleven racing cars piled into a heap at the quarter turn of the recreation Park mile track here on Sunday on the gateway of the third annual Derby in this city.

The overturning of the Sunbeam 12, driven by Peacock, as it rounded the first turn of the second mile, caused the accident. Peacock's car struck the fence, swerving lengthwise across the track and tipped over on its side.

Track officials made a desperate effort to flag the thirteen cars that were thundering up from behind, but without success.

Burt's Stutz was the first to strike the wrecked Sunbeam 12. Then nine other cars piled one after another in the smoking death heap. Four of the cars were far enough in the rear to avoid smashing into the wreckage.

Track officials from the track and the judges' stand started for the pile-up and at the same time the crowds made a rush from the grand stand. When the first reached the scene Arnold's headless body was found beneath the battered Stutz.

The dead are: Marion Arnold, Chicago, mechanician for Andy Burt in a Stutz car, decapitated; Jack Peacock, Brooklyn, driver of Sunbeam 12, skull, hips and thigh fractured. Died immediately after reaching hospital.

Fatally injured: F. E. Marquette, Kalamazoo, Peacock's mechanician, head badly crushed, left leg broken below knee in three places, dying; Al W. Downs, Kalamazoo, driver of Buick, head cut, unconscious.

Those seriously injured but who it is thought will recover are: Andy Burt, Chicago, driver of Stutz, badly bruised; Otto Henning, Chicago, driver of Ogden, injured by blow above groin; Jimmie Alexandeg, Sioux City, Ia., mechanician for Billy Chandler, cut and bruised; Thomas Ball, Coldwater, Mich., driver of Chalmers, back hurt; Guy Bailey, Coldwater, Mich., mechanician for Ball, face cut and back hurt.

LADIES ATTACKED BY LARGE CRANE

LINDSAY, Aug. 30.—A few nights ago two ladies in a canoe on Moira Lake were attacked by a crane. ROUMANIANS ENCOUNTERING ONLY WEAK RESISTANCE

Have Marched Without Interruption for Twelve Hours on Enemy Territory Says First Official Statement From The Roumanian War Office---Russians and Roumanians Reported to Have Captured Principal Carpathian Passes --- Bucharest Bombarded by Zeppelins and Aeroplanes.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

BUCHAREST, Aug. 30.—Roumanian troops have marched, without interruption, for twelve hours in enemy territory, encountering only weak resistance, said the first official statement from the Roumanian War Office to-day, on the invasion of Transylvania.

Russian armies in large force are crossing Roumania for the invasion of Bulgaria and Hungary.

ROME, Aug. 30.—Roumanian and Russian troops have captured all the principal Carpathian Passes, according to reports received here from Bucharest.

Roumanian artillery is bombarding the Bulgarian city of Rustchuk and the Hungarian town of Orsoyo.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 30.—Zeppelins and hostile aeroplanes bombarded Bucharest during last night. No important damage was done.

Austrians To Leave Transylvanian Towns

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

ATHENS, Aug. 30.—The Austrians have made preparations for the early evacuation of both Kronstadt and Hermannstadt, the two most important cities of Transylvania, by the civilian population.

PARIS, Aug. 30.—(French Official).—French troops have progressed west of the Vardar River, in the fighting in the Balkans, it was officially announced to-day, while the French artillery conducted an energetic bombardment of enemy organizations on the Struma front and around Lake Doiran. West of Ostrovo Lake, the Serbs repulsed a Bulgarian attack, inflicting heavy losses on the enemy. Artillery duels are continuing on the Balkan front, in the region of Vetrenik and Ostrovo.

Along the Western front the usual cannonading occurred last night. There were no infantry attacks except east of Fleury, on the north-eastern front of Verdun, where the French made progress.

PARIS, Aug. 30.—The Petit Parisien publishes a report that the Roumanians, having forced their way into Transylvania, have occupied two important cities beyond the mountains.

Part of Transylvania To Be Abandoned

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BERLIN, Aug. 30.—The abandonment of part of Transylvania to the Roumanians is the forecast in despatches from newspaper correspondents at the Austrian army headquarters. Forecasting the strategy on the Roumanian frontier, the correspondents intimate that the Central Powers will not attempt to defend the entire border line owing to its crookedness and to the large number of troops which would be required for the adequate protection of a front half as long as the Russian battle line. On that account, and inasmuch as Russia and Roumania are operating as a single unit, the despatch says, it will be advisable to shorten the front by the abandonment of certain parts of Transylvania.

No Separate Peace For Bulgars Possible

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

SALONIKA, Aug. 30.—I fear that when I return to my country I shall find a desert. All able-bodied men are here in my army. There is nothing but ruins in Serbia. The enemy has stolen everything removable and destroyed the rest, tortured and massacred the inhabitants, executing to the minutest detail his atrocious programme of annihilating the Serbian people.

But the Serbian people will never die, though it may take a long time to reconstruct our country. I firmly believe that the peace treaty will deliver our unhappy brothers from Austrian slavery, including the Serbs belonging to the Banat of Temesvar.

The Entente statesmen believe that Serbia is destined for a strong Balkan State, preventing the satisfaction of the Central Empires' greed for the dominion of the East. This is necessary for the future peace of Europe. Every Allied power rejects the suggestion of a separate peace with Bulgaria, leaving her unpunished. Bulgaria will suffer severely for her treachery. She will be defeated, whether the Roumanians attack her or not.

MINISTER OF TRADE CHEERFUL AS TO FUTURE

Not Only Are the Military Signs Promising But Trade Promises Well After the Hostilities Are Over Says Sir Geo. Foster.

ANNOUNCES PLANS

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Aug. 30.—Cheerful and confident is Rt. Hon. Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, at Ottawa, who is here as the honoured guest of the Canadian National Exhibition. Rumania's plunge into the war vortex impresses Sir George as a most favourable augury, and not only are the military signs encouraging, but trade promises well after hostilities are over. Sir George announces trade plans of great interest to Canada. One concerns Germany, too, but it is not likely to gratify Kaiser Wilhelm. A very complete collection of German and Austrian products, sold largely before the war, has been made by the British Government, and following a British tour the assortment will be brought to Canada. It will be displayed in Toronto, Winnipeg, Montreal, and probably at other smaller centres later. Canadian manufacturers, merchants, and consumers alike will find an inspection not without profit. Materials, prices, cost estimates, etc. will be made clear. The idea strikes Sir George Foster as a good one, and Canadians, so far as can be ascertained, like the sound of the suggestion.

PETERBORO SHARES IN COUNTY WIDE RECRUITING SLUMP

However Two Recruits Were Secured Yesterday and as Toronto Only Secured Nine The Local Showing is Good Comparatively --- Penalty Against Wearing of False Decorations---To-day's General Military News.

That recruiting, even with the impetus of a new battalion, is not brisk is a fact that cannot be denied, and the conditions in Peterborough are duplicated in all parts of Canada, even in Toronto, where enlistment has been at the high-water mark ever since the war began. Only nine recruits were attested in Toronto yesterday, and as the 247th secured two men here, the showing was comparatively good locally. There were no developments in local military circles to-day. Next week the re-organization of the Speakers' Patriotic League is expected to add zest to the campaign. In the meantime Lieut.-Col. Johnston and his staff are working quietly.

Horsemen who want to do their bit have the best opportunity since the war began to get overseas at once. One hundred drivers are needed by the horse transport to leave almost at once. Information can be secured from Pte. C. Cook, or at the Recruiting Rooms, Simcoe Street.

Barriefield War Camp, Aug. 29.—Last night the infantry units of Barriefield camp spent the entire night in the woods and fields, working out a night tactical scheme which had been prepared by Lieut.-Col. Brown, G.S.O. There were few soldiers in the city, as all commanding officers were ordered to keep their men in camp. There was no hint given the men as to the undertaking of the night, and no officer knew the hour when the "assembly" would be sounded. At 9.42 last night the bugle gave the alarm, and in a matter of minutes the 154th, 155th, and 156th Battalions were on parade, and ready for any order that might be given. The scheme laid out was a good one, and blank ammunition was served to the men to relieve the monotony of a "shotless" attack and defence scheme. The attack was made on the trenches south of the main road, and some excellent trench work was done by both the attacking and defending parties. The men enjoy these tactical schemes because they possess a touch of real war, and constitute an excellent training for the serious work awaiting them at the front.

Among the officers selected from this military district to go overseas in the special draft leaving shortly is Lieut. J. A. New of Peterborough. The list is as follows:—

Lieut. E. B. Smythe, 146th Battalion; Lieut. J. F. Martin, 146th; Lieut. J. J. Bennett 146th; Lieut. Wagar, 146th Lieut. Cunningham, 130th, Lieut. May, 130th; Lieut. Holden, signalling training depot; Lieut. Haultain, 136th; Lieut. Sills, 136th; Lieut. Jamieson, 136th; Lieut. Dudley, 136th; Lieut. Given, 136th, Lieut. Howell, 139th; Lieut. Masson. 139th; Lieut. Croft, 139th; Lieut. New, 139th; Lieut. Dolman, 139th; Lieut. Landry, 109th; Lieut. Bissonette, 109th; Lieut. Stevenson, 154th; Lieut. Bogart, 154th; J. Macdonald. 154th; Lieut. Nurse, 155th; Lieut. Nugot, 155th; Lieut. Fish, 155th; Lieut. Dingle, 156th; Lieut. Browne, 156th; Lieut. Duncan, 207th.

The date of leaving of the above draft has not yet been settled, but it is expected that they will leave within two weeks for the east.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The people of Ontario will soon be enabled to visualize something of the work done in the Orpington Hospital. A film 1,800 feet in length has been made, portraying the arrival and admission of a convoy of wounded, the sorting out, clinical treatment, and the entire course in the hospital up to the discharge of the patient. The money raised by the exhibition will be devoted to the Canadian Red Cross.

Col. Hodgetts has concluded arrangements for the acquisition of the college at Ramsgate, which is capable of accommodating 800 beds. The place will be named the Princess Patricia's Convalescent Hospital.

A message received from Pioneer Sergt. E. Baumer of the 93rd Battalion says that the 93rd boys are all cheerful and well.

Capt. Max Hamilton, a Peterborough officer of the 146th Battalion, at Valcartier Camp, was a visitor at the Armouries this morning.

In announcing the receipt of tobacco from a Peterborough member of the Overseas Tobacco Club, Pte. Cyril Giroux, the well-known local hockey player, who is with a Machine Gun Battery, in France, says: "Your parcel of smokes and 'baccy' received, for which I thank you. Give my regards to the boys and tell them to send me an Examiner once in a while, as news from the old home town is greatly appreciated. Met Dr. Greer a few days ago. He is fine."

CAMP BORDEN, Aug. 30.— H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, accompanied by the Duchess and Princess Patricia are expected to visit Camp Borden Monday next. Their Royal Highnesses will make a thorough inspection of the camp, visiting the bombing school, trench warfare, rifle ranges, etc., but no review will be held.

ROUMANIANS STRIKE AT THREE POINTS

UNITED STATES PEOPLE EXPECT RAILWAY STRIKE

Thousands are Curtailing Their Vacations and Hastening Home While Shippers are Making Frantic Efforts.

PRESIDENTS' EFFORTS

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30. — President Wilson is making every effort to-day to induce the leaders of the Railway Brotherhoods to rescind a general strike order for Labour Day. The administration officials are busy pointing out that as Congress is sure to pass the legislation submitted by the President, the men had nothing to gain by a strike but everything to lose. In the meantime the whole nation is practically anticipating a strike. Thousands of people are curtailing their vacations, and hastening home. Shippers are making frantic efforts to get goods through, and merchants are making every endeavour to stock up, and the leaders of both sides of the dispute are adamant in their resolutions not to give in.

District Court Judge Sears this afternoon issued an order restraining trainmen employed on the Union Pacific Railroad from striking on Labour Day.

"No power under heaven, short of satisfactory settlement by the railroads can prevent the railroad men from striking on Labour Day," W. C. Leo, trainmen leader, declared this afternoon, after talking with Secretary of Labour Wilson.

The first formal efforts of Congress to rush through legislation to prevent the strike of four hundred thousand railroad employees ended temporarily in a quarrel to-day, when bitter charges were made that certain senators are "attempting to make political capital out of a disastrous situation."

"GOD FORGIVE YOU."

"God forgive you, I cannot!" President Wilson, it became known to-day, thus concluded his final interview with the railroad executives, at the White House, yesterday, when they submitted their final proposition rejecting every effort and suggestion the President had made for peaceful settlement of their dispute with the employees.

New York, N.Y., Aug. 30.—All the big railways, with headquarters here and in Chicago, and other places, have announced a partial or full embargo on all kinds of freight. Some are already refusing to accept perishable goods. Most of the big railroad magnates have returned from Washington to organize their forces to meet the impending strike.

OF INTEREST TO LOCAL MEMBERS

Twenty-six thousand policy-holders of the Ancient Order of United Workmen are reaping a harvest of a seeding spread over a period of nearly thirty years. Men who yesterday might have looked at the round figure of $2,000 on their policies, to-day received a form announcing a 25, 35, 50 per cent., and even a greater reduction in their post-mortem wealth, The cut was made to solidify the Order so that it can keep going.

King Ferdinand Goes to Front to Join General Staff at Main Headquarters —All Arms of Service Mobilized.

AUSTRIANS RETIRE

LONDON, Aug. 29.— Military developments have been rapid following the announcement of Roumania's entrance into the war.

Roumanian troops are striking against Hungary at three points, according to news reaching here tonight. King Ferdinand has gone to the front to join the general staff at main headquarters, having before his departure from Bucharest issued an order mobilising all arms of the service.

On the frontier of Bukowina, Roumanian and Russian troops already have effected a juncture, and are attacking the Austrians in the Carpathian foothills under the direction of the Russian General Letchitsky.

Preparations are also being made, it is stated in the Petit Parisian of Paris, for the junction of Russian and Roumanian corps on the Danube. The first contact will be established, it is believed, at Tulcea, near the mouth of the Danube, on Roumanian soil.

In the Transylvanian Alps the Roumanians are fighting on Austro-Hungarian soil, but owing to the nature of the ground and the fact that the main forces have not yet come into collision, no important result has yet been attained. The objectives of the Roumanian attacks are three strongly-fortified passes, Roberuthurm, Toerzburger and Toemoes, seizure of which would open the road to the important industrial cities of Kronstadt and Hermanstadt to the Roumanians.

Austria Admits Repulse.

The following official statement from Vienna was received to-night: "At all the passes of the 375-mile Roumanian mountain frontier, our frontier guards engaged the enemy with success. Only an extensive encircling movement of strong Roumanian forces forced our advanced guards to withdraw, as has had been planned to prepare positions in the rear."

A despatch from Geneva to-night, quoting reports from Vienna, states that Hungarian and Roumanian patrols fought an engagement on Sunday night along the Transylvanian frontier.

On Monday the Roumanians crossed the frontier at many places. It is officially stated that there are three big concentrations of Roumanians near the border.

Berlin states that according to word reaching there the Roumanians were defeated in their first skirmish with the Austro-Hungarians. They attempted to force a way through three of the Carpathian passes into Hungary.

On Sunday, it is stated, a Roumanian detachment had managed, before war was declared, to approach Rothenthurm Pass. It is through this gap that the railroad runs to Hermanstadt. The Austro-Hungarian border guards, in a rifle action, is said to have driven the Roumanians back.

Near Predeal a Roumanian force attacked Toemoes Pass, while another body endeavoured to force Toerzburger Pass. Their efforts met with no success.

West of Piatra, however, as the Eastern Carpathians, Roumanian forces operating from a strong concentration at Jassy, struck into Austrian territory.

Self interest is not a very high motive, but it is a very human thing to defer to—it is better than the inhuman motives that influence the Teuton mind and action Rumania has declared war on Austria because she sees that Austria will be—is practically—beaten; and if Austria is beaten, then Germany will be beaten. If Germany, with the powerful help of Austria, is steadily losing ground, her failure will be accelerated, with Austria eliminated— with her southern flank turned and unprotected; her back door thrown wide open to the inrush of the powerful allied forces operating in the southern theatre of war. We all know, a least, we all feel, that Germany will be beaten. It is, however, not unpleasant to have our feelings confirmed by the action of Rumania which not only gives it as her matured opinion that the allies will win but adds to the value of her opinion —shows the courage of her conviction —by throwing into the scale nearly a million well armed soldiers, and rob Germany of immense food supplies which she depended upon in large part to feed her people and her soldiers, to eke out her failing food supplies. It is the irony of fate that Germany recently got food supplies from Roumania and paid for them in war munitions that are now turned against the Kaiser—the latest example of the "engineer hoist with his own petard." When a man finds an antagonist in front slowly and surely getting the better of him, it is all up with him if he has his arms pinned from behind by another enemy. Germany's throat must be itching in dread of the strangle-hold that is preparing and imminent.

CANADA FOR THE CANADIANS.

No matter what government is in power in Canada, that government is open to criticism, that fails to be governed in governing Canada, by the patriotic policy, founded upon the patriotic motto—Canada for the Canadians; especially the policy of providing that Canada gets the full advantage of the exploitation of her resources, financial as well as national. We have an alien labour law aimed at preventing foreign labour competing with Canadian labour to the latter's disadvantage. It would seem that we should have some power to enforce the principle of this law against the government since the government has violated the principle of this law as well as the spirit of Canada for Canadians by awarding the three million government arsenal job at Lindsay to a foreign firm of contractors. An Ottawa despatch says that the work of constructing the new government arsenal at Lindsay has been awarded to Westinghouse, Church, Kerr and Company of San Francisco, with agencies in New York and Montreal. It is is true, as asserted, that not a single Canadian architect or contractor was asked or was able to secure any share of the work, in which it is said between three and four million dollars is involved, a great wrong has been done. It may be that the employment of Canadian labour will be stipulated. But that is not enough, when Canada is sacrificing so much in person and means; when we are paying huge taxes, direct and indirect; when the Finance Minister is urging the people to economize and invest in the next war loan, the huge profits of the building the arsenal at Lindsay should not go to foreigners to be taken out of the country, but kept in the country for the benefit of the people who pay the shot. It is to be hoped the government will be able to satisfactorily justify the giving of a Canadian Government contract to foreigners; but it will take mighty strong reasons to justify such an action. It is a bad enough thing to have Canadian nickel refined in New Jersey, where we see a turn-over of 37 million, got from Canadian resources, and all we got for it is the nominal tax of $40,000 a year, when we should have the full benefit. Canada for Canadians is the motto both people and government should live up to.

ALASKA DOGS ARE DOING THEIR BIT

Huskies Play Important Part In War—Being Better Than Horses at Front

LONDON, Aug. 30.—Mr. H. Warner Allen the representative of the British press with the French army, writes from the Vosges:—

"Last year, when the question of transport through the mountain snow had become a matter of urgent importance, the French authorities had the idea of using dog drawn sleighs for carrying supplies. As the result of their inquiries several hundred trained dogs from Alaska, Northwestern Canada and Labrador were brought over by a French lieutenant who had spent fourteen years in Alaska. From the beginning of the year to April 21, with a short interval, the snow in the neighborhood of the Schulcht Pass was deep enough for the dogs to be able to draw heavy loads over almost inaccessible country and to supplement to a valuable extent the wheeled transport.

"But with the end of the snow their utility has not ceased. They are now being harnessed to small two-foot gauge light railways, which run everywhere behind the front. Eleven dogs, with a couple of men, can carry a ton up some of the most precipitous slopes in the mountains and I was assured that two teams of seven dogs each could do the work of five horses in this difficult country, with a very great economy of men.

"The dogs were several hundred strong when they reached France, but their number has now considerably increased. There is a plentiful supply of pups of all ages and sizes, which play about happily on the mountain slopes, well within reach of the German guns. Three breeds are in service—the Alaskan, the Labrador, and the Canadian —and the best of these is the Alaskan. His courage never fails, and he will work until he drops, though he is perhaps the weakest of them. They the all shaggy dogs, with prick ears and bushy tails, their color ranging from black to white, between grays and browns. Their chest development, so necessary for hauling, is remarkable. Their keep costs the state but little. They are mainly fed on rice, horse flesh (of which there is abundance), and waste military biscuits, and this fare appears to suit them admirably, as they are always in splendid condition, and disease is practically unknown.

"A team of seven dogs was harnessed to a makeshift truck formed of ammunition cases to take us along one of the two-foot gauge railways. It happened to be the hour of the evening meal, and the smell of the soup excited the dogs considerably. Only the leader remained superior to all such temptations and sat solemnly in his harness. As soon as they were hitched to the truck the whole team gave tongue and began to pull with obvious delight. The truck was provided with an effective brake of a most elementary nature, working like a railway signal lever and the team was brought up short to the order. The dogs squatted down placidly on their haunches and waited events, under the watchful eye of their leader, who was now in his element.

After we had fitted ourselves in as best we could, the French officer took command of the team, and, releasing the brake, started us off with a hissing sound and a shout of "All right" which produced an instant effect on the dogs. They soon got up speed, and the bumps were jolting along in a few minutes with seven bushy tails waving vigorously in front of us.

GERMANY'S DEAD PORT.

Bremen Said to be Like a Vast Graveyard of Ships.

That home of the North German Lloyd Shipping Company, Bremen, is, according to a correspondent of the Russkoe Slovo, "a vast graveyard of ships." The correspondent is a neutral who has just returned to Moscow from a business trip through Germany and Austria. He also makes note of the fact the women are now prohibited from acting in the German music halls, "whither no one goes to amuse himself, but solely to have alcoholic refreshments.

"I have never seen such drunkenness as I saw during my short stay in Bremen. In peace time, too, one might meet in Germany's people who were tipsy, or sometimes noisy, but never dead drunk. Now I saw some officers of high rank making their appearance in public dead drunk. The streets in the evenings are full of drunken people.

"It is interesting to note that French wines have a great sale in Germany. Where do they get them from in such quantities? Perhaps this is the spoil taken from Beligum and the occupied French provinces."

The war bread seems humanly uneatable, but perhaps it is good for horses. It smells like hay or grass. It is being baked most abominably, perhaps not without a purpose.

The neutral visitor declares that it is a mystery where Germany gets the money which she is spending most lavishly for alleviating the results of the war. She has, for instance, bought half the available horses and enormous quantities of coffee, cocoa, rice, groats, leather, and machinery in Holland, and these will remain there until it is possible to deliver them in Germany. After the war the Germans will have enough horses and goods to go on with, while the neutral countries will lack both.

The neutral visitor adds that Holland is inundated with Germans, and that spies are numberless. Englishmen are especially spied after.

The War's Effect Upon Industries And Relations of Capital and Labour

In the English-speaking world, effort has been directed in recent years to bring into closer cooperation for mutual benefit the two essential elemens of industry, capital and labour. In the United States, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Henry Ford, and many others less in public eye, but wielding potential influence, have been endeavouring to bring about a better relationship, on the basis of the principle that capital and labour are essential to each other, that there must be free cooperation as much in the interests of one as the other. In the Old Country, there was before the war a growing unrest on the part of the workers, and there, the state assumed much of the responsibility in attempts to bring about better conditions.

But in England, the war has caused greater progress to be made in the direction aimed at than was secured in years of effort in antebellum days or would have been secured for several more years had there been no war. It is the supreme necessity of the war that has brought about this improvement. There has been the very greatest demonstration possible of the necessity for capital and labour to work together in mutual understanding, each realizing that one cannot get along without the other and that, therefore, one must help the other.

In a foreward to a book dealing with the welfare work in the munition factories of the Old Country, Lloyd George, former minister of munitions, tells of the progress made in this direction. It was Lloyd George who, before the war, interested himself on behalf of the government in trying to bring about better conditions for the workers. The war has done more than he had succeeded in accomplishing. British industry has been revolutionized, and the better conditions will not pass with the return of peace, but are present to stay.

None of the changes which the war has brought, Lloyd George declares, are "more likely to have lasting effect than the revolution in the structure of British industry." Not only have manufacturing firms seen the necessity for improved conditions themselves, but "for the first time in our history many firms have submitted to a general control by the state; many workers have desisted from the endeavour to regulate supply and restrict the output of labour." The state, he says, "assumes new responsibilities; fresh needs and opportunities arise; industrial conditions are in solution."

The last remark, "industrial conditions are in solution," is most significant. The old barriers have been melted down, the old obstacles to better conditions have disappeared. "Conditions are in solution" now and may be moulded into proper lines.

Of course, one of the great changes has been the giving of more attention to the welfare of the workers. Not only is the human element of industry being called upon to work harder to the end that Germany may be defeated and the liberties of Europe preserved, but hundreds of thousands of men and women unaccustomed to manual labour have gone to the factories and are working there. It is essential that the conditions under which these people work and live and have their recreation shall be such as to enable them to maintain their health and strength. On the other side, the workers are giving of their best because of the need of the nation and of civilization.

Lloyd George makes apt reference to the fact that it is in the making of implements of death and destruction that these great humane changes have been effected. "It is a strange irony, but no small compensation, that the making of weapons of destruction should afford the occasion to humanize industry," he says. "Yet such is the case. Old prejudices have vanished, new ideas are abroad; employers and workers, the public and the state, are all favourable to new methods." The opportunity, he declares, afforded by the fact that industrial conditions have been placed in solution, must not be allowed to pass. It is an opportunity to "build a bridge of sympathy and understanding between employer and employed," for the benefit of both and of mankind at large.—Ottawa Free Press.

OWNERSHIP OF LAND

Puts a man upon a business and financial footing which nothing else can do. Such being the case, should not every wage earner be ambitious enough to buy one or more of my Western Ave. lots near May's school and all south end factories, right in the way of the city's most rapid growth; certain to increase in value as the city grows south and west, which all know it is doing. My lots are priced under value, $150 to $225 for inside lots, average size 30 x 125 ft. Perfect lots and perfect title. No taxes this year and no interest until March, 1917. Terms, $10 down and $5 monthly, with assistance to build when $100 is paid. This makes it easy for a man to own his home. When the war is over, thousands will come here, and rents will be very high. A wise man will accept my offer and do so now.

Big discount for all cash paid.

The Right Time.

The right time to reach the members of the family is when they are at home, and the right way to reach them is through the advertising columns of the paper that goes into the homes. There are other methods of advertising that enjoy a certain transitory popularity, because they are new or novel, but the oldest, wisest and most successful advertisers tie their faith to the home newspaper. When people are away from their homes, there are a thousand things to divert their attention, but an advertisement read in the quiet of the family circle will be read and remembered.

DIVER TELLS OF LIFE ON OCEAN FLOOR

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 28.—One great advantage of truth over fiction is that truth is eternally novel, while fiction follows conventional paths. Moving from the general to the particular, what writer of deep-sea romance would locate a master diver in a furniture store. That is where Seattle's veteran diver, Captain A. O. Benjamin, 73 years old, and looking 43, spends his working days, says Pittsburg Press.

Thirty-seven years ago Captain Benjamin came to Seattle, and with scant loss of time established himself as a diver and wrecker. He quit diving back in 1906, went to Alaska, made and lost a fortune and lives again in Seattle.

He is surrounded in his work-shop-store by some fine old pieces of black walnut and mahogany furniture, four-poster beds, paint secretaries, tall pier glasses in black carved frames a colonial table top in inlay, the sword he captured from Lieutenant R. G. Redwood of the First Carolina Volunteers, the day before Lee's surrender at Appomattox Courthouse and the canvas cover to the table on which the articles of capitulation were signed on that famous occasion. In the midst of the collection of romantic objects none of which has the slightest reference to the sea or the business of diving, Captain Benjamin, master diver, restores old furniture while his three three sons carry on the family tradition, all being deep-sea divers.

If all men could reach 73 as sturdy as this one, old age would lose its terrors. A stocky built man, a little under medium height, Captain Benjamin has tousled brown hair, through which he runs his fingers in moments of thoughtfulness, and a short moustache, almost innocent of gray. His face is wrinkled and weatherbeaten, but he is not old.

Lifted Great Weights.

"I used to be a pretty strong lifter in my day," Captain Benjamin remarked modestly last week. "I've done 1220 pounds life on a weight-testing machine, but I guess 500 pounds would be my limit now and probably not more than 300 dead weight, because those weight-testing machines have springs in 'em and a man can fudge a little if he knows how to spring them."

One time Captain Benjamin's strength served him in very good stead. He was working under water, between two coal bunkers in Elliott Bay. As he moved along the bottom of the bay he passed a big cast-iron grating dropped from some steamship. The grating had dropped end first and stood upright in the mud, reaching above the diver's head.

Captain Benjamin gave no thought to this heavy iron object as he passed it, but a moment later he felt a tug upon the life line and the air hose he carried coiled on his arm. Looking back he saw that the grating had fallen flat across the lines.

The hose and line still slipped through the ooze beneath the grating, but there was no way to free them without lifting the iron mass. Captain Benjamin tried to lay out a little slack line to get room enough for a good purchase on the grate.

His tender on the scow at the surface was new at the work and kept the hose and signal line tightly stretched. As fast as the diver gained a little slack and stopped to lift, the tender pulled the slack from the line and cramped his position.

"Finally I got hold of a corner of the grating and lifted," said Captain Benjamin. "I couldn't budge it. The thing must heave weighed 600 or 700 pounds, and under water iron loses only a sixth of its dead weight. I straightened up pretty well out of breath and began to think serious. A thing like that does not look very cheerful under water when you're all alone and have to depend upon ourself. Thinks I, 'I can lift better'n that if I had to and, by George, I've got to do it.'

Actually Saw "Stars."

"So I bent my back again and I lifted with all the strength I had and more than I knew I had and all the experience in lifting that I had learned. Finally the grating moved and heaved it over. But by the time I did this there was the prettiest display of fireworks before my eyes, inside the helmet that I ever saw. If there'd been one ounce more lift that grating I could not have moved it."

Captain Benjamin did his first professional diving when he was a boy, but it was not deep-sea diving. A steamboat captain lost a pair of whiffletrees in Tonawanda creek, New York, and offered young Benjamin $5 if he could get them out. For answer the boy stripped off his clothes and sprang into the river as close to the spot where the whiffletrees had vanished as he could point himself.

There was about 30 feet depth of water and he struggled down and down as far as he could without finding bottom. When he could go no farther he turned to rise, despairing of the whiffletrees. As he turned his toe touched the treasure trove, standing upright in the mud.

He hooked his foot into the whiffletrees and rose, triumphant.

"In those days $5 was a fortune," he remarked with twinkling eye.

Captain Benjamin served four years in the Civil war with Company I, Eighty-first New York regiment. When he came to Seattle by way of Fremont, Neb., his profession was house-moving and building wrecking.

"The first time I really dived," said he, "was soon after I came to Seattle. I was raising a boiler that had been lost from a dock at the foot of Pike street. An English diver was working with me. He couldn't get my tackle hooked into the boiler, though I had made the hooks to his exact measure.

"Finally I said, 'Get out of that suit.' He got out and I got in. I went down and hooked my hooks into the boiler. Then I took a look around. This diver of mine was a great fellow to scatter tools. There were tools all over the bottom of the bay.

"I found a galvanized iron bucket lost off some steamer and commenced to fill it up with wrenches and hammers and pliers and various stuff this man had left around. The air tender above kept pulling three jerks on the signal line, meaning 'Come up,' and I kept answering with two pulls, 'I'm all right.' Finally he hauled me out in spite of myself.

"They grabbed the face plate and unscrewed it like mad. When they looked in their faces were actually white. I had been under an hour and a half.

"'Well whats wrong?' says I.

"'Sure you're all right?' said my diver. Of course, I was all right.

"'Weren't you scared?' said he.

"'Scared,' says I. 'What of?' Well he thought I was an woder, and that's how I started diving."

French Sergeant Finally Made Dutch Soil With Four Companions in Flight — Had Crossed Once Before

BUT HE WAS TRICKED BY GERMAN GUARDS INTO RETURNING OVER THE FRONTIER.

PARIS, June 5, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Sergeant Letor of the Two Hundredth and Twenty-eighth French infantry, taken prisoner at the battle of Guise during the retreat of the French army from Charleroi, has just given the details of his final escape from Germany, after two unsuccessful attempts, in one of which he had himself buried alive, and in the other was recaptured by a ruse after he had gotten into Dutch territory.

After describing how he and his comrades were taken to a prison in Germany, Letor says that he saw his first chance when sent with a detachment of French prisoners to clear a piece of woods. Most of the work was simply digging up stumps, and this suggested an idea. "I will throw myself into the excavation of one of the stumps, I said to my comrades, 'and when the sentinel's back is turned you will cover me with earth.

"The morning of April 9 I caught the sentinel off his guard blowing at the fire trying to make it burn while I was working beside a stump that had just been uprooted. I slipped into the hole face downward with a sack under my chin and a clump of ferns in front of my face to protect my mouth and serve as a sort of a breathing pad. A few seconds later I felt the cold earth falling upon my feet and legs. After the lower part of my body had been covered my comrades threw roots and branches over my head and shoulders to prevent me from suffocating.

"I remained there until 11.30 o'clock, the earth settling all the time and weighing heavier and heavier upon me. At 11:15 one of the German sentinels walked straight over the earth that covered me. That was the last I knew wantil I felt an atrocious burning sensation in one hand. I had lost consciousness after the sentinel had walked over me, with my left hand just sticking out of the hole, but it was impossible to support the sunlight, and I had to burrow again for a few moments.

"When I looked out again, my comrades were marching off to their barracks; my opportunity had come. I had to be quick, for 300 yards away the chief of the detachment of guards was counting the prisoners; in a few minutes my disappearance would be known, and the alarm given. I ran to a marsh on the other side of the road that passed along the wood; then, in order to put my pursuers off the scent, I ran otward a mine in the direction opposite to that I was obliged finally to take. I shared myself to peasants traveling near the mine, then turning into a wood where I was concealed from view I took the opposite direction and made for Holland, with the aid of a little pocket compass.

"Passing along beside a farm I saw some of my comrades who were employed there, and observed that there was general agitation from which I knew that the alarm had been given. I then went toward the River Lippe, crossed the bridge and went straight through Altern, concealing my visage from many persons I met by continually blowing my nose with my handkerchief. Speed was my principal preoccupation, silence the second. I took off my shoes and made thirty miles through the woods barefooted over briers and branches that brought the blood after the first mile or two. I approached Borken near the Dutch frontier, the next morning at 5 o'clock, and as I neared the village I put my shoes on again and resolutely took the high road.

"The first man I met in crossing the village of Borken was a gendarme who simply gazed at me. A few hundred yards from the frontier, I met a boy on a bicycle, who inspired me with more caution than any person I had met. I ran into a little wood, and concealed myself for a half hour. When I came out another bicyclist came up behind me, jumped to the ground, and demanded 'your papers'. 'I am a Hollander' I replied. 'I have no papers'. A second bicyclist and a police dog followed, with people searching from all sides, and I was soon on the way back to the camp of Sennelager.

"Once returned to Sennelager, my first idea was to prepare a new plan of escape together with Corporal Brousset. Besides getting out of the barracks, which was easy, we had this time to get over lines of barbed-wire two and a half yards in height in three lines, the second of which had a sort of metallic trellis in the middle through which passed an electric current of 10,000 volts. Brousset went ahead on this occasion. We crept as closely to the ground as we could until we got to the barbed wire. Brousset cut the first line, and we were approaching the electrified obstacle. Nippers were no use here, but the trellis was fixed upon posts, leaving about a foot of space underneath. Brousset went first, and I watched him breathlessly until he drew his foot safely from under the wire on the other side. Then I followed, still holding my breath, until I also had gone under the dangerous barrier.

"The most difficult work had not been done; on the other side of the three barbed wire lines were the silhouettes of two sentinels scarcely twenty yards away. When we got through the barbed wire, we were in plain view of them and had nothing to do but make a spurt for a clump of bushes nearby. We succeeded in reaching them without being observed. The sentinels went away, and we took up our journey toward the frontier. Three peasants chased us in the morning for an hour, until we finally threw them off our tracks in a wood.

"Near Belefeld two hunters set their dogs upon us, for this eventuality we had provided ourselves with pepper, which proved effective. We avoided the village of Rheims by following a route of the woods and marshes, and crossed Metelen at midnight; then more marshes that seemed interminable. It took us two nights to get over them, sleeping in the day time among the bulrushes and eating meagerly of the little provision that we had calculated might keep us alive ten days.

"After nine days of privation and exhaustion we arrived at Ahams toward midnight, close to the frontier town of Breden. Again liberty was within a few hundred yards of us when we had the misfortune to run straight into a German frontier Custom House. In our flight I stumbled over a stone at the very instant a customs officer fired at my back. I lay motionless, and the officer, thinking I had been hit, joined his comrades in the pursuit of Brousset. As soon as the officers had disappeared I got up and went to hide in bushes nearby. At that moment I was on Dutch territory, but, fortunately, I did not suspect it. I thought I was safe enough until a half hour later I heard the steps of a patrol, then the rays of a strong electric lamp searched the bushes. The Germans, remembering where I had fallen, had come back to look for me. Suddenly the rays of the electric lamp struck me full in the face and almost blinded me.

'Surrender or we'll fire on you,' cried one of the subaltern officers. I rose and advanced four yards between my bush and the patrol when the Germans began to snicker. 'It is unfortunate for you, but you have just come out of Holland.' The only thing that consoled me was that Brousset had not been taken. He was now in safety.

"Again returned to the camp at Sennelager, and again brought before the court-martial, I was sentenced to twenty days of close confinement in an unlighted cell, and was afterwards sent to the prison of Recklinghausen, where the Germans thought I would find no further opportunity to escape. There I met Adjutant Bienvenu of the 119th Infantry, Major Durupt de Balzins and two civilians prisoners, Messrs. Van Calster and Yves Laguen. We all decided to attempt an escape at the first opportunity, and we fixed Christmas as the most favorable time. We succeeded in breaking out of the barracks from the second-floor cell occupied by Van Calster and with the aid of a barrel got over the courtyard wall, not unperceived, however, for immediately we were outside there came the cry, 'Halt we go!' Some boys had seen us and given the alarm.

"In an instant all the sentinels were at our heels. At top speed we went through the street, a garden, and another street, and how we got over the icy soil so much better than our pursuers I am unable to explain. After we had distanced the sentinels a score of boys gave us a chase, but we soon left them in the rear and at nightfall had rid ourselves of all pursuers and had the entire night to put distance between them and ourselves.

"It was 3 o'clock in the morning of Dec. 24 that we arrived at a barrier of innumerable lines of barbed wire that proved to us that we were on the Dutch frontier. We left most of our trousers among those wires, but we were finally safe. A farmer near the frontier took us in, freshened up the fire in our honor, opened the cupboards, and gave us good cheer and on Christmas Eve we had the joy of listening to 'The Marseillaise' played by a musical society of the little Holland post of Winterswijk in our honour.

BEER SIEZED IN TRANSIT TO CHEMONG RESTORED TO OWNERS

Magistrate Dumble Dismisses Action Entered by Inspector Stewart But Commends Him for His Vigilance.

Although he had announced that he would give judgment in the Bridgenorth beer seizure case on September 6th, Magistrate Dumble stated this morning that in reviewing the evidence and the Act, last nigh,t the issue was so patent he had decided to immediately dispose of it. Accordingly, in police court this morning, he dismissed the case, and ordered the five dozen 'Pilsener pints' of lager restored to their respective owners.

At yesterday's hearing it was adduced that Inspector Stewart had confiscated the five cases of O'Keefe's in the C. P. R. station in transit to Bridgenorth. Two of them were purchased by a resident of the Village, and the remaining three cases had been ordered to replenish the liquid stock in the buffets of two Chemong cottagers.

Mr. Stewart was well warranted in seizing the liquor, as it looked as if it was intended for sale in a dry district. Sec. 34, sub-sec. 8 of the Ontario Liquor License Act is as follows: "If the Justice finds that the claim of any person to be the owner of the liquor is established, and that it does not appear that it was intended to sell or keep such liquor for sale in contravention of this Act he shall dismiss the complaint and order that such liquor be restored to the owner."

The evidence given and the circumstances of the case, and the absence of anything that would throw doubt upon the veracity of the witnesses leave upon my mind the conclusion that I would not be warranted in making a conviction herein. It must be borne in mind that a man or a number of men may, together, send to any dealer out of the dry district, and procure lager beer or other liquor for their own use though no one in that dry district may lawfully sell it to them.

I dismiss this charge and direct that the five cases of Pilsener lager beer be delivered up to the several owners.

I commend Mr. Stewart for his vigilance in seizing the liquor, which certainly did look as if was bought in violation of the law. I would, however, suggest that persons requiring liquor should individually order their liquor from the persons entitled to sell, and thus save other people from the chances of prosecution.

"Black-Hand" Police Believe Responsible For Latest Murder

Cold-Blooded Crime Committed When Guiseppe D'Amore Was Shot Through the Through the Heart in a Saloon, in Montreal—Many People on the Streets and Great Crowd Soon Collected and Tied up the Traffic—Gemnaro Pezza Under Arrest and Two Others Held as Witnesses

MONTREAL, Aug. 30.—Cold blooded murder was committed at the White Palace Bar, 885 St. Lawrence boulevard, when Guiseppe D'Amore, an Italian and a stranger to this city previous to May 10th of this year, was shot through the heart by a fellow countryman while a party of four were drinking at the bar. Gemnaro Pezzo, twenty-five years of age, of 367 St. Dominique street, alleged to have been one of the four, ran from the saloon following the shooting and was placed under arrest after a short chase on St. Lawrence boulevard. He was identified by the detectives and police later as well known to them from previous surveillance and arrest. "Tony" Frank and Frank Palicino, the latter from Bridgeport, Conn., are being held as material witnesses for the coroner's inquest.

D'Amore, according to the police and who have so far no motive for the crime, was a victim of Black Hand. The detectives claim that the victim had nothing in common with his companions at the bar on that evening. Witnesses to the shooting have informed the authorities that there was no trouble between the four men, as they stood at the bar. Several of these witnesses have described the shooting to the police and have given a description of the man whom they saw standing over the body of D'Amore with a smoking revolver in his hand.

Great Crowd Collected.

The shooting took place at 7.45 last evening and caused thousands of pedestrians to collect in that vicinity. The heart of the "Gay white way," was choked by a mob of several thousand persons. Street car traffic was blocked at the corner of St. Catharine and the "Main," while entrance to the saloon was impossible, the police having a hard time to force their way through the dense mob.

The murder took place without a moment's warning to the patrons of the bar. The firing of a .38 calibre revolver was followed by a fall to the floor and a hurried exit to the street of the man who fired the fatal shot. Constable Beausejour on crossing duty, saw the crowd at the saloon and with Constable Laflamme started to investigate.

About that time a man was seen running from the bar and Beausejour took up the trail, which ended two hundred yards away, with the constable holding on to Pezza, whom he declared he never lost sight of from his first appearance on the street. The Italian was taken to the White Palace Bar, where the body of the murdered man still lay awaiting removal to the morgue.

Died Almost Instantly.

Constable Laflamme had hurried to the saloon, where he found D'Amore lying at the foot of the rail unconscious. Several men who remained, were ordered not to move from the place while the constable took the precaution to have the doors locked. This done he telephoned for reinforcements and for an ambulance from the General Hospital.

The aim of the murderer was true, aided by a short range fire. The victim of the bullet lived but a short time and was pronounced beyond the aid of the doctors as soon as the ambulance arrived.

Detectives Tierney and Forget were detailed on the case and recognized at once the suspected man. Both sleuths had dealings with the man Pezza, whose record is in the hands of Bertilion expert Eugene Laflamme. "Tony" Frank has been a familiar figure at the Court House and the City Hall Annex for many years. His presence as these places is as regular as clock work. Palacino is a friend of Frank's and claims to be an American. They refused to make any statement when arrested and will have to be held pending the inquest this morning.

The name of the dead man was revealed by a passport found in his pocket. He was born in Naples in 1887. His passport showed that he had visited New York via Bordeaux, from Naples in 1901, and that he had again came to America in May of the present year. Outside of these facts nothing is known about him, and no motive could be found for the shooting.

SERVING AND PLEASING, ART OF BUSINESS

Bargain That is Bad for the Buyer is Not Good for the Seller

By B. C. FORBES.

What is business?

"To sell a man or a woman something he or she doesn't want—that's business. Likewise it's diplomacy."

That was the definition given last Sunday by a prominent newspaper.

That is not the spirit of modern business.

To foist on people things they did not want or need used to be considered smart, clever business.

Modern business is the art of serving and satisfying.

To succeed a firm must satisfy.

Thus are old customers retained and new customers attracted.

The bargain that is bad for the buyer is not good for the seller—unless he is a fly-by-night citizen.

Shyster methods may make a business man rich, but they will not keep him rich.

BASED ON REPUTATION.

The late J. P. Morgan declared that credit was based on character. And that was true in a sense. Business—successful business—to-day is based on reputation, which is only another name for character.

Business implies doing things, not people.

Rob your patron and you rob yourself more than you hurt him.

The greatest business men in America to-day regard all corporations as quasi-public service.

"The public are your masters and ours. To succeed, you must serve the public satisfactorily." That is the doctrine business leaders impress upon their subordinates.

Usefulness is the price of existence. That truth applies to business as to men and other living things.

Whatever ceases to serve is doomed.

Advertising, the torch that blazons the business path, no longer seeks to mislead, but to lead.

Honest business calls for honest advertising.

TO SERVE THE PUBLIC.

Modern advertising seeks to aid, guide and serve the public since thus an thus only, can it serve the advertiser.

Who are America's most successful merchants to-day?

Men or firms of shady reputation, given to systematic cheating, lying and other dishonesties?

No, not these.

Our Marshall Fields, our Wanamakers, our Macys, our Tiffanys, our Altmans—these are names synonymous with success, probity and aboveboard dealings.

"We are not in business for our health," is a remark you sometimes hear.

It is true—though not in the sense intended.

To be successful you have to be in business for the "health" of other people. If you don't serve them in some way, if you don't make yourself or your wares useful to them, they will not serve you.

Those who build up successful businesses do so by realizing and acting on the principle that they must do things for the "health"—that is the well-being—of others.

PAY FOR BEING SERVED.

You and I pay our money for being served in some way, for being catered to, for having our wants supplied, or our fancies pleased.

We patronize those who serve us, and please us best.

It is the business of business to succeed in doing that.

Under twentieth century conditions—with large scale organizations, it is being found expedient to please not only those served, but the workers who aid in doing the serving.

You are to witness the extraordinary extension of profit sharing with employees and other plans for encouraging and rewarding good work.

Business men thus subscribe to the principles here enunciated—that business is the art of serving and satisfying.

Business is rising to a higher plane. Tricks and tactics designed to fool the public are gradually being discarded by responsible people.

PUBLICITY AIDS HONESTY.

Publicity aids honesty and annihilates dishonesty.

As publicity spreads, honest business will thive and dishonest business shrivel.

Business founded on the principle of serving and satisfying has nothing to hide, nothing to fear.

Corporations tried to drive out all sentiment from business. They acted on the maxim that "Business is business." And they defined business as something cruel, heartless, relentless.

And now these same corporations are moving heaven and earth to restore sentiment in their business, to inculcate and cultivate the loyalty of their employees and to win over public sentiment.

They want to be recognised as engaged in serving and satisfying.

Which, as was said at the start, is the aim and end of enlightened modern business.

Avocado salad is made of the chilled avocados pared and halved, then filled with French dressing, the edges being garnished with slices of stuffed olives.

CAR SHOOTS OVER AN EMBANKMENT

OTTAWA, Aug. 29.—Myer Dover, 23 York street, escaped with a bruised leg on Saturday night, when he ran over an embankment in an automobile at Rockcliffe, and crashed into a tree. The car turned a somersault, and Dover was pinned under the car until recently by a park watchman, who was near at the time of the accident, which occurred about 9.30 o'clock.

He was able to make his way home unassisted, and left the car, which was badly smashed in the park.

About midnight, however, the automobile took fire, and a squad from No. 6 fire station was called out to extinguish it. As Dover shut off the gasoline before he left the car at 9.30, it is not known how it took fire at midnight. The car belonged to young Dover's father and was almost completely destroyed.

Circus Man Bagged While Looting a Car

ITALIAN RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION MEN CATCH HIM IN THE ACT.

Galt, August 30.—William Venders, a former employee of the La Tena circus, and who gives his home at Altonia, Penn., was arrested on Saturday evening in a boarding car at the C.P.R. depot, in which he was caught stealing. The occupants of the car, Italians, were down town purchasing and Venders was making a regular clean up.

He had a grip full of clothing, was wearing stolen overalls and shirt, had an overcoat, nine tins of smoking tobacco, a razor strop, knife and keys. He pleaded guilty to stealing the tobacco, strop, knife and keys, and was remanded for a week so that his record can be looked up.

Death of Windsor Nurse Subject of Inquiry

DETROIT PHYSICIAN REPORTS CASE—EXPIRES IN DOCTOR'S OFFICE.

Detroit, August 30.—A searching investigation will be made into the causes leading to the death of Miss Reta Chesterfield, 25 years old, a nurse, who died in the office of a Gratiot avenue physician on Sunday, while she was under an anaesthetic.

Dr. Richard Leiman, the physician, notified the prosecuting attorney, and the attorney's office immediately, and an autopsy has been ordered but up to this evening has not been performed.

Miss Chesterfield was well known in Windsor, where she trained at the Hotel Dieu up to last fall, when she graduated.

According to the story of the physician, Miss Chesterfield had attempted unsuccessfully to perform an operation upon herself, and had come to Dr. Leiman for further treatment.

AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE

Large House Greeted Florence Johnston and Her Company Last Evening—To-night's Performance

All the inside details of a police frame up and the manner in which ex-convicts are hounded by the police in the larger cities, was revealed in the play, "Within the Law," which was given last evening at the Grand Opera House, with Florence Johnstone, the eminent English actress, playing the leading role. A large audience greeted the second performance of this company, which is billed here for the remainder of the week. The play that was presented last evening tells a big story and is full of surprises and crucial situations. It was handled by a well balanced company, whose work was punctuated with frequent applause on the part of the audience. Florence Johnstone lived up to her advance notices. Her work was excellent and thoroughly in keeping with the demands of the piece. She played the part of 'Mary Turner.' The work of Wilson D. Stedman as "Richard Gilder, Sr.," was equally good, while Thomas Lightfoot was seen to advantage as "Richard Gilder, Jr." The remaining parts were well looked after. The company will present to-night, "Bought and Paid For."

Editor Examiner.

Dear Sir.—Could you or any of the readers tell me the origin or derivation of the word "Ansac," as applied to the troops from the Antipodes. Some say it is an aboriginal word; others, that it is a compound or combination of the initial letters of the words A-ustralian, N-ew Z-ealand A-rmy C-orps. I should be glad to have the question of the geneology of the word that cropped up first in connection with the disastrous, but glorious, Dardanelles campaign.

Yours truly,
CURIOSITY.

Note.—Will some of the Examiner's readers satisfy "Curiosity's" curiosity?

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—The South End residents turned out in a goodly number to listen to the Band concert in the King Edward Park, given by the Salvation Army; on Tuesday evening, the music being greatly appreciated. The songsters of the Salvation Army rendered a couple of vocal turns which came in for well-earned applause. Great credit is due to those who have control of this section, and we of the South End hope to hear more of them in the future. The only things lacking were the men in blue to round up some of the young fellows who were rounding up some quiet young ladies, also a few seats would be a welcome innovation for the elderly people, as quite a number were present. With the introduction of the last two named necessities I think the South End concerts will be on a par with the ones in Victoria Park.

RAID DANCING HALLS FOR BRITISH SHIRKERS

London, Eng., August 30.—The police are now getting busy throughout the country rounding up would be evaders of the military service act. Over a score of men appeared in the Bow Street Court to-day as the result of a raid on a dancing hall on Saturday night, and at provincial holiday resorts like Llandundo, Blackpool, the local authorities are subjecting all men of military age to investigation, stopping them in the streets, and tackling them at places of amusement. If the men do not possess papers showing the right to exemption from military service, the police proceed against them.

Northern holiday resorts are just now crowded, for it is the period of the annual 'wakes' in the Lancashire industrial towns. Oldham, the great cotton manufacturing centre, began its wakes on Saturday. A local paper says:

"The war has held no greater surprise than the fact that it has made little outward change in the lives of the mass of the people remaining at home. Social habits and customs have not been effaced. Anybody who visits the Victoria Station in Manchester on Lancashire 'wakes' will learn that at Lancashire 'wakes' wil learn that at least the custom of taking an annual holiday is still running its vigorous course. The exceptions are the munition workers."

CAPTIVES ARE HUNGRY

Russian Prisoners in Germany Often Reduced to Searching Garbage.

BOSTON, Aug. 30.—Russian war prisoners in German detention camps are suffering from hunger, according to a communication from C. Oberoutcheff, secretary of the Central Committee organized in Switzerland for the relief of Russian captives.

The prisoners are given coffee, without milk or sugar, in the mornings, and 200 grams of potato bread to last them all day. A small quantity of soup, with sometimes a few vegetables, is served at noon, and occasionally a small piece of meat. Oberoutcheff says some of the captives often are so hungry that they search the garbage.

A SOLDIER'S BATTLE DREAM

BY CANADIAN OVERSEAS

"You have been dreaming", said the night nurse gently. "Just a bad dream. Try to forget it". The soldier who had come from France that morning gazed at the nurse with eyes full of doubt. He seemed scarcely to hear her. When the sunlight makes patterns on the ward floor through the broad chestnut leaves and when the murmur of bees in the flower beds in the garden is just audible, it is possible for a man to forget—no matter what his eyes have seen, his ears heard and his hands accomplished.

It is possible too, at noon when there is a bustle in the wards, and the dinners are trundled in on the hard barrows. In the dawning, they say it is possible and at night the darkness gathers shadows which grow and move up and down whispering.

The doctor called the soldiers dreams,—"battle dreams", but the shadows were not dispersed thereby, when the nurse moved away down the ward under the dim lamps, the shadows came again and the soldiers ears were strained to catch their whispering. They spoke to him at first in a small voice, because the presence of the nurse had frightened them. It was like the sound of guns he thought when they are far away and the wind blows strongly; yet he seemed to catch now and then a crisp laughter, like the tick-a-tick of a machine-gun, which showed that the shadows were drawing nearer.

The nurse switched out the lamps all but one which was heavily shaded. She went to the pantry to prepare food for those patients who had been ordered it at short intervals. So the gloom and silence of the ward was deepened and the wounded man could see quite distinctly the strange country in which he found himself. He was sailing on a great river and the shadows were gathered on one of the banks. The banks were very high and he thought they resembled the sides of his trenches out in Flanders. On the mainland in front of the trench, though there were flowers growing—poppies and yellow cornflowers, the shadows did not come to the bank so he could see them well. But he heard the sound they made, their whispering and their strange day laughter. Right in the prow of the boat before him was another shadow, all bent like a witch—hag and huddled. The shadows were whispering together and the sound was heavy like the sound of great birds which pass in the night. He was a country man from the north and knew the sound—it was the wings of wild geese, which go northward in the spring time. Then there was a sucking sound made by the river under it overhanging banks. The shadows moved like the ripe grain in a field when the wind plays with it; but he could hear that they were whispering and laughing while they moved.

The grinding of the taxicab gears on the hill outside of the hospital roused the wounded man and he rose uneasily from one side to another, he heard the driver push the liner and the grinding sound became a dull metallic buzz, which caused him to duck his head. He raised his head again to see if the shell had worked havoc among the shadows. They were whispering together whispering like snakes. He could hear the snapping of the jaws, like the tick-a-tack of the machine guns in the early morning when they are licking their lips.

So he laughed and the laughter brought the nurse back again to his side, and the cool fingers on his brow drove the shadows far away. But again when she left him they came, and their whispers woke the hag-spirit which had sailed with him on the river so that she laughed shrilly as men laugh sometimes in the heat of battle. The laughter of the hag-spirit went down again into the heart of the soldier swifter than an ill-desire, till his body grew cold with it, and he trembled greatly while sweat came on his brows.

The laughter of the hag-spirit rose in a fierce crescendo and the soldier knew he had heard that sound in his trenches at dawn when they shelled the enemy's lines before the attack The hag-spirit gathered herself up and stood out-stretched against the sullen sheen of the river.

Then the nurse moving from bed to bed up the ward, saw the soldier start upright and caught the gleaming of his eyes.

He shouted and his words were strange words, for he would follow the hag-spirit, stretched like a cross of war, to the place of the shadows which mocked him in their fullness of laughter and in his spirit, he called on the morning that it should not be darkened, and on the young stars for light, and he came leaping in red fields and there was great heat. He could feel the breath of those who whispered, upon his cheeks and they had eyes wich shone in the darkness.

The night nurse took his clenched hands and laid him back gently on his bed. She smoothed his brow with her fingers, marvelling at the price that must be paid for a man's honor. "You have been dreaming" she said again, "Just a bad dream, try to forget it."

But how shall the soldier forget who has heard the voice of the morning when te sun-rise is made dark by clouded smoke? He may forget when the sun-light makes patterns through the chestnut leaves on the ward floor and the humming oft he bees comes in across the flower beds, or at high noon when they bring the dinners from the lifts. In the dawn he cannot forget, and at night the darkness gathers shadows which go up and down whispering.—J.E.H. (Canadian Overseas).

Council Gets $97.18 Rate On Bond Issue of $196,704.60 By Tender

The Finance committee of the City Council last night recommended the acceptance of the Canada Bond Company's tendered rate of $97.18 for a new debenture issue aggregating $196,704.60. This will produce $191,159.78, the rate being approximately $5.35.

Outfall sewer—$73,000; 30 yrs. 5 p.c.
Paving—93,704; 10 yrs. 5 p.c.
Pat. Fund—$20,000; 10 yrs. 6 p.c.
Bonner-Worth—$3,300; 20 yrs. 5 1-2 p.c.
Pub. School—$5,500; 30 yrs. 5 p.c.
Coll. Inst.—$1,200; 30 yrs. 5 p.c.

Mr. Wallace Wood, representing Ameius Jarvis, suggested that unless a very favourable tender were received it might be well to withhold these debentures until the new proposed Canadian war loan of $100,000,000 had been absorbed.

Ald. Stratton, City Clerk Armstrong and City Treasurer Adams agreed that the future of the money market was quite uncertain, and it remained for the committee to decide upon the present oer or gamble on the condition of the market in January. Ald. Evans, Saunders and McIntyre were satisfied to follow the bond-wise trio. The Canadian Bond Company's offer was thereupon accepted.

THE DEATH OF MRS. T. J. MANSELL

Was the Wife of the Late Rev T. J. Mansell, Former Pastor of Charlotte Street Church

Mr. W. J. Mansell of Brockville has received word of the death at Atlantic City, of his sister-in-law, Mrs. (Rev.) T. J. Mansell, who had resided latterly at Cincinnati, Ohio. It is thought that death was sudden as no previous word had been received of her illness. Mrs. Mansell was born at Moulinette, in the County of Stormont, about fifty-five years ago. She was Miss Jessie Ault and a member of a pioneer family of that place. She was married several years ago to the late Rev. T. J. Mansell. The latter died three years ago while pastor of what is now known as Trinity Methodist Church of this city. In 1901 Mrs. Mansell went to Brockville, and resided for four years during which time her husband was pastor of Wall Street Church. She leaves two sons, Dow Mansell and Charles, of Cincinnati.

COAL ACCOUNT FOR CITY HALL EXCEEDED

Ald. Stratton called the attention of the Finance committee last night to the fact that the appropriation of $300 for coal for the city buildings had been overdrawn $160. He had held up payment of that additional amount until it was sanctioned by the Council. Ald. McIntyre moved, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that the committee recommend its payment.

Two Men Fell From a Scaffold

Serious Accident in Millbrook This Morning—One Man Sustained A Dislocated Shoulder and A Broken Arm

MILLBROOK, Aug. 30.—A bad accident took place here this morning when Mr. Walter Hetherington and Mr. J. J. Clark were seriously injured as a result of a fall from a scaffold on which they were working Mr. Hetherington's injuries consist of a dislocated soldier and a number of severe bruises. His arm is also broken above the elbow. Mr. Clark had one elbow broken and in addition received a severe shaking up. The two men were making repairs to Mr. Hetherington's stable when the scaffold upon which they were standing gave way, precipitating them to the ground.

Doctors H. A. Turner and McClennan of Millbrook were summoned and the injured men given medical attention. Mr. Clark will be unable to walk for some time.

CAMPER'S OUTFIT UPSET ON HORSE

There was a good deal of excitement near the corner of Murray and Aylmer streets last evening when an express rig driven by two small boys, and carrying a camper's outfit from Bulkhorn, turned completely over, almost burying the horee. When everything was cleared away it was found that the only damage that resulted was a broken shaft and damaged harness. The load turned over just where it was to be delivered and was a quick if not a safe way of disposing of it.

MOST OF EUROPE IS NOW AT WAR

Except for Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Spain, Switzerland and Greece, all Europe is at war.

Roumania has thrown in her lot with the Entente allies, having declared war against Austria-Hungary, and almost simultaneously Germany has announced that a state of war exists between Germany and Austria and Roumania.

Kitchener League Held Poverty Dance

A "poverty" dance at the Trent River pavilion on August 25th netted the Canadian Kitchener League $5.45. Prizes donated by Mrs. Ormiston for the most poverty looking appearance were won by Miss Vera Knox and Mr. C. Milller.

The dance was under the auspices of the Kitchener League, the president of which, Mrs. J. Knox, has a summer cottage at Trent Bridge.

THE SLACKER AT PETERBORO'

T'was an August day and the sun was hot,
When the slacker arose from his lonely cot;
And hied himself up to Hunter Street
Where the recruiting officer was marching his beat.
The officer spied the husky gent,
So over to his side he went;
He thought he'd found a soldier bold.
But Alas the slacker's feet were cold.
The officer looked him up and down,
Then he turned him round and round;
Says he, "Just step inside my lad",
We'll sign you up, you don't look bad.
We'll give you khaki clothes to wear,
The slacker then began to stare;
His eyes grew dim he felt so old,
The slacker's feet for sure were cold
The slacker stepped out on the walk.
He'd a lump in his throat so he couldn't talk;
His eye caught a glimpse of something bright,
T'was as black as the darkest hour of the night.
It shone so bright in the glittering sun,
It was worn one time by a murderous Hun;
The slacker was scared he lost his hold,
He ran like the devil 'cause his feet were cold.

Composed by J.A.H., Aug. 18, 1916

It is published for the information of all concerned, that the following Order and Regulation is made at the Government House, Ottawa, dated August 15th, 1916.:

"If any unauthorized person wears any naval or military uniform or any uniform so nearly resembling any uniform as to be calculated to deceive, or if any person without lawful authority supplies a naval or military uniform to any person not being a member of His Majesty's Forces or of the Canadian Militia, or if any person without authority or right wears a naval or military decoration or medal, he is guilty of an offence under the Criminal Code, and on summary conviction under the provisions of the Code is liable to a penalty not exceeding $50.00, and in default of payment of said penalty is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months."

Letters from Gunners Bob Thompson and Sid Armstrong indicate that they are likely at the front by this time. They went overseas in June with the Cobourg Heavy Battery and in their last letters stated that they expected to leave England within three weeks. They anticipated France as their destination although one of a flock of rumors selected Salonica for them. In spite of their work they have had a pleasant stay in the Old Country, including a trip to Dundee.

Mr. Peter Gettas and Mr. Bill Couros each of whom sent Cyril Giroux a package of two hundred cigarettes have received acknowledgment cards and expressions of thanks.

Driver Angus McDonald of the 2nd Divisional Ammunition Column, who was wounded in the shoulder about six weeks ago, has written his mother that he expected to go before a medical board which would decide whether he would return home or to the front. He has all but recovered from his injury and has passed his convalescent period in several hospitals.

POLICE COURT HELD IN LATE AFTERNOON

Ben Hobson's vagrant freedom was of short duration. Not long ago he completed a term at the Guelph detention farm and one day last week pleaded in police court that he would meander on to Madoc to live with his daughter. But, however willing the spirit, the flesh was weak, and Ben was given another six months' sojourn yesterday afternoon, when Magistrate Dumble opened court about six o'clock.

Joseph Hixton, a Fenelon Falls junk dealer, was charged with ill-treatment of a horse, which P. C. Blade testified had three raw sores on its shoulder. Dr. Fortune said he had examined the sores, which he said were likely caused by the harness. Hixton was discharged with a warning.

Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for him.

ACCIDENT AT C. P. R. STATION

LINDSAY, Aug. 30.—An accident took place at the C.P.R. station Monday, when the young son of Mr. Dave Crowley, Queen street was injured by having his foot caught under the wheel of the incoming Bobcaygeon train. No person seems to know just how the accident occurred, the young lad stating that he was knocked down between the train and the platform by the brass handle on the rear end of the coach. Bystanders state that the young lad was trying to catch a ride on the train as it pulled into the station. As a result he fell under the wheel and had his left foot caught in such a manner as to amputate the little toe and the end of the next one.

Dr. Collison was called and attended to the injured.

Mr. Crowley is employed at the C. P. R. freight sheds.

Big Shake-up in The German Staff

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Aug. 30.—Kaiser Wilhelm dismissed General Von Falkenhayn, Chief of the German General Staff, because Falkenhayn was opposed to sending troops to the Eastern front to meet a Roumanian invasion, The Hague correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph reported today. Field-Marshal Von Hindenburg urged that reinforcements be sent to Austria, and won the support of the Kaiser, with the result that troop trains are now rushing German soldiers to the defence of Transylvania. The change in the General Staff means the dismissal of thirty German Generals on both fronts, the most radical shake up in any army since the war began, the correspondent stated.

Bulgarians Sieze a Greek City

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Aug. 30.—The city of Drama, in North-Eastern Greece, has been seized by the Bulgarians, after a battle with the Greek garrison. The Bulgarians captured three forts and took prisoners the Greek garrison of 120 men. A number of Greek soldiers were killed in the fighting.

HOW GREAT BRITAIN REGULATED WAR PRICES COMMERCIAL ANARCHY

Policy of British Trade Control Was Inaugurated Simultaneously With the Outbreak of War—A Great Silent Work That Goes on Behind The Armies and Without Which Belligerent Nations Could Not Endure. Raising the Prices.

BY ROBERT DONALD
(Editor of The London Daily Chronicle.)

A nation does not go to war only with armed men. It organizes armies, but back of the armies there are many things to be done, things essential for the support of the forces in the field and for the protection of the people at home. We read a great deal about the clash of arms, the marching of multitudes of armed men, of the production of munitions —millions of shells and thousands of guns—of war in the air and under the sea, of all the martial and picturesque elements of fighting; but we hear little or nothing of the great silent work which goes on behind the armies and without which belligerent nations could not endure.

When the war began no country was so ill-prepared as England was for controlling the trades and businesses ancillary to war, for protecting the public against monopolies. And yet no country has done the big things which are of vital importance to the armies and the people so well. The strong hand of the State has intervened, unrammeled for the time being by legislative checks, and has asserted its power of possession, control, direction and regulation in every sphere of trade where public interest and the welfare of the army had to be safeguarded.

PLUNGED IN COMMERCIAL ANARCHY.

When the war took the world—except the Teutonic portion of it—by surprise on August 1st, 1914, Europe commercially was at once plunged into anarchy. The first shock demoralized all the exchanges and knocked the bottom out of credit; checks were not cashed, the sacred Bank of England "fiver" was rejected as a worthless scrap of paper. The possession of gold and goods was the only thing that counted. Goods were being cornered and prices were mounting unrestricted to prohibitive prices. England was in danger of a food famine. Promptly the Government set up a Food Control Committee to regulate prices and prevent cornering. It was only a temporary measure to meet an unprecedented emergency. Things settled down in a few weeks, except in one or two directions.

The first discovery made, which no control could help, was that the country was short of sugar. England imported 39,385,190 cwt. of sugar per annum, and two-thirds of the supply came from Germany and Hungary. The outbreak of the war caught the country between two seasons, when supplies from Cuba and elsewhere were stopping and when the German imports had not begun. The stock in the country was very short. Mr. McKenna, who was then Home Secretary and Chairman of the Food Supply Committee, promptly took action. A free hand was given to him by the Government. He called together all the sugar importers and refiners and selected two of them to buy for the British Government. They bought sugar — both raw and refined—all over the world. England invaded the Java market for the first time. Supplies were obtained from Italy, America, the Argentine and other South American countries, from Spain, and from every country which had sugar to sell. The total value of those first purchases was over $86,400,000—the biggest deal in sugar in the history of the trade.

RAISING THE PRICES.

It was not very long before the holders of sugar discovered that they were selling to the British Government and began to raise the prices. Purchasing then stopped, but the official buyers swooped down on the market later on, and since then there has been difficulty about the supply of sugar in England. Contracts for long periods were made. The only difficulty has been not the shortage of sugar but the shortage of freight to carry it to England.

The purchasing scheme was only preliminary. The Government set up a commission to control the whole sugar trade. The British Government is the only sugar importer. It sells at fixed prices to refiners, fixes the prices for wholesale houses and retailers. To every intermediary is allowed a fair profit, and the consumer is better protected than ever he was. When the war came the tax on sugar was about 45 cents per hundred weight. It was raised, for war purposes, to $2.24. In normal times the retailers would have added two cents per pound to cover the increase, but the Government had made so many favourable purchases that it only increased the price to the consumers by one cent per pound, and had left not only the duty for the revenue, but also a profit on the transaction. The duty on sugar is now $3.36 per hundredweight, and yet it is cheaper in England than in any other belligerent country, and in most neutral countries. The public has been protected and the Treasury enriched. This year's budget includes, as the revenue for the British Exchequer on account of sugar, the sum of $33,600,000. The British Government now supplies the French Government with sugar at cost price.

BEEF SUPPLY PROBLEM.

The problem of beef supply had to be tackled at the same time as that of sugar. England depends largely at all times on imported frozen or chilled meat. When the war crisis came, the public and the army had to be protected from the Beef Trusts. Early in the war it was evident that the State had to act. Mr. Runciman, the President of the Board of Trade, the department which looks after commercial and mercantile marine interests, intervened.

His first master stroke was to seize all steamers with refrigerating space capable of carrying chilled meat. Chilled meat for England comes chiefly from the Argentine, Uruguay and from Australia and New Zealand. In 1913 we imported 15,397,554 cwt. of chilled and frozen meat. The Government having got possession of the ships, the two parties were then on a level footing for bargaining. The meat corporations had the beef, but could not sell it without ships. The Government had the ships and wanted the meat, so that it did not take long to come to terms. The business was put in the hands of a committee of shipowners, and the whole transit problem was solved without delay. As a precaution against any shortage of chilled meat from the usual sources, the Government entered into contracts with a great American meat firm. As a further protection, freezing works were acquired in South America for the period of the war.

IMPORTED MEAT.

The enormous quantities of meat imported from the United States for the armies are mainly in the form of bully-beef and other canned meat. The British Government went into the beef business in order to supply the troops at home and overseas with chilled meat. It has done so at an average cost of twelve cents per pound. It also supplies all meat of this kind required by the French army, the Italian army, the Belgians and the Serbians. The amount of meat required several months ago for the British and French armies was 60,000 tons per month; for the Italian army about 10,000 tons per month. These quantities have increased proportionately with the additions to the forces during the last six months.

Having created a State monopoly in the importation and control of chilled meat, the Government had to make provision for domestic supplies outside the army. The Board of Trade arranged to sell to British firms the surplus meat at market prices. They obtained a small commission, lower than hitherto received from traders. Sales to speculators were prohibited.

HOW WHEAT IS PURCHASED.

Wheat was quite as important as sugar and beef, although there was less risk of a world corner. Wheat is purchased for Government account on somewhat similar lines as beef. Small committee at the head of whom is a civil servant and a corn expert, manage the whole business. One of the largest importing houses was commissioned to do all the purchasing, while the other houses held off, and it was four months before the corn trade, on the selling side discovered that the purchases were made for the state. Naturally the commission which the State pays on such transactions is nominal. The British Government organization buys our ships wheat, oats, fodder, etc., for Italy. The French Government buys its civil requirements wheat through the Hudson's Bay Company. Large purchases have been made on Canada on behalf of the Italian Government.

There are other examples of Government purchase and control of food. Take fish, for instance. The fishing trade in the North Sea has been paralyzed to a very large extent by the war, especially by the danger from submarines and mines. The Government has maintained a service of fishing boats by acquiring the whole fish harvest of the year. Last year Germany bought the Norwegian fish supply. This year, before the German agents had time to turn around the British government had bought the lot, and deprived Germany of the sole outside source of supply. This must have been bad news for Germany, as it means fishless days as well as meatless meals.

The system of Government control has been successful in other directions. There is the case of coal, an article of vital importance. Without coal the war could not go on. Coal is wanted for the allied fleets, for munition works, and for transportation by land and sea. Clearly the production and distribution of coal had to be made a public utility service. The Government passed a Price of Coal Limitation Act, which fixed a fair profit for the coal owners according to the prices in the year before the war. Having got the coal owners under control, the act then regulated the prices which the wholesale dealers could charge, and also the retailers, throughout the United Kingdom. The result has been no shortage of coal and no excessive prices.

Regulation a Stupendous Task.

The regulation of coal has been a stupendous task, as more than half a million men engaged in coal-mining have enlisted, and the first duty of the Government was to see that not only the British navy, but the French and Italian navies, should have ample supplies. Next came the mercantile marine, transports, munition works, etc. The British Government supplies not only its own needs, but also those of France and Italy.

After much trouble the problem of freight has been regulated, as far as England and her Allies can control their own mercantile marine, but much of the trade is done by neutrals. The general export of coal was prohibited, except to the allied countries and British possessions. A network of coal and coke supply committees has been set up throughout the country, under the supervision of a central authority, working under the Board of Trade. Beyond supplying the war and Governmental needs, including the railroads of the French and Italian Governments, the British Board of Trade regulates the freights for the supply of coal for commercial and business in France and Italy, so far as it has the tonnage available. Mr. Runciman declined to make this arrangement until France introduced the same system of regulating prices, otherwise the whole of the benefit would have got into the pockets of the French coal merchants.

STATE CONTROL.

There is another great extension of State control. On the outbreak of war the British Government took possession of the railways. The plan had been worked out for mobilization purposes years ago. National control had been foreseen, but the conditions had not been arranged. Railroads in Great Britain, as regards organization, occupy a position midway between the State-owned railways on the Continent and the American railroad system. The States interfered to an extent that stopped all competition in many directions without giving the public the benefit of national uniformity. The Unifying process had been at work for years, agreements lessening competition had been entered into among groups of lines, and a central committee of officials met to regulate business common to all and to protect railroad interests against legislative attacks.

THE RAILWAYS NATIONALIZED.

On the outbreak of war railways were nationalized. The Government agreed to guarantee the dividends of the railroads corporations. The management of roads were placed in the hands of a railway executive board, composed of the chief officers of all the railway companies. These men hold daily meetings just like a great American railroad corporation, and control the whole railroad and transportation system of the country. The State not only took over the railways, but also the docks belonging to the railway companies and their harbours and their steamships, engineering workshops, etc.

The first duties of the railways in wartime are to carry troops, next to carry supplies for the troops and the navy, and to distribute foodstuffs for the general community. All this has been a prodigious traffic in itself, but the railroads have been quite equal to it. There have been no complaints about the State management of railroads. It has worked so well that every one hopes that the State control will remain armies and without which belligerent nations could after the war. There has been no wastage from useless competition or overlapping; and in spite of the fact that over 150,000 railroad men have joined the forces, the service, while somewhat curtailed, has caused the general public no great inconvenience.

From an administrative and financial point of view the State control has been so successful that the Government is able to pay the railway companies their dividends as guaranteed, and at the same time has been able to carry all the troops free. Free travel has also been granted to relatives of wounded soldiers and for the conveyance of the wounded to convalescent homes all over the country. The traffic in connection with Red Cross work, hospitals, and convalescent homes has also been a big part of the free business.

These are only some of the great business undertakings which the war has forced upon the British Government. Except in the case of sugar, all have been carried out by the Board of Trade, whose President, Walter Runciman, is one of the ablest men in the Government, and a man of great business capacity. The subject which perhaps has given the Board of Trade more labour and anxiety than anything else is the problem of shipping and freights. There are several committees at work handling various departments of the mercantile marine problem.

STATE INSURANCE FOR SHIPS.

In one respect the Government was ready for the emergency which was brought about. A scheme of Government insurance for ships in war time was in existence, and it was at once put in force. Under this scheme hulls were insured by the State undertaking to bear 80 per cent. of the risk, a mutual insurance office bearing the remaining 20 per cent. In the case of cargoes the State undertook the whole of the insurance. It would take much longer to describe the mechanism of the various organizations set up to deal with shipping and freight than I have occupied in describing the Government action with regard to food, coal, and the railways, as it is a vast and complicated problem.

There are many other directions in which the British Government has shown its capacity to face trade problems in war. When we come to deal with purely war production, instead of trade control in war, the new burdens undertaken are stupendous. The Ministry of Munitions manages the national arsenals, and it controls and regulates 3,500 industrial establishments engaged in munition work. It has erected twenty national workshops, some of them constituting new towns, one with over 50,000 inhabitants. The expansion of work for the Navy has also been on a huge scale.

Altogether the British public has every reason to be satisfied with the way the Government has managed the production of munitions and the control of trade during the war.

FRUIT BULLETIN

PEACHES—The famous Yellow St. John Peach, Niagara Peninsula grown, now at its best. Will be followed by other first-class varieties. Plums ready for canning.

Look for this Map. It is your guarantee of quality.

WANTED—Girls' & Women good pay, steady work. Apply The Quaker Oats Company.

Preserving Fruit Without Sugar

THE RECIPE.

The fruit is prepared in the ordinary way, the jars are cleaned and scalded, while the rubbers and tops are boiling. The fruit is then placed in the jars, in which COLD water is placed. When the jars have been sealed air-tight they are placed in a boiler filled with cold water, and brought to the boiling point. Berries will do if removed when the boiling point is reached, while large fruits, such as peaches, cherries, plums and apricots, should get 20 to 30 minutes boiling. Keep cover of wash boiler on tight.

PEACH FRITTERS.

Proceed as for pear fritters, but use 1 1-4 cups of flour.

PEACH FILLING.

Cut up 2 or 3 very ripe, juicy peaches and squeeze them through a potato ricer. Add 1-2 cup of pulverised sugar to the pulp, and 1 cup of cream beaten to a stiff froth. Blend thoroughly and put between layer cake.

WHITE PEACH SALAD.

Take white peaches, firm, but ripe, and slice, sprinkling liberally with sugar, and the blanched meat of pecan nuts. Serve with cream.

PEACH SALAD.

Stone peaches, fill with cream cheese mixed with cream and shredded almonds. Serve with whipped cream.

PEACHES IN CANTALOUPES.

Fill halves of cold cantaloupe with sliced peaches. Sprinkle them with sugar and candied ginger, chopped fine, and serve with whipped cream.

PICKLED PEACHES.

Pare large peaches but do not cut them; stick 3 cloves in each. Weigh 7 lbs. of fruit to 3 3-4 lbs. of sugar. Put sugar in porcelain kettle with 1 quart of vinegar, 2 sticks of cinnamon and 1 tablespoonful of whole cloves. Boil 10 minutes. Add fruit a few pieces at a time, and cook till clear, but not soft. Lift into cans, boil down syrup and again over them.

BOILED PEACH PUDDING.

Line a pudding basin with suet crust, fill with sliced peaches, and sprinkle each layer with brown sugar. Cover with crust, tie up in floured cloth, and boil from 2 to 3 hours.

PEACH SHORTCAKE.

Prepare a dough as for biscuits, using a little butter in the shortening and an egg mixed with the milk, which is used in moistening. A mixing spoon of sugar may be added. Bake in a quick oven (an iron pan is the best). Have the peaches pared and crushed with a generous measure of sugar and allow to stand until meal time, when the shortcake should be split and filled with crushed peaches. Serve with rich cream.

Stuffed eggplant is a delicious dish which few people appreciate and egg plant stewed like squash is another. Both require a great deal of seasoning.

Avoids Breakfast Cooking—

New Post Toasties are ready to eat direct from the package. They have a fine new flavor—self-developed by a new patented process—that rare, true flavor of prime, white Indian corn itself. These New Toasties are the first corn flakes that do not depend on cream and sugar for palatability.

The proof of this superior flavor is found by eating some dry from the package. They're deliciously good that way, but of course are usually served with cream or good milk.

Examine the New Post Toasties flakes. The quick, intense heat of the new process of manufacture, not only raises the distinguishing little "bubbles" on each flake, but gives a body and firmness that makes the New Toasties a more substantial food than ordinary "corn flakes."

New Post Toasties do not "chaff" or crumble in the package, and they don't mush down when cream is added. They come to you untouched by hand, and in moisture-proof packages that preserve their delightful oven-crispness until served at your table.

Well worth trying—these

KNIFE IN BRAIN A YEAR, RECOVERS

How a knife blade one inch long, which had penetrated a man's skull and entered the brain was removd after one year and the man restored to health is told of by Dr. Mathias Figueira, of No. 14 Stuyvesant Avenue, Brooklyn, one of the head surgeons at St. Catherine's Hospital, in a paper published in the current issue of the Long Island Medical Journal.

The man was found by police in the street, apparently intoxicated and was sent to the hospial. He remained in a semi-comatose state and the following morning in the course of examination Dr. Figueira passed his hand over the man's head and discovered a lump.

The lump, Dr. Figueira writes, was "about two inches from the middle of the upper part of the right parietal bone in the neighbourhood of the centre for the arm. The lump was not hard and on palpitation had a peculiar grating sound which I could not explain. He was sent to the X-ray room and the radiographic picture disclosed the vault of the skull and sticking into it was the blade of a knife one inch long."

When the man was placed on the operating table it was found that the knife had been broken off flush with the skull and the surgeons could not get hold of it. Describing the operation, Dr. Figueira writes:

"I applied a trephine and cut out a button of the bone. There was a very beautiful condition of the brain, showing the wonderful conservative powers of nature in case of this kind. From the constant motion of the brain with respiration and the action of the heart that knife blade which was fast in the skull, had gradually loosened in the bone, so it moved with the brain. The bone had become absorbed by the constant beating of the brain and around the knife blade nature had built a wall of connective tissue to protect the brain."

BIG TORONTO HOTEL TO FORM ASSOCIATION

TORONTO, Aug. 29.—A split in the ranks of the hotel keepers is imminent. The bigger hotel keepers, those who have catered to guests in the matter of sur plying rooms, have been disgusted with the way other houses, which, as some of the hotel keepers state, are nothing else but saloons, have been carried on, and there is a movement on foot to form an association of all the bigger hotels in the city.

Only hotels that really cater for the travelling public in the way of accommodation will be members of this new organization.

Selected President.

Mr. Winnet, of the Queens, is being mentioned as the first president. He did not deny that the movement was on foot. "This has been talked about for some time," he said, "but I think that the time is opportune for such a movement now. We have got to look after our own interests, and the only way to do that is to have a concentrated movement on the part of the hotelkeepers in this city who are hotelkeepers to see that they get their fair and just due. The new association is necessary, and I think that it will not be long before it comes into being."

When asked if he would be the first president, Mr. Winnet did not think that he would accept of the office. "I have been a long time in the hotel business,' he said, "but I think that a much younger man should accept the office."

Meeting Soon.

It is understood that a meeting of the bigger hotel keepers will be held in the near future to take up the whole proposition.

BOUND TO BEGIN WAR

Central Empires Refused to Heed Warnings of Italy.

London, Aug. 29.—Dr. J. E. Dillon, who is reputed to be one of the very best informed men on European politics, in a despatch to the Telegraph from Acqui, Italy, says: "I am now at liberty to state that proofs will be forthcoming, that Austria and Germany reached the decision to wage war immediately after the assassination of the Austrian Archduke." Dillon declares that on three occasions the Italian Government, through its ambassadors, called the attention of the Central Empires to the grave symptoms of a European crisis which was being aggravated by their policy of aggression, and earnestly requested that they desist.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

MANY CASUALTIES AMONG THE SPORTSMEN

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The casualties among the leading British sportsmen who have been killed and wounded in action on the western front, have now reached alarming proportions, the latest list containing the names of stars in every branch of sport.

Cricket has suffered a severe loss by the death in action of Percy Jeeves, a Warwickshire County professional, and one of the coming English players. He represented England in the international matches against the South Africans and Australians in 1912.

The Rev. F. H. Tuke, chaplain of the forces, killed instantaneously, while carrying water to the trenches, was a Cambridge University man, and in his 'varsity days was captain of the first Trinity Boat Club.

Lieut. K. R. Cock, who died of wounds, was a member of the London Scottish Rugby Football Club, a fine swimmer and with his younger brother went under training as a middle distance runner for the Olympic games in 1912.

A well-known South-End harrier, Sergt. W. J. Thorogood, also has fallen. He was one of the original members of the famous club, and ran in every cross-country team race in which the club competed up to the outbreak of the war. He won the Essex championship in 1908.

Lieut. David N. Gaussend, killed in action, was well known in university athletic circles as a long distance runner, having competed in the Oxford and Cambridge sports in 1913 and 1914.

Capt. T. G. Brocklebank, an old Etonian who died of wounds, rowed bow for Oxford in the University boat race of 1904.

The Footballers' Battalion has done some fine work in the attack on Delville wood. Captain Bell," the old Southampton soccer player, has been wounded, while William Jonas, of the Clapton Orient Club, has been killed. The name of E. T. Hanney, a Manchester City and Reading footballer, who was one of the English team in the last Olympic games, appears among the wounded.

Hitless Record In Majors Held By Old Cy Young

Hurled 23 Innings in 1904 Without Allowing a Single Safe Blow

Tom Hughes of the Boston Nationals recently did some neat pitching when he worked in sixteen consecutive innings without allowing a base hit to be made off his delivery, but it is hardly big enough to be a major league record, although many papers published the feat as being the best record in this line.

There are many records in baseball which have Hughes' performance faded. In minor leagues the mark of pitching sixteen consecutive innings of hitless ball is by no means common. It has been accomplished on a dozen or more occasions. In the majors the real holder of this record is no less a personage than the Hon. Denton Tecumseh Young of blessed memory. Mr. Young, better known as Cy, is the holder of several other records in unusual feats in the pitching line.

Set Record in 1904.

It was back in April, 1904, that Young proceeded to shatter all figures in this line, and before he got through he had created a new record in hurling hitless ball, and one which stands to-day clean cut and without a spot or blemish and without doubt the greatest piece of pitching the game ever witnessed.

On April 30, against the Washington team, Young took Winter's place in the third inning, no one out, and pitched out the game, retiring the next twenty-one batsmen in order. Young's next game took place May 8, against the Athletics, in the days when Connie Mack sported a real club. Cy pitched the best game of his long and honourable career that day, and retired twenty-seven of those famous swatsmen of Mack in a row. In a game against Detroit May 11 Denton T. pitched his famous fifteen inning 1 to 0 game against the Tigers, and in the first sexen innings Young set them down without a base hit.

No Hits in 23 Innings.

This would give "Cy" twenty-three innings of hitless ball, or in other words as far as the records show sixty-eight batsmen stepped to the plate and were retired in succession. In that same period the big Ohioan pitched forty-eight consecutive innings wherein his opponents failed to get a run across the plate. After his great no-hit no-run game against the Athletics he pitched fifteen innings of runless ball, as mentioned, against the Tigers, with Ed Killian opposing him. It was a battle royal and the clever Killian met defeat by a score of 1 to 0.

Just one pitcher in the history of baseball, that is, a hurler who was working in a league of recognized standing and class, is credited with pitching two complete games in succession wherein the opposing batsmen failed to register a base hit. A big pitcher sailing under the name of Gene Wright, who hurled for the Dayton club of the Western association back in 1901, on Sept. 1 of that season pitched a no-hit no-run game against Columbus. He followed up this feat by turning the same trick against the Grand Rapids team on Sept. 4.

Wright Fails in Majors.

Addie Joss and George Mullen made their respective reputations in that league. Wright and Joss were signed by the Cleveland team and Mullen was taken over by the Detroit club. Wright, in spite of his brilliant record in the Western association, didn't hold a candle to Joss and Mullen when under fire by the big league batsmen.

OBVIOUS CASE OF SUICIDE.

But No Reason Can Be Given For George Lees' Act.

LUCKNOW, Aug. 28.—The body of George Lees, a middle-aged resident of this place, was found in a clump of bushes on the property owned by Richard Webster, with his throat cut from ear to ear.

Lees had been missing since Wednesday morning. While the authorities declare it is obviously a case of suicide, his sisters, with whom he lived, can assign no reason why he should have taken his own life.

FLANAGAN OFFERED HEADQUARTERS JOB

Ottawa, August 30.—It is probable that Captain Tom C. Flanagan of the 180th (Sportsmen's) Battalion, and Superintendent of Athletics at Camp Borden, may be attached permanently to Militia Headquarters as director of physical training and superintendent of military athletic sports for the troops of all Canada.

At the present time Captain Flanagan is nominally attached to camp headquarters at Camp Borden and is in charge of the physical and athletic training of the troops there. His work has been so successful, and the results with the men so satisfactory, that it is understood that official overtures are being made to him to undertake the supervision of similar work in all the larger camps of soldiers in training.

According to reports, it is unlikely, however, that Captain Flanagan will agree to accept the position unless the proviso is incorporated under which he will be granted three months or more leave of absence in which to accompany his battalion to Britain and the Flanders front. Up to the present time he has declined to formally sever his connection with the Sportsmen's Battalion, and it is understood that this desire on his part is responsible for the delay in officially placing his name in "orders."

It is now anticipated by the military authorities that the Sportsmen may move eastward before the end of October, though no definite date has yet been determined.

Constables Lay Charge Against Hensall Men

CLAIM REEVE INTERFERED WHEN ALLEGED LIQUOR SEIZURE WAS MADE.

Clinton, August 30.—Charges have been laid against Thomas Berry, a prominent horseman, and Reeve Fred Smallacombe, of Hensall, as a result of a visit by County Constables Wallis and Pellow, who had been sent by the temperance organizations to search the driving sheds and office of Mr Berry.

It is claimed that after the constables had seized 24 gallons of bottled beer, ten quart bottles of whiskey, also a ten gallon keg of whiskey, and had it loaded into two auto cars, the reeve arrived, and stated that he held the position of "justice of the peace," and gave orders that the goods should be at once unloaded, and returned to Mr. Berry.

The constables claim that when they refused to take the reeve's instructions, he assumed a threatening attitude, and offered the auto driver more money to put the car back in the garage than he was offered to take the liquor to the cold storage plant of Inspector Torrance at Clinton.

When the keg was discovered Berry is said to have told the constables that it was "vinegar" and pleaded with them not to take it but to make sure they procured a brace and bit, and are convinced that their suspicions were well founded.

VISITING CLERGY

Were in Pulpits in This City Sunday.

HAMILTON, Aug. 30.—Rev. Hugh McDiarmid, of Fort William, formerly pastor of Stanley Ave. Baptist Church, delivered two splendid sermons at Gospel Tabernacle Sunday, in the morning taking as his subject, "Suspended Blessings," and in the evening, "Two Views of God." A number of other city pulpits were occupied by visiting ministers. Rev. J. W. Pedley, of Toronto, conducted both services at First Congregational; Rev. J. N. Clarry, of Belleville, officiated at the morning service at First Methodist, and Rev. E. B. Lanceley preached in the evening. Rev. J. U. Elliott, of Bloomington, Ill., spoke to the congregation of Central Presbyterian in the morning, and Rev. Alex Wilson, of Aberdeen, in the evening.

LOCAL FIRE CHIEF PRESENTS IMPORTANT REPORT AT INQUIRY

Chief Howard Representing Dominion Association of Fire Chiefs Makes Many Suggestions—"Over Insurance" is Deplored

TORONTO, Aug. 29.—Mr. E. P. Heaton, Provincial Fire Marshall, today presented a report before the Insurance Commission making the following findings:

1. That the practical control of fire insurance within the Province is in the hands of the companies, members of the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association (known as tariff companies) who transact over 80 per cent. of the entire business of the Province.

2. That the business of the tariff companies has been one of gradual growth and that of the non-tariff companies one of gradual decline.

3. That the main purpose of the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association was and is the maintenance of fire insurance rates.

4. That every risk insured in Ontario by the tariff companies is rated by the association and below that rate no member of the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association is permitted to insure.

5. That the members of the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association are rigidly bound to observe all rates, rules and regulations.

6. That infractions of rates, rules, or regulations involve the offenders in penalties which in some instances include monetary fines.

7. That in order to ensure strict adherence to rates, rules and regulations a detective scheme known as a "stamping system" was organized and put in operation in certain important districts.

8. That with the unexpressed but obvious object of restricting competition the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association prohibits business intercourse with non-tariff companies.

9. That with a similar object in view the Association has extended its rules to suppress or limit forms, clauses, and conditions advantageous to the insuring public readily granted in other countries, and acceptable to companies here if allowed to exercise their own judgment.

10. That with a similar object in view the association has entered into an agreement with the only insurance map and plan publishers in Canada to restrict the use of maps and plans to members of the association, thus producing in actual practice a complete monopoly in favour of the tariff companies.

11. That the attitude of the association to the insuring public has been arbitrary and autocratic.

12. That in many instances the association has caused to be cancelled policies of insurance from many large insurers, having Dominion-wide business and branches, notwithstanding the willingness of individual members to accept the same and that the effect of such action on its part has been to require large insurers to seek unlicensed insurance.

13. That the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association has admittedly failed to make any serious effort to obtain reliable statistics upon which the adequacy of rates might with some degree of confidence be predicated.

CAME AS SURPRISE.

A surprise was provided at the inaugural meeting this morning of the inquiry by Mr. Justice Masten, special commissioner appointed by the Ontario Government to look into methods of companies conducting insurance business with the Province, when Provincial Fire Marshal Heaton laid a report before the commissioner declaring that the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association is the equivalent of a combine, and that in its dealings with the public the association is "arbitrary and autocratic." Thirty representatives of fire, accident, boiler, automobile, plate glass and other insurance companies were present at the request of Judge Masten. Attorney-General Lucas attended as the representative of the Government. Leighton McCarthy, K.C., and J. H. Roberts, were present, representing the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association, and Mr. F. A. Howard, the Dominion Fire Chiefs' Association.

Judge Masten, in opening the inquiry, outlined its scope as expressed in his commission of appointment, and asked the cooperation of all interested in the subject of the inquiry.

HEATON FIRST WITNESS.

Mr. E. P. Heaton, Provincial Fire Marshal, who was the first witness examined, stated he had, previous to appointment to his present office, prepared at the instance of the Attorney-General a report upon fire insurance rates and their control within the Province of Ontario. This report, together with a supplementary report, which he had prepared in April last, as a result of his investigations made since becoming fire marshal, he presented to the commission. The report comprises about 80 typewritten pages, and the commissioner decided it was of such value to the inquiry that he desired it printed and copies sent to all parties interested, so that they might have perusal of it before the commission after to-day's adjournment resumed the hearing of evidence on October 10.

The report first deals with the fire insurance business as transacted by tariff and non-tariff companies. By "fire insurance business" is meant premiums paid in cash to all companies in the Insurance Register licensed to transact such business, excluding, however, the strictly mutual companies, about 70 in number, whose business is carried on the assessment plan. A table shows that between the years of 1905 and 1914 tariff companies increased from 31 to 65 in number, and non-tariff companies from 16 to 23. The tariff companies not only transact the largest part of the business, but have had almost continuous growth, some of which growth had come through a process of absorption of the non-tariff and non-tariff companies. By than one-half of the non-tariff companies are of Ontario origin. 19 out of 23 are operating under Provincial charters and apparently no effort has been made to induce them to join the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association. "That so large a number of British, French, and United States companies are members of the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association," observed Mr. Heaton, demonstrated a cohesion of important interests which can and does look with equalimity upon competition offered by companies possessing limited resources and enjoying restricted confidence with the insuring public.

SAYS RATING SYSTEM IS COMPLEX.

The report proceeds to explain the plans, scope, and powers of the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association and its influence upon the fire insurance situation of the Province, the control of the business to all intents and purposes lying with the companies' members of that association. Mr. Heaton finds that the rating system is complex and that the inspection service of the association is conducted more with a view to the application of their rating schedules than to reduction of fire waste. The general attitude of the non-tariff companies in respect of the naming of rates, may Mr. Heaton declares, be summarized in the one word "practical" and this fact of itself is added evidence of the great importance of the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association in Provincial-wide control in the determination of insurance companies, in formulation of rates, it being the general practice to take advantage of the rating system of the Canadian fire underwriters, and to quote a percentage reduction therefrom of from 10 to 33 1-3 per cent.

FIRE CHIEF'S SUGGESTION.

W. A. Howard, fire chief of Peterboro, and chairman of the Legislation Board of the Dominion Association of fire chiefs, stated that he had been requested to appear before the commissioner in behalf of the Dominion Association of Fire Chiefs to state that the services of every fire chief from coast to coast were at the disposal of the commissioner in connection with the investigation. The association was interested in the movement and pleased with the action of the Government in appointing a commission of enquiry as well as the appointment of a Provincial fire marshal.

Mr. Howard then presented a report of the Legislative Board of the association prepared for presentation to the Commissioner. The report deplored the awful fire waste of this country and attributes it among other things to the prevailing high rates of insurance. The prevalent practice of what is termed as "over insurance" is also deplored. Likewise the looseness with which fire insurance business is being conducted by certain insurance agents, and the apparent indifference of certain municipal boards having control of the fire departments of certain cities and towns.

Regret is expressed at the lack of legislation to govern, among other things, the prohibition of accumulation of combustible rubbish in and about congested districts; restrictions in connection with erection of buildings, having regard to prevention of fire; the placing of the control of fire departments in cities and towns in hands of an independent local commission consisting of not more than three members; the levying of a tax by municipalities having a population of 5,000 and upwards (similar to the Public Schools Act), for the purpose of equipping and maintaining a standard and efficient fire brigade; to compel every municipality having a population of 5,000 and upwards to maintain a fire brigade of certain given standard, and also a system of waterworks; to prohibit the laying of water mains in cities and towns below a given size; to establish the recognized standard of 7 1-2 threads to the inch for fire hose couplings, fire hydrant nipples and other fire-fighting appliances requiring the use of screw threads; the establishment of a fire prevention bureau for the Province of Ontario, similar to those of New York City, Boston and other large American cities.

CHANGES SUGGESTED.

W. J. Vale, superintendent of insurance, explained the nature of the supervision he had over all insurance companies. He advised that no companies were licensed and agents licensed that all insurance adjusters, whether representing companies or the assured, should be licensed. He also advocated that the Department of Insurance should be given a great deal more control of insurance companies than it at present possessed. He also expressed opinion that the companies should be permitted to issue combined accident and fire policy on automobiles, which is not at present done.

The commission then adjourned until October 10.

PAYING $22,000 A WEEK.

Compensation Board's Work is Steadily Growing.

The work of the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board is growing. An average of 270 new claims are being allowed weekly, in addition to more than twice this number of continuing and pension payments, making a total of about 850 compensation cheques in all issued each week. The average weekly amount of compensation being paid is about $22,000.

"About 85½ per cent. of the accidents involve temporary disability only, about twelve per cent. involve more or less permanent partial disability, and about two and a half per cent. are death cases,' declares the board. "As always, a very considerable proportion of the accidents are preventible by a little more care on the part of workmen and employers.

"The new law recognizes that the misfortune of a crippled workman or the needs of his widow and children are not any the less because he was at fault or someone else was not at fault for the injury. The sole conditions of compensation are that the injury must have arisen in the course of and out of the employment, and that actual physical disability must have resulted for at least seven days, and, in cases other than those involving serious disablement, that the accident must not be attributable solely to the wilful and serious misconduct of the workman.

"The Ontario Act has become the pattern for other Provinces in the Dominion. Legislation essentially identical has been adopted in Nova Scotia and British Columbia, and the new Manitoba Act follows the Ontario Act in respect to amount and conditions of payment and compensation."

Embroidery in silk, floss, tinsel thread and wool is seen more and more frequently as the new clothes appear, motifs being inclined to be large and free in design.

Twelve Pipes a Day Lived To Age of 97

PARIS, Aug. 30.—Henri Harpignies, the famous landscape painter, died here at the age of ninety-seven. He prided himself on the sumptuous table he kept and on the fact that he could drink three liquors and smoke twelve pipes a day up until the last week of his life.

Henri Harpignies was born at Valenciennes on July 28, 1819. He was a pupil of Archard and did landscapes of note both in oils and water colors. His water colors had the strength and breadth of the English school and were widely exhibited.

ALL TOO COMMON STORY.

Colborne, Aug. 30.— Apple buyers are on the move, but we have not heard of any sales. There is said to be about a fifty per cent. crop, with only fifteen to twenty per cent. of it that can be classed firsts and seconds. The apples are ill shaped and scabby, presumbly the result of the continued wet weather during June.

New York Stock Market

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—Railroads, which responded only slightly to the strike news and the President's address to Congress yesterday, opened weak on the Stock Exchange to-day, although there was no marked break in prices. Canadian Pacific was down 3-4; St. Paul, a half; Southern Pacific, a half; B. and O. 1-4, and losses of one point each were marked up against N. Y. C., Erie, Reading, and U. P. during the first hour; U. S. Steel opened with a loss of 5-8, and the general list was fractionally down.

GRASS FIRES CALL OUT THE FIRE DEPARTMENT

Grass fires resulted in two dashes by the Fire Department this afternoon with no damage in either case. One blaze was at 320 Elm street, and the other at the corner of Murray and Downie streets, in a vacant lot owned by Miss Jessie Hamilton.

A LESSON IN THE LIST OF INDIGENT PATIENTS

Alderman Stratton read too lengthy lists of indigent patients at local and Toronto hospitals at last night's meeting of the Finance committee. Most of them were in advanced years and had spent all or the major part of their lives in Peterborough and were now unable to pay for their hospital maintenance during illness.

Long addiction to liquor, apart from the endless dribble of money expended in its purchase, accounted for a number of these people, and while their names are not published, out of consideration for themselves, their condition might serve as a lesson to others. But on the other hand most people haven't sufficient imagination to see in the fate of others their own plight.

OBITUARY

NELLIE GILMOUR.

The death occurred in the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, on Tuesday, August 29th, of Miss Nellie Gilmour, daughter of the late John Gilmour and granddaughter of the late Rev. John Gilmour. The funeral will be held from Murray street Baptist church on Friday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock to the Little Lake cemetery. The deceased was superintendent of two hospitals in Edmonton, and having taken ill came east to Montreal to consult a specialist. Many friends in Peterboroughg will regret to learn of her death.

CAROLINE McCLEAN.

The death occurred yesterday in St. Joseph's Hospital of Caroline McClean. Deceased, who was sixty-four years of age, had been ailing for some months. She was born in the north of Ireland, but has resided in this city for a large number of years. She is survived by one sister, Mrs. William Metge and a nephew, Mr. Geo. Metge.

The funeral will take place to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock to St. John's Church, where service will be held, thence to Little Lake Cemetery for interment. Rev. Canon Cornish will officiate.

HUNS GIBBERING LUNATICS AFTER BRITISH SHELL FIRE

Some impressions of what British regiments have come through in the recent Somme offensive are contained in the following letter received by the Rev. A. Logan Geggie of Toronto from his nephew in one of the original British regiments. It is one of the most effective of the many graphic letters from his pen that have appeared in The Toronto Star.

August 4, 1916.

Just at present my head contains a jumble of ideas, impressions, and memories that mostly smack of the horrible.

Forty-eight hours of battle under modern conditions leave men, even when victorious stunned, bewildered. Incidents that happened only a few hours ago are forgotten or dismissed. In rapid succession, the most of us experience terror, exhilaration, horror, and even touch the borders of lunacy.

This is by way of preparing you for no connected narrative of our recent experiences. One simply cannot describe the happenings of recent days. The state of mind is not normal. There is a melancholoy memory of a dear pal of mine who dropped at my feet with half his head blown off. There is a fleeting sympathy for the wife and three young 'uns whose latest photo was shown to me only two days before. From this I switch to the action of one of our rough-nuts who, in a tearing bayonet charge, forgot for the moment the chief reason of his presence in France, and coveted not the life of the German officer before him, nor his wine, nor his sausage, nor anything that was his except his helmet, and, having seised that first of all, proceeded to choke the Hun to death. Then there is the horror of memory of decaying unburied bodies. Ugh!

THE HOTTEST STOP OF ALL

Run your eye over the war map and pick out for yourself the very hottest place in the whole battle line. Let us call it X. Well X is where we have just come from. Those of us who are left. And here butts in another grotesque wonderment. Why, the dence, should we be left? Why should John Bell, George Carter, Daddy Wilson be left to rot in Bois de X., and Tom G. left to scribble inconsequential nothings to his uncle in Toronto, Canada? I switch off this as I realise I am asking for a sermon!

What our losses were I mustn't say, but a battalion doesn't attack Frits three times inside of ten days and find itself any stronger in numbers than previously.

COLONEL THRICE WOUNDED

For the third time in the war, the colonel stopped one—not a bad one, however—a bit messy, and painful no doubt, but not dangerous. The sort of wound aptly described by Tommy as a "blighty one". If a person is on the lookout for humorous incidents during a battle, which is never, he might study Tommy's expressions for the first fifteen minutes after that warrior has received the bit of lead, or whatever it is, addressed to him by Fritz. His first words, I regret to say, are often profane, but in a remarkably short time he is discussing the tortured arm or leg in terms of railway mileage. "D'ye think it's a blighty one?' 'or, "That'll no get me any further than Roo-on." A distressing feature of the late scrap was the number of bearers of blighty ones who risked the barrage fire in their efforts to reach the dressing station, and on the way there received other wounds of a decidedly French permanence. As the West Kents would say, "Pore old Ginger Smiff, 'opping it dahn to the Ide Post, bought a bit o' ground." One of the real misfortunes of war.

BARRAGE IS DEADLY.

This barrage fire, which in X is permanent—day and night—has also taken a deadly toll of German prisoners on their way to the rear and safety. One can almost sympathize with the poor Hun who, having safely survived the dangerous five minutes after surrender, and has been somewhat grudgingly accepted as a prisoner of war, sets off towards Donington Hall and all the ease and comfort it stands for, only to be caught up by one of his own five point nines and blown to mincemeat. Yet, this sort of thing is quite frequent. Without going to unnecessary details, you may gather from this that X. could be doing exclusively with the services of all the sanitary inspectors from Bath to Berbera. Your daily news has made you aware that since mid-July X. has changed hands several times; all day and all night what was, a month ago, a fairly prosperous little town, has been pounded, torn, and gashed, until not a single wall stands brick on brick. Here men have met at the bayonet's point, or bludgeoned one another with picks and shovels—and at no time has it been possible to, as the military textbooks put it—"clear the battlefield" There they are, Saxon and Wurtemburger, Highlander and Cockney. My God, this is assuredly the last of all wars. The human mind recoils from the thought of another such catastrophe. But, to make this a certainty, the present war must be fought to the finish. We are paying, and will continue to pay, the price. Millions have died and millions will yet die, but we shall hand on to our children a world free from the horrible curse of militarism. The unburied dead at X. demand this of us who yet remain.

THEY LOVE NOT THE SCOTCH

We are out of it at present, back licking our wounds, so to speak, and making ready for next time. Mah, the Hun loves not the Scotchman. He will tell you so himself.

I find that I cannot post this until to-morrow, and there are still things I'd like to tell you of, and try to describe. I quote the daily official communique—"After an intense artillery bombardment—" Now, I wonder what that conveys to you. Once, on the Himalayan slopes, I heard a peal of thunder that lasted thirty-five minutes. That seems an exaggeration, yet it isn't. Now I multiply that thunder 300 per cent. in intensity, and six, seven, or eight hundred per cent. in duration, and I arrive near my knowledge of our "intense artillery bombardment." Get a mile or so behind the guns and that is how it sounds,—an exaggerated, unnatural, unearthly thunderstorm; but get in front, sit in hte front-line trench, waiting for the "lift" and here comes the true description—"indescribable". The noise of the gun's discharge is, as a rule, one-fifth of the noise of the bursting high-explosive shell—add to this the scream of the hell's flight, add again the efforts issuing from Krupp, Essen, Germany—only a few degrees less noisy than our own—and you are getting somewhere near our "intense artillery bombardment."

NEW UNDER THE SUN.

Never, I suppose, has there been anything quite like it on this earth. Men go mad, and small wonder. We have pulled more than one Boche out of his concrete dug-out a gibbering lunatic.

A word about these dug-outs. They are masterpieces—twenty feet thickness and reinforced concrete—impossible to penetrate by any shell invented; but, of course, the entrances are the weak spots. Should the entrance escape in the general orgy of destruction. Friend Boche arrives at the surface, hands in air, calling "Kamerad, me Kamerad, mein fadder a waiter in London, wass, yes." But often enough the dug-out entrance shares the same fate as the rest of the obliterated trench, and there may be thirty or forty or fifty Huns down there who—yes, just so. Some fight—and, as the Englishmen said to the Yankee, "some don'ts."

Regards to all your folk. Tell anyone who asks you that I am still alive and kicking. Bon soir.

Popular Sympathy for Dr. Karl Liebknecht

LONDON, Aug. 30.—Reports have reached The Hague, says the correspondent of the Central News, that 86 civilians, 22 soldiers and 4 policemen were killed in riots in Dresden last were killed in riots in Dresden last been brought on by a demonstration against the imposition of an increased sentence on Dr. Karl Liebknecht as a result of his appeal from the finding of the military court. The crowds were eventually dispelled by troops, the despatch says, after 200 persons had been arrested.

Hand Caught In Mouth of Monster Shark

BUFFALO, Aug. 30.—A real shark story, the evidence being an injured thumb of William Struck, first mate on the schooner Courteney C. Houck, became known when the schooner reached port yesterday, ladened with phosphate rock, from Port Tampa, Fla. Further evidence of the shark story is in the possession of William Erdbrink, of Highlandtown, who was presented with the bait.

The adventure happened on the outward passage of the Houck from this port. When the schooner was off what is known to Mariners as "the Hole in the Wall," near the Bahamas, Struck decided to fish for sharks. A big fellow which was following in the wake of the vessel grabbed the bait and it required the efforts of the entire crew to get the big shark alongside and on the deck of the vessel.

A tape was applied and the shark measured 10 feet and weighed between 350 and 400 pounds. After the monster had been lying on the deck of the vessel, and was believed dead, Struck came along with an inquisitive smile, walked over to the rail and took out a belaying pin. Going back to the shark, the started to lift its nose up with the pin, to examine its teeth.

Quick as a flash he shark jumped ahead about two feet, while the belaying pin and the mate's left thumb were caught when the teeth of the monster came together. Several of the crew rushed to his assistance and, after the greatest difficulty pried the sharks mouth open. Both the mate's thumb and the belaying pin showed the result of the attack, while the only thing that saved the thumb was the heavy wooden pin, which kept the shark's teeth from coming together entirely.

Bandits Rob Standard Oil Company Driver and Get $4,000.

Detroit, Aug. 29.—Automobile bandits yesterday afternoon held up and robbed the driver of a Standard Oil Company car. They are reported to have obtained more than $4,000.

Wheat Prices Lower To-day

Special to The Examiner.

CHICAGO, Aug. 30.—September wheat closed to-day 2 7-8 below the opening, a loss of 4 3-8 cents per bushel over last night's close. December wheat was down 4 1-2 cents from last night's close, while May was down 4 3-8 cents. A heavy selling movement took place just before the market closed, due to fears or traders that a railroad strike could not be averted.

PAID 27 HOURS' WORK A DAY

Padding of Pay Sheets Exposed at Regina Inquiry.

REGINA, Aug. 29. — Before the Haultain Commission yesterday, J. F. Bryant, counsel for Lieut.-Col. Bradshaw, brought out evidence which pointed to padded pay sheets on the Battleford Asylum contract. With W. E. Johnston, Government insoector, on the stand, Mr. Bryant produced pay sheets rendered by the Regina Plumbing and Heating Co. on force account, on which Johnston's certificate to the correctness appeared. He asked Mr. Johnston to explain how, for instance, W. O. Smith, foreman, was shown as being employed on two or three jobs, nine hours a day on each on the same day. In some instances the men were credited with working twenty-seven hours on the same day.

ARMY OF 600,000

Roumania Can Double That Number If It Is Necessary.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—Confidential advices from an American official in Europe to the State Department to-day show that Roumania has entered the war on the side of the Entente allies with a mobilized army of approximately 600,000, and with war supplies sufficient to last four months.

The lespatch stated that the Roumanian army could be doubled if all the able-bodied men were called upon.

GREEN REPLACES WHITE

Pennsylvania Railroad Starts Innovation in Track Signals.

White signal lights, which mean "clear" or "proceed," are to be abandoned by the Pennsylvania Railroad because the increasing use of white light in buildings and streets, close to the railroad's right of way may confuse the engineers and lead to rear-end collisions.

The white lights will be replaced by green, which are visible at a great distance. This change will make necessary a general revision of the signals throughout the Pennsylvania system. A bright yellow, which can be seen for miles, will be used for caution. Red will continue to mean "stop."

ROUMANIAN TROOPS MEET WITH SWEEPING SUCCESSES

Important Positions Fall Before The Onslaughts Of Roumanian Troops

Roumania Forces are Attacking on a Three Hundred and Seventy-Five Mile Front---The Austrians are Evacuating Part of Transylvania---Roumanians Capture Norszufalu and a Few Hours Later Enter the Town of Kronstadt---Austrian War Office Admits Withdrawal of Austrian Troops.

REVOLUTION THREATENS GREECE

VIENNA, August 31.—The Austrian War Office statement admits the withdrawal of Austrian troops before the Roumanian invaders.

ROME, August 31.—Nine Austrian towns and villages, including four with populations of more than eight thousand, and the City of Kronstadt, with a population of forty thousand, and the most important commercial city of Transylvania, have been captured by the Roumanians in the first three days of a sweeping invasion through the Transylvanian Alps. A semi-official statement issued at Vienna and received here from Berne to-day, admits that the Roumanians are attacking with extraordinary vigor on a three hundred and seventy-five-mile front. The pressure is strongest at the Hungarian town of Orsovea near the Serbian frontier, where Roumanian artillery has ceaselessly bombarded the Hungarian positions since the declaration of war. The Austrians are hastily evacuating the extreme south-eastern corner of Transylvania. Pressing westward Roumanian troops entered Hosszufalu, "a town of nine thousand inhabitants," and within a few hours had occupied Kronstadt.

900 Miles Added to The Teuton Front

Line Which the Central Powers Must Defend in Europe Now Stretches 1,750 Miles---Have 10,600,000 Men Now---Entente Armies Aggregate 24,000,000---Strategy Likely to be Followed by Roumania.

MANY ADVANTAGES FOR ROUMANIA

By a stroke of the pen King Ferdinand of Roumania has added nearly 900 miles to the fronts in Europe now defended by the Central Empires —500 in the west, 785 in the east, 315 facing the Italians, and 160 miles at Salonika—making 1,750 miles. The 895 miles the King has added consist of the 520 miles of the Transylvania Alps, the 75 miles bordering on Serbia, and 300 miles on Bulgaria. Available for these fronts in trained men the Central Empires have 10,600,000, and the Allies 23,300,000. To the latter the King of Roumania has just added 650,000, capable of being raised to 900,000.

This is the first general strategic importance of Roumania's co-operation. The second is local. According to the most recent advices from Bucharest censored and uncensored, a Russian army of 80,000 men has been concentrated at the Danube for months near Galatz and near the Yassy-Ungheni Railway in Bessarabia waiting for King Ferdinand's declartion in order to ascend the river and descend the railway into Bulgaria via Giurgevo and Turnu-Magurele.

It has also been disclosed that the great Hungarian concentration camp at Hermannstadt, just over the Alps on the River Alvta, has prepared for the eventuality of Roumania's advent. Besides, the first conflicts between the troops of Roumania and those of the Central Empires have taken place on the Transylvania border.

However, the expansion into large military movements of such initial signs and actions would be contrary to the real strategic position of Roumania, as well as the natural disposition of the troops, both Roumanian and Russian. Since Roumania invaded Bulgaria and ended the second Balkan war in July, 1913, she has been preparing for another emergecy of the same sort, while political exigencies would be apt to draw the Russians to attack Transylvania through the passes in the Alps, these passes, meanwhile, being held by Roumanian "troupes de converture."

Indeed, a Roumanian officer in discussing the problem a year ago, said that the Roumanian strategy would be similar to that of the Italian, which had neutralized the Trentino and attacked on the Isonzo. In the same way Roumania would neutralize the Transylvanian Alpine front and attack along the Danube. The year, however, has made the former vulnerable; it has also placed a Russian army in a position to take advantage of that vulnerability. Meanwhile, any attempt of the Teutons to enter Roumania from Hermannstadt and across the Rothenthwim pass would naturally be met by Roumanian troops.

Aside from the Transylvanian Alps, the frontiers of Roumania lie on the Pruth in the northeast and on the Danube in the south and west. Across the Pruth is Russia Bessarabia, from which, of course, Roumania has nothing to fear; but across the Danube are Teutonized Serbia and Bulgaria. Just below Rushchuk on the Danube the Bulgar-Roumanian frontier makes an abrupt departure southwest to the Black Sea. Parallel to it runs the Varna-Rushchuk Railway. The Russians for months have been covering Varna by their warships. Varna is the sea terminal of the northern railroad to Sofia; Burgas, the sea terminal of the southern. The nature of the land, low and marshy, does not permit an invasion of Roumania via the Varna-Rushchuk line.

Still the banks of the Danube, low on the left and steep on the right, rather favour Bulgaria. But there are compensations in the shape of the lateral swamps and islands. The islands along the Roumanian bank are often very considerable in length and thickly covered, and although commaded from the right, or Bulgarian side, are also laved by the swifter current on that side.

There is still another advantage to Roumania in the fact that there are very few places where the Loess terrace—the edge of which is marked approximately by the route of the railway—of the interior infringes on the north bank of the river as to afford a natural site for a bridge or other means of crossing, and wherever there is solid ground for such a purpose it is already occupied by a town. Thus where the Botsani-Bucharest railway crosses there is Giurgevo on the Roumanian side and Rushchuk on the Bulgarian; Turnu-Magurerels opposite Nicopoli, on Pitesci-Rasii de Vide line, and Kalafat vis a vis to Cidin on Pitesci-Platra-Craiova line, which, running southwest, cuts the railway from Hermannstadt about midway, while the latter proceeds on to Corabia on the Danube, where there is no crossing.

An Ultimatum To Bulgaria

Will Demand That the Bulgars Evacuate Serbian Territory They Now Occupy

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Aug. 31.—An Exchange Telegraph despatch filed in Athens on Monday gives a report from Saloniki that Rumania has decided to present an ultimatum to Bulgaria demanding the evacuation of Serbian territory. Rumania was to have presented the ultimatum on Tuesday. Abandonment of Serbian territory held by Bulgarians is demanded, the despatch says, so that the status quo may be restored according to the Treaty of Bucharest.

Under the Treaty of Bucharest, signed in August, 1913, after the Balkan war, Macedonia was divided among Bulgaria, Serbia and Greece. The Serbian portion of Macedonia is now held by the Bulgarians.

SPRING LAMBS SOLD CENT A POUND LOWER

Medium Run of Cattle at the Stock Yards Toronto—Market Slow and Draggy —The Grain Market

Receipts at the Union Stock Yards, Toronto, yesterday, were 99 cars, with 1,068 cattle, 339 calves, 2,289 hogs, 1,555 sheep, and 1 horse.

There was a medium run of cattle at the Union Stock Yards, but the market was very slow and dragged along, with a good deal of stuff yet unsold at 1 o'clock. Spring lambs were plentiful and sold a cent to a cent and a quarter below yesterday's ruling prices. Hogs were steady, with sows 3 1-2 cents off and stags 5 cents off. Light butcher cattle were in good demand, but other kinds were of a generally poorer quality, with consequently slightly lower average prices for good and medium cattle.

BROKE THE SILENCE RULE

London Clubman Had Member, Three Days Dead, Removed.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—A new story is being told about a certain London club, famed internationally for both its exclusiveness and its dullness.

In one of the rooms a rule of silence is stringently enforced, any necessary order to a waiter having to be given in a whisper. The other day occupants of the room were startled to see a member press a bell button with evident annoyance, and when the waiter appeared to hear him exclaim, pointing to a neighbour in a chair:

"Waiter, remove that member."

The man in the chair had been dead thre days.

A LUMBER AE'S OPINION.

"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and sleeplessness," writes Wm. Pritchard, Lumber Inspector, Langdon Mills, Ont., "and used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with very great benefit, as my whole system was strengthened and built up. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood and restores the feeble wasted nerve cells."

20 Cent Cheese A Feature Of Market During Past Week

Cheese has monopolized the market limelight lately. Up and down the Ontario board sales this week, the price has hung aroung 20c, the high for this year. It is a decidedly welcome feature for the dairyman, and next Wednesday the Peterboro board should set up a new record if the present strength is maintained.

SALMON DEARER.

Not only are the new stocks of canned vegetables and fruits quoted at sharp advances but the grocers state that Sockeye salmon is up practically five cents a tin, and the pound tins that formerly sold at 25c will be 30 in future and the half pound tins will be 20c. The cost of labor and other present influences are said to be responsible for this advance.

THE REASON FOR HONEY'S INCREASE.

Recent announcement of the heavy production of honey left the impression that the price might show a decline from the figure to which it soared last year. But the very opposite movement has been experienced. Honey in bulk is up two cents a pound, to 18c; in jars it is 25c a pound and in comb from 25c to 30c according to quality. The effect of favorable conditions this year was lost through depleted hives. During the past two years apiaries have suffered rather severely. As a result, this year's production has not been a normal crop hence the continued strength of the market.

SUGAR, FLOUR, ETC.

The following are retail quotations: Granulated sugar, $8.75.
Pastry flour, per 25 lb. bag, $1.00.
Bread, first patents, per cwt., $4.55.
Bread, 2nd patents, per cwt., $4.35.
Cheese, per lb., 25c.

PROVISIONS.

Butter remains decidedly firm, dairy selling at 35c and 36c, and creamery at 37c and 38c.

This is the last chance for packing eggs. The supply is fairly good, and should coutinue so for a month. This week they are quoted at 29c and 30c a doz., a fairly reasonable price. Hence, those who intend to pack any quantity should secure them within the next few weeks.

Live hogs are off price this week, at $11.40 per cwt.

GRAINS.

Local grain prices are—
Wheat, per bush., $1.20.
Oats, per bush., 55c.
Barley, per bush., 75c.
Rye, per bush., 90c.
Loose hay, per ton, $10.

Strike Outlook Has Cleared

There is Hope That the Proposed Strike May be Averted—Eight Hour Day Will Prevent It

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—The railroad strike situation has, in the opinion of the administration and congressional leaders, changed over night from one of pessimism to one of hope, that the paralyzation of the nation's business will at least be postponed. W. G. Lee, head of the Trainmen's Brotherhood, stated this morning that the enactment of the eight hour law proposed by President Wilson, will of itself prevent the scheduled strike of 400,000 railroad employees.

Instant Relief for Sick Headache

Nausea and Heartburn

You cannot have sick headache when your liver is right. Dr. Cassell's Instant Relief sets it right, and that is why it cures sick headache and other bilious troubles so quickly, so surely, so thoroughly. It is not violent, like so many preparations, and you don't need to keep on taking it. It just helps your liver to regain its power, and thus natural action and natural cure follow at once.

"Science Siftings," a prominent English scientific journal, says (April 11, 1914):—"Providence has given us the brains to devise means to compensate Nature for our ill-treatment of her. . . . The means at hand come from natural sources, and we have them embodied in such splendid combinations as Dr. Cassell's Instant Relief."

Take Dr. Cassell's Instant Relief for constipation, biliousness, torpid liver, sick headache, dizziness, specks before the eyes, flatulence and windy spasms, acidity, heartburn, impure blood and that dull, heavy feeling which is a sure indication of liver troubles.

Price 50 cents, from all Druggists and Storekeepers,

1,146 MERCHANTMEN SUNK IN 22 MONTHS

In the first twenty-two months of the European war there was destroyed by submarines, mines, cruisers, and other war craft a total of 1,146 merchant vessels of a total tonnage of 2,306,230 and to this toll Great Britain contributed 1,381,126 tons.

The story of what the war has meant to the sea traders of all nations is told in a little book recently compiled in Holland by Blom & Van Der Aa, Amsterdam marine underwriters. This book is said to contain the name of every ship of the merchant class known to have been destroyed in the first twenty-two months of war. Since the book was printed ships totaling an additional 100,000 tons have been destroyed.

"When the war broke out in 1914" says the book, "we found it desirable to keep a special record of those vessels which were lost or sustained heavy damage in consequence of the war. We gave copies of these records to some of our business friends at their request, which requests have gradually become so numerous that we decided to have all our lists printed, after a thorough revision."

Of the ships destroyed more than 600 were the victims of submarine attacks, over 300 others went down as the result of contact with submarine and floating mines, one, the British freighter Franz Fischer, was the victim of a Zeppelin, another, the British trawler Nimrod was destroyed by a bomb, dropped from a German aeroplane, twenty others were set on fire as a result of shells fired from deck guns on German submarines, scores were sunk by regular and auxiliary commerce-destroying men-of-war, while in more than a score of cases the vessel simply disappeared somewhere at sea and was never heard of again.

LUSITANIA LEADS THE LIST

The four best-known ships in the long list are the Cunarder Lusitania, the French liner Provence, the North German Lloyd liner Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, and the Arabic of the White Star Line. The Provence and Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse were in the naval service when destroyed and more than 1,200 French soldiers went to their death on the Provence. The loss of non-combatant life was, of course, greatest on the great Cunarder Lusitania, and among the victims were more than 100 American citizens.

The ships of more than 8,000 tons which have been destroyed or seriously damaged as indicated in the Dutch records are as follows:

Name of Nationality	Tonnage
Alcantara, British	15,831
Ancona, Italian	8,210
Arabic, British	15,801
Armenia, British	8,895
Cap Trafalgar, German	18,710
Glengyle, British	9,395
Hesperian, British	9,500
K. Wilhelm der Grosse, Ger.	13,962
Koenigin Emma, Holland	9,181
La Correntina, British	8,529
La Provence, French	13,753
Lusitania, British	30,396
Maloja, British	12,431
Minneapolis, British	13,543
Noordam, Dutch	12,531
Norseman, British	9,542
Oceanic, British	17,274
Royal Edward, British	11,117
Ryndam, Dutch	12,527
Tubantia, Dutch	13,911
Van Dyke, British	10,328
Wayfarer, British	9,599
Yasaka Maru, Japanese	10,932

Of the above ships the Dutch liners Noordam and Ryndam, both of which were in the New York-Rotterdam service, struck mines in the North Sea. In both instances the crews managed to get the ships into port, where they were repaired. The cause of the sinking of the Dutch liner Tubantia is given in the record as due to a torpedo attack, a charge that has been repeatedly denied by the Berlin Government.

The American vessels destroyed in the course of the war are given as follows:

Name and Date	Tonnage
Carib, Feb. 29, 1915	2,807
Evelyn, Feb. 19, 1915	1,908
Greenbrier, March 4, 1914	3,831
Leelanaw, July 25, 1915	1,924
Vincent, Sept. 20, 1915	1,904
W. P. Frye, Jan 28, 1915	3,374

The recapitulation of total losses by countries is as follows:

BELLIGERENTS.

Country	No Ships	Tonnage
Great Britain	684	1,419,580
Germany	69	177,580
France	67	162,447
Russia	35	42,349
Italy	24	49,197
Belgium	12	22,931
Japan	3	19,267
Austro-Hungary	6	10,824
Turkey	12	11,381
Portugal	1	620
Total	913	1,916,096

Of the above ships only thirty-six remained afloat long enough to reach port, where they were repaired. All others were sunk or destroyed.

The toll of neutral ships, lost as a result of the war, is as follows:

Country.	No Ships	Tonnage
Holland	43	131,353
Norway	50	131,488
Sweden	45	49,269
Denmark	33	35,605
Greece	10	17,177
United States	6	14,589
Spain	4	8,096
Rumania	1	285
Persia	1	753
Total	293	390,134

Of the neutral vessels fifteen were towed into port and repaired, the total tonnage of the rescued ships being 64,575.

WOMEN OUTDO MEN MAKING MUNITIONS

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—A little more than a year ago Will I. Ohmer was a manufacturer of instruments of precision in Dayton, Ohio. His business was small. When it became known that contractors for shells were handicapped by a difficulty in getting the proper sort of time fuse to make shells salable Mr Ohmer saw his opportunity and lost no time taking advantage of it. To-day the Recording and Computing Machines Company, of which he is the President, turns out 28,000 time fuses a day, has 7,400 employees, and a payroll of $128,000 a week; and in addition to that the most remarkable thing about the plant is that it has demonstrated that women can become as good as or better than men as skilled workers.

Women, according to Mr. Ohmer, who arrived at the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday, have been taught in the plant inside of three weeks what skilled workmen have taken three or five years to learn. Some of them turn out five or six times the product that the best workmen have accomplished with the same machines. The female staff of the big factory, which now employs almost double the number of the works that put Dayton on the map, is largely composed of college girls, musicians, singers, school teachers coming from all parts of the country, and they get the same wages as the men—$3 to $7 a day.

"While I was in New York last fall a strike was declared in our factory," said Mr. Ohmer. "We had scarcely more than 100 women working for us then, and I telegraphed them that if they would stick by us we would pay them men's wages. They stuck. We got more women. We established a mechanical training school, where within three weeks thy learned as much about handling machinery as skilled workmen had picked up in three to five years. And it is a fact that many of these women can get out of the machines much more work than men. Ours is the only concern in the United States making what is known as the European time fuse. We turn out the fuse complete from raw material. We now have 4,000 women working in the establishment, and I think our plant has done more to discover and develop the high order of mechanical skill latent in a woman than any other institution.

"We, ourselves, have been startled as the results accomplished have proved almost beyond belief. The kind of girls who work for us is not the kind you see in the mills of the East. Among our employees are 125 school teachers. There are musicians, graduates of colleges, and women of good families, every one of them making $3 to $7 a day. They run some of the heaviest machines we have, including the big turret machines, which some thought impossible for any but a strong man to grapple with. There are certain machines, which, operated by male mechanics, turned out 200 parts of a certain kind per day. We put our most expert mechanics on them, and the best they could get out of them was 300 per day. Then we put our trained women on them and, to our great surprise they were able to turn out as high as 1,300 a day. We have taught them to set their own machines, to sharpen the tools they use—in fact, every kind of work the men do. There is another kind of machine, where men had been turning out, at the highest eleven parts per hour. Women, using the same machines, are now turning out fifty-seven per hour.

"We have girls from all parts of the country. We started first with Dayton girls, but the news spread that women could make as much money as men in our factory, and they came from New York and from everywhere. Just before I left home, two girls from Texas arrived and entered the training school They had heard of the opportunities, and immediately got on a train and headed North.

"We are offering inducements and are endeavouring to maintain the high stadard we now have. If you went into our assembly room, you would think you were in the assembly hall of a college. We had one of the big department stores of New York hold a fashion show out there not long ago and gave the dresses as premiums. There are three dances given in our hall every week. We have a dining hall that seats 1,600, and we supply three meals a day, as we keep going day and night."

POOR POTATO CROP.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture reports that the present outlook for potatoes is poor, although some correspondents say that a few good rains might redeem the situation. Owing to the rainy spring season some of the crops had to be planted late, while a considerable portion of the earlier planting rotted in the long soaked and cold soil. The prolonged period of drought during July was also trying to the vines. The bug was very injurious to the potato crop this season owing to the dry summer and scarcity of farm help.

WHEAT CROP CONDITIONS

The following statement regarding crop conditions in the province up to the 5th of August has been issued by the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

Fall Wheat.—This is relatively the best cereal crop of the season, both for grain and straw. While the yield is much below the bumper crop of 1915, it is above the average for the 34 year period, and practically equal to that of the average of the last ten years. The fields gave great promise in the early spring, but the cold, wet weather following, succeeded by the unusually hot, dry days of July, influenced the crop unfavorably. There is a wide variance in the yields, which run from 14 to 40 bushels per acre and the quality also varies greatly; for while the bulk of the crop is of excellent grade, more shrunken grain than usual is reported as the result of the intense drouth. The crop on drained land showed the best results under both the wet and parching conditions. Cutting ranged from July 17th to August 7th and the crop was got into the barn under the most favorable conditions.

Spring Wheat.—This crop is still decreasing in acreage. As in the case of all spring grains the season was too wet for satisfactory sowing, and much of the crop had to be "mudded in." The yield will be about an average but there will be considerable small, light grain and the straw will be rather short, owing to the hot July weather. Harvesting ranges from August 7th to 19th.

Despite the prevalence and popularity of the automobile and the threatening of the tractor to replace the horse on the farm the number of horses is gradually increasing in the country as a whole, and in several of the leading agricultural states.

AGAIN READY FOR ACTION.

Damage Suffered by British Ships in Jutland Fight Repaired.

A correspondent, writing from the home base of the British fleet, says: My interest was concentrated upon those ships which did the bulk of the work and suffered proportionately off Jutland Bank. It so happened that most of these ships which bore the brunt were here at the moment. I was told that since the battle no neutral eye had rested upon any of them; indeed, at no time since the war began have these regions been exactly frequented by touring neutrals.

I can testify that every one of the ships here is entirely repaired and ready for action. Only one ship of all those which suffered most and yet kept afloat, I was told, is not yet prepared to fight fifteen minutes after the call comes.

The position of the ships, as they lay moored in line with their comrades, was proof of this statement. If they have not been, their anchorages must have been elsewhere, for the fleet as I saw it is arranged so that all the ships start simultaneously and the long lines proceed to sea in battle array in their present order. The presence of lame ducks here and there in the lines would disarrange such a sailing schedule.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE PARTS THEY PLAYED

Story of an American in the War in Belgium

By ALAN HINSDALE

Albert Clarke, an American boy, when the great European war broke out, having a desire to take part in it, went to Canada, where he enlisted in a regiment of infantry and in due time was sent to Belgium. In a fight he was taken prisoner; and while being marched to the rear with a number of his comrades, his guard being inattentive, he managed to slip away. Just as he was passing out of sight of his captors he was seen, and they gave chase.

Clarke ran into a yard in the center of which stood a house. The first thing in his path that afforded a hiding place was a well. It struck him that no one would think of looking for a man in the bottom of a well. The arrangement for drawing water was a long pole, the bucket being at one end and a huge stone at the other. This enabled him to descend with less rapidity than if not partly counterbalanced by the stone, though he went down much faster than he would have chosen.

The other end of the balance pole being up in the air was a dead give away, so he emptied the bucket, let go his hold and it went up as fast as it had come down.

Clarke's pursuers, fortunately for him, did not reach sight of the well house till a few moments after the bucket had gone up. As he had hoped, they did not stop to look into the well, but continued on their way. But it soon occurred to Bert that if he had not jumped from the frying pan into the fire he had at least jumped from a German prison into cold water. Although the season was in the early summer the bath was by no means tepid.

All he could do was to get one foot on a stone on one side of the well and the other foot on the other side, stand there above the surface and wait for some one to come to the well for water. His life depended upon some one coming within a reasonable time, for if the arrival were put off too long he would either starve or be chilled to death. Looking up, he examined the circle of stone forming the well and saw that the surface was too smooth for him to climb. It was only at the lower part that the stones afforded a foothold.

Bert had been captured in the morning and escaped about noon. He had stood in his trying position for six hours when he was gladdened by the sound of a bucket striking the ground. In another moment the well bucket was lowered and filled. Bert would have climbed the rod connecting it with the balance pole, but his strength had gone out of him. So when the bucket came to the surface of the water he emptied it and held on to it for an ascent, doing what he could to lighten it by clutching here and there the circling wall.

When he reached the well house there was a shriek, and down he went again to the bottom. A girl, instead of drawing up a bucket of water, had drawn up a man, and the discovery was a great shock to her. She ran away from the well house, but presently, curiosity getting the better of her fright, she turned and looked back. There was the well, the bucket hanging over it, and silence.

It occurred to her that the man had returned to the bottom, and a man at the bottom of a well was not necessarily an object of terror. Then she realized the man's position. Lastly, she went back to the well house and, without daring to look over, called out:

"Who's there?"

Bert knew a little French and replied:

"Anglais soldat" (English soldier).

This helped matters amazingly. The girl was a Belgian and knew that the English were fighting for her country. Bert asked her in a mixture of French and English to lower the bucket and help him out. She did not understand him, but common sense suggested that this be done and done quickly. Down went the bucket again. Bert took hold of it and with difficulty was raised to the surface. Once there he took the precaution to catch hold of a support so that he would not go down a third time.

He was a pitiable spectacle, drenched and chilled as he was; indeed, just the object to excite the sympathy of a woman. She helped him out of the well house, and after she had assured him by French, English and pantomime that there were no German soldiers very near, he started with her to the house as fast as he was able, lest some enemy might see him, for there was the room of canvas all about him.

At the house was a woman—the girl's mother—and several children. The men of the household were all fighting for Belgium. After a few words of explanation the girl went to a cupboard and brought out a bottle. It was only wine, but Bert made up for its want of strength by drinking it all. Then the girl brought out some bread and cheese—there was no meat in Belgium—and the soldier consumed it ravenously. Meanwhile the mother lighted a fire on the hearth, and by its warmth his clothes were dried, though later other clothes that belonged to the men of the family were provided for him.

Bert did not feel very secure, for he was within the German lines and Germans were liable to come to the house at any moment. He was taken to the garret, where a mattress was placed on the floor behind a pile of discarded furniture, and on this bed he spent the night. In the morning he was at a loss to know whether to put on his khaki uniform or the citizen's clothes that had been provided for him. If he wore his uniform he would be recognized for a soldier; if he wore the citizen's clothes, though he might the better escape attention, if known to be an enemy he would be shot for a spy. He concluded to take the latter risk, and if confronted by enemies undertake to pass himself off for a member of the family that harbored him.

Several days passed without any Germans entering the house or Bert's seeing any chance whatever to go back to the British lines. During those few days he learned more French than he had ever learned before, though he had studied it in school. The girl who had rescued him—Jeanne was her name—he found very attractive. She resembled a Dutch girl, having light hair and complexion, with a rose in each cheek.

One day some German soldiers, stragglers, came to the house and demanded something to eat. But Jeanne saw them coming, and Bert escaped to the garret.

He finally got into trouble through politeness. Water was needed, and since Jeanne was not on hand to get it Bert insisted on going to the well for it. While drawing the water several German officers entered the grounds. It was too late to take to flight, and Bert decided to stand his ground. The officers approached him, and one of them asked for a drink of water. Bert accommodated him, trying the while to fix his own mind on something else than the frightful danger he was running, in order that he might preserve his equanimity.

One of the Germans spoke French and asked him what so lusty a fellow was doing at home when there was war in the land. Bert replied that he was the only man on the premises and had just married a young wife, who would not let him go. He gave this reason knowing that all the world sympathizes with a young married couple.

"Perhaps something of the wedding feast is left," said the officer, "and we may be favored with a bite."

"There can be no wedding feasts in this country now," replied Bert, "but such as we have we will give you."

He led the way to the house. Jeanne had reappeared, and she and her mother, seeing what had happened, pulled themselves together for any part they might be expected to play.

"Ach," said one officer to another in German on seeing Jeanne, "one can't blame the fellow for staying at home with such a pretty bride as that."

The German and French languages are both spoken in Belgium, and Jeanne understood perfectly what he said, and since he looked from Bert to her she knew that he referred to them. She blushed, which under the circumstances was the most natural thing for her to do. Besides, she inferred that she was to play the part of Bert's bride. She brought out the best there was in the larder—it was not much—and there was plenty of wine in the cellar.

The officers had evidently been on short rations, for they ate all that was set before them and drank one bottle of wine after another till they were quite mellow. Then Jeanne said to them:

"Herr officers, I have a request to make of you."

"What is that, pretty one?"

"I was obliged to be married without a trousseau. That is a terrible thing for a bride. Will you give me a pass to go to Paris to buy one?"

"Certainly you shall have a pass."

"One thing more I have to ask—that my husband be permitted to go with me."

"Ach! That is a different matter."

"Do you think a bride just married would consent to leave her husband? If he cannot go with me I will not go at all."

The officers discussed the matter between them, Jeanne persisting in her request till finally one of the officers, who seemed to have the highest rank and had drunk the most wine declared that so pretty a bride who had entertained them so well should have any boon she asked, and, calling for pen and paper, he wrote a pass for the two to go through the lines. Then, demanding a kiss of the bride, which was granted, he led the rest away.

Bert and Jeanne were left alone together. Bert stood looking at her with an expression of gratitude mingled with admiration. She had been playing the part of his wife and by so doing had prevented his being shot for a spy.

"My life is yours," said Bert. "Do with it as you will."

She dropped her eyes to the ground. Bert took her hand in his, and the two stood mute, she with averted face. Presently he said:

"I am a soldier, and if I succeed in reaching the British lines I must serve out my term of enlistment. When that ends, if I still live and I can get back here, I will come to you. My home is in that far country America, which you have heard about, and it has been so protected by oceans that there has been little or no war there. If I return there and you will go with me I will take you. In that case we will make a reality of what has been a pretense."

The response to this was more effective than if it had been spoken in words. Jeanne turned toward him, and her head sank on his breast.

Fatigue from Poisoned Blood

Sluggish action of the liver, kidneys and bowels leave impurities in the blood which render it poisonous. Poisoned blood is the cause of tired, languid feelings, as well as of headache, backache and bodily pains and aches.

By awakening the action of these filtering and excretory organs, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills thoroughly cleanse the system, purify the blood and cure such ailments as indigestion, biliousness, kidney derangements and constipation. 25 cts.

Ltitle Boy Nine Months Old HAD DYSENTERY

Dysentery is one of the worst forms of bowel complaint. The pains in the bowels become intense, the discharges occur with great rapidity, and are very often accompanied by blood, and the sufferer becomes very weak and languid.

Unless these discharges are checked, death may ensue in a very short time.

There is only one remedy to use in all cases of dysentery, and that is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It will cure when all other remedies fail.

Mrs. J. Leslie McKee, Redvers, Sask., writes: "I used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for my little boy when he was about nine months old. He was awfully bad with dysentery. I had not laid him down for three days and nights, only when his father took him for a few minutes. He had both the diarrhoea and vomiting. I had tried everything until my husband got "Dr. Fowler's, and three doses cured him."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the remedy you want. Don't take any other when you ask for it.

SIGNS OF KIDNEY TROUBLE.

In the early stages kidney troubles are known by backache and urinary disorders. Later come dropsy, stone, rheumatic pains and perhaps diabetes. But don't wait for these. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you in a few hours. Their thorough action on the liver, kidneys and bowels will clear away the pains and the aches and make you well again.

BAR GUESTS FROM BERLIN.

Bavarian Resorts Refuse to Entertain Prussian Visitors.

The difficulties confronting Germans wishing to go upon vacation trips continue to increase as the season advances and the usual exodus from Berlin has been reduced to very modest proportions, according to items appearing in the German press, which are summarized by London newspapers. It is asserted that in many hotels and restaurants of Bavaria the motto seems to be "No North German need apply," and that advertisements have been printed indicating that Berlin tourists are not welcome in the Bavarian Summer resorts and watering places. The chief reason for this unusual attitude is the necessity of conserving food supplies, but the London newspapers insist that the alleged profound dislike of the South German for the Prussian is a strong contributing cause.

Great irritation has been caused by this Bavarian boycott of Prussians, and the bad temper was brought to the boiling point a few weeks ago by the report that the Burgomaster of the Bavarian Summer resort of Ruhpolding has issued a "ukase," as the Berlin papers called it, forbidding the sale of bread and meat to Prussians. This "ukase" has since been annulled.

"In the middle of May I was passing through Aschaffenburg (Bavaria) on business, and picked up the menu card in a respectable hostelry, whereupon the waiting-maid putting the question:

"'Where are you from?'

"'Frankfurt-on-the-Main. Why?' I asked in turn.

"'Everything is off, was the waitress's retort.

"I was in haste, so I snatched up my hat and went to another restaurant that I knew, and there, too, I picked up the menu card. This time it was a waiter who put the same question to me, 'Where are you from?' 'Why, does it matter to you where I come from and whither I go?' I retorted. 'Yes, I must know if I am to bring you anything to eat.' 'From Frankfort-on-the-Main,' I replied. The waiter: 'For Prussians we have nothing to eat.' 'But I am in fact no Prussian. True I live in Berlin, but was born in Offenbach,' was my answer. 'Then you can have lunch.'"

The writer says it will be a long time before he goes again to this "enemy land" where hospitality is so little understood.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

MISS'S AND SMALL WOMAN'S MIDDY BLOUSE

By Anabel Worthington

No garment has ever scored any greater victory than the middy blouse, and, since women have learned to array themselves in cool and refreshing attire during the "sweltering days," it is really first in importance in the summer season, as much for the woman of slender, girlish figure as for the young girl.

To give a welcome, different touch to the middy blouse in the picture, the collar was made an original type and in contrasting goods, and the cuff on a full length sleeve in material to match was given a little novelty with a lapping end in pointed effect and a button to boast. Middy-like, of course, a pocket favors the left front; it is trimmed to match the collar.

The lower edge of the blouse may be turned up on the outside for a facing or turned underneath for a hem, as you wish.

You have ample choice for a duplicate of this design from drill, linen, madras, Indian Head, cotton poplin, or serge for cooler days in early fall.

The pattern of No. 7,873 is cut in sizes 14 to 20 years. To make in size 16 will require 2¾ yards of 36 inch material and ⅝ yard contrasting goods.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 15 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

Look and Feel Clean, Sweet and Fresh Every Day

Life is not merely to live, but to live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, look well. What a glorious condition to attain, and yet how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidney and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble, rheumatism; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store which will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

ALL SOUTH EASTERN TRANSYLVANIA TO BE ABANDONED

SERBS INFLICT SEVERE CHECK ON BULGARS

AUSTRIANS TO EVACUATE A LARGE PART OF TRANSYLVANIA

All South Eastern Part Will be at Mercy of Roumanians---Austrians Will Have to Shorten Lines---Bulgars Beaten in Severe Fighting on the Macedonian Front---Serbs Inflicting Heavy Losses on Them.

KING CONSTANTINE STILL IN GREECE

BERLIN, August 31.—The Austrian General Staff plans to evacuate all Southeastern Transylvania to the Roumanians in order to shorten the Austrian lines, the Austrian newspapers anounced to-day. An Austrian flotilla operating on the River Danube shelled and destroyed a Roumanian transport boat, port magazines and military establishment on the Lower Danube. Austrians captured two Roumanian tugs near Zimnica and two motor boats.

Bulgars Severely Checked By Serbs

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, Agpust 31.—The fighting is very severe all along the Macedonian front, says an Athens despatch to the Wireless Press, which adds that the Bulgarian regiments suffered a severe check at the hands of the Serbians on the Entente's left flank, and that the Bulgar losses are estimated at 15,000.

Rapid Developments In The Situation

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

ATHENS, August 31.—Rapid developments in the diplomatic situation here to-day make it probable that within forty-eight hours Greece will have abandoned the policy of neutrality in the war.

King Constantine will receive the French Minister to-day (Thursday), and the Russian and British Ministers shortly afterwards.

All staff officers on leave have been recalled for active service.

The above seems to indicate that King Constantine is still at the helm.

Germans Fired At An U. S. Steamer

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WASHINGTON, August 31.—The German Government in a note to the State Department to-day, admitted that a German submarine fired shots at the American steamer Oswego some weeks ago, because the steamer ignored the submarine's signal to halt.

German Surprise Attack Failed

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS (French Official), August 31.—The Germans attempted a bold stroke in the Parroy Forest in Lorraine last night, but were immediately thrown out of the French trench they had penetrated, it was officially announced to-day. The night was calm on the greater part of the front.

Another Enemy Drive in Trentino

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

ROME, August 30.—A new Austro-Hungarian offensive against the Italians in the Trentino was foreshadowed by a twenty-four hour artillery bombardment of General Cadorna's positions between the Adige and Brenta Rivers, reported by to-night's War Office statement. The report claims several minor successes for the Italians at various points of the line. The lull in the fighting around Goritz continues. The Italians straightened out their line on the Carso Plateau as a result of local actions. The statement follows:

"The hostile artillery bombarded our positions continuously between the Adige and the Brenta. They shelled Ala, Arsiero and Seghe.

"In the Fassa area our Alpini extended their occupation of the crest northeast of Cauriol, taking twenty-one prisoners, a trench mortar and numerous rifles. The enemy's artillery opened a heavy fire on Cauriol, which was effectively answered by ours.

"At the head of the Felizon Valley we brilliantly attacked and carried some strong trenches on the northern slopes of Punta de Forame and at the bottom of the valley. The enemy suffered heavily and left 117 prisoners, including three officers, in our hands.

"On the rest of the front there were desultory artillery actions. The enemy shelled Goritz, Vallisell and Oliviers intermittently.

"On the Carso small actions enabled us to straighten our line. Enemy aeroplanes bombed Alleghe and Lagon Manor, wounded a few persons and caused slight damage."

One hundred and eight "teacherages," corresponding in function to parsonages, have been established in the State of Washington to solve the problem of comfortable homes for teachers connected with the country

While the new skirts are not really narrow, they are straighter and, therefore, must be longer in order to give good lines, for a narrow skirt made as short as skirts were worn last season would not look well.

BUILDING HAS A FOUR INCH BEARING WALL

"SOME QUEER WALLS"

The City Council is very anxious that City Engineer R. H. Parsons, who is also vested with the duties of building inspector, keep a watchful eye on the building operations that are taking place at the corner of George and Hunter streets. The entire corner is being remodelled and will ultimately be occupied by the Royal Bank. The matter was brought up at last night's meeting of the committee of the Whole Council by Ald. Edgar, who said that a number of people had drawn his attention to the matter. City Engineer Parsons said that he was waiting to see the plans, which had not yet arrived from Montreal. In the meantime a permit had been issued to facilitate preliminary preparations. "There are some queer walls in the building," commented the City Engineer. The latter volunteered the information that the building boasted of at least one four inch wall. According to information in possession of some of the aldermen it is the intention of the construction company to tear out the present existing front and replace it with stone.

More Light.

Ald Stratton suggested that the Company be requested to illuminate the wooden archway which they have constructed on the street for people to pass under while the alterations are in progress. City Engineer Parsons promised to look into the matter. The Engineer was also asked to keep a close watch on the work and see that every precaution is taken to safeguard public interests.

ELIGIBLE MEN ARE GIVEN PLAIN WARNING

WINDSOR, August 30.—The Windsor and North Essex Agricultural Fair Association opened its fifth annual show at the grounds of the Racing Association here this afternoon under favourable auspices. Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works, delivered the opening address to a crowd of close to ten thousand people. He declared the Government was prepared to adopt any measures which might be necessary to provide the half-million men which Premier Borden had promised should be raised by Canada to aid the motherland, and while he did not think conscription would be resorted to until every other means had failed, he warned eligible men to be ready.

SERGT. F. THOMAS HAS GIVEN LIFE FOR EMPIRE'S CAUSE

Well Known Peterboro Non-Com. Killed in Action in France On August 21st---Left With Second Contingent Early in Autumn of 1914---News of Local Recruiting---General Military News.

Sergt. Fred Thomas, who left Peterborough in November, 1914 with the 21st Canadian Battalion has been killed in action. Official news to this effect was received from Ottawa this morning by his wife, residing on Brown street, the message stating that Sergt. Thomas made the supreme sacrifice on August 21st. The news will be received with great sorrow in Peterborough as Sergt. Thomas was widely and favourably known in this city where he had resided for fifteen years.

Sergt. Fred Thomas was one of two brothers, born in England who fought through the South African campaign with the Imperial Forces and who came to Canada immediately after that war. They took up residence here and married two Peterborough sisters, daughters of Mr. Jas. Booth of this city. Sergt. Thomas and his brother Quartermaster Sergt. Sam Thomas enlisted here together six weeks after war broke out, becoming members of the 21st Battalion. Before enlisting Sergt. Fred Thomas was employed as receiving clerk at the Canadian General Electric Company, a position he had held for two years, and previous to that time he was employed in the C.P.R. offices. In addition to his experience in South Africa, Sergt. Thomas had considerable Sergt. Thomas had considerable training in the Canadian militia having been a member of the 24th Field Battery and also of the 57th Regiment for some time.

Sergt. Thomas is survived by his wife and three children, one boy and two girls. Mrs. Thomas is a prominent member of the Soldiers Wives' and Mother's club and has done a great deal of patriotic work for the welfare of the boys at the front.

Valcartier Camp, Que., Aug. 28.—The baseball championship was easily won on Saturday by the All-star nine from the 146th Battalion, C.E.F. when they defeated the nine from the 199th Battalion, C.E.F., in the inter-brigade final, by a score of 12 to 8.

It was not an unexpected victory for the 146th and honor for the Ontario brigade for the champions won all nine games they played. Barry in the season, Lieut.-Col. R. G. Stewart, of the 43rd, D.C.O.R., Ottawa, and brigadier of the 3rd Brigade (Ontario), offered a prize of $50 to the battalion winning the baseball championship for the brigade. Home and home games, for this prize, were played. All were won by the 146th, and the brigadier's cheque followed. These games were played on a diamond on the brigade headquarters grounds.

The 140th were champions of the 1st Brigade the 150th of the 4th, and the 199th of the 2nd. The two first teams were met by the 146th in a neutral diamond, adjoining the Y.M.C.A. and were easily cleaned up by overwhelming scores. With the victories went some loose change, to the victors, put up by the backers of the respective teams.

On Saturday half the troops in camp were on hand to see the final played. In the first inning, the 146th rolled up four runs. The last half of the fourth, the score was 6-6. In the sixth, the Irish Rangers (199th, of Montreal, were leading by one. They added another in their seventh by scoring two again, making the score a tie. By this time the betting was even, with plenty of money changing hands. In the eighth the Irishmen failed to score, but the 146th had better luck by making four and they held that lead until the finish.

The Kingston Whig Says:

It is learned from an authoritative source that the Department of Militia is considering the advisability of asking Queen's University to organise a Kiltie Battalion, to be included in the new battalions authorised for this division.

Several of the men prominently identified with Queen's held a meeting last night to discuss preliminary arrangements. This morning The Standard was told that no action was taken as the men attending the meeting felt that it would be unwise to make any definite arrangements until the Department of Militia had officially asked the university to take the matter of organization in hand. It is understood, however, that the university officials are willing to assume the task if the government so desires.

That the organization of a "Wee Laddie" battalion would be popular is certain. Kilts seem to have an individuality which fascinates and there are many young men who would eagerly don the sporran and skirt. That the battalion could be recruited to strength in short order is the general opinion.

Barrietield War Camp, Aug. 30. — Ottawa has found it necessary at last to define strictly what shall constitute uniform for all branches of the service, and for all grades in the service. Gradually innovations have been creeping in until the dress has developed into one of individual taste and choice. The trench cap, which was the headgear of the officer, who had returned from the front where the regular cap had been battered in the close quarters of the trenches, has become common among officers of the C. E. F. and even departmental corps, and home service units. The new regulations put an end to this, as well as to many other deviations from the proper dress of the C.E.F. In some cases it is almost impossible to tell the difference between an officer and a non-com., the same leggins are worn in many cases, and when raincoats are worn, the difference could not be distinguishd. If the new regulations are enforced here, it will make a great change.

Mrs. E. J. Downey, 183 Edinburgh street of the Soldiers Wives' and Mother's Club has received the following letter:—

Dear Mrs. Downey,—I wish to thank you very much for the socks which I received from you last week. They were very acceptable and are very comfortable in this hot weather being thinner than the usual socks we get.

Peterborough ladies certainly have been very generous with their gifts to the soldiers and I can assure you we appreciate them immensely.

There are quite a number of boys from Peterborough in the battery (26th Canadian Battery) but of course you will know that I didn't join them until they were in England, transferring in a draft from one of the Alberta Batteries.

Thanking you again for your kindness.

I am yours sincerely,
S. C. ROBSON (No. 87282)

President Hopes To Avert Strike

Tells Senate Leaders That Adoption of Eight Hour Proposal Would Prevent Threatened Tie Up on Labour Day.

CRACKS HIS WHIP

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31. — Continuing his driving tactics to force Congressional action that will avert the threatened railroad strike, President Wilson to-day again swung his executive whip over the House and Senate leaders. Appearing in person at the Capitol, he told the members that information was at hand, showing the strike could be prevented by immediate adoption of the eight-hour proposal suggested to the joint session of Congress on Tuesday. He requested the passage of legislation covering the application of an eight hour day to railroad operations be pushed through by Saturday. President Wilson looked worn and haggard as he drove to the Capitol. Upon leaving the Capitol the President said: "I have just been keeping in touch with things to see if they are moving. And they are moving. I think we are progressing satisfactorily."

PAVED STREETS ARE BADLY MARKED BY TRACTION ENGINES

Chief of Police Thompson Will Prosecute Engines Have a Detrimental Effect on the Pavement

WILL ENFORCE LAW

Action will be taken against the owners of traction engines who persist in driving them over the paved streets of the city. A meeting of the committee of the Whole Council was held last evening when it was decided to ask the Chief of Police to enforce the law, respecting the operation of tractors within the city limits. This year a clause was introduced into the Provincial statutes vesting in the various municipalities the right to restrict the operation of traction engines within the boundaries of the municipality. A few days ago a traction engine was driven past the police station and some of the aldermen were curious to know why action was not taken to make an example of the offender. City Solicitor G. N. Gordon volunteered to take the matter up if it were the wish of the Council. The aldermen decided to delegate that responsibility to the Chief Police. It will be up to City Solicitor Gordon to represent the city when the case finds its way into police court.

As it is, several of the city's streets have been badly marked up and the effect on the pavement is anything but beneficial.

High Jumpers Will Be Here

Horses Will Compete for $100 Purse At the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition

Arrangements have just been completed with a large party of horse owners of Cobourg, to bring a band of ten high jumping horses to Peterborough to participate in a jumping contest for $100 in purses.

This will be a most novel attraction for the 1916 Industrial Exhibition, as hundreds of people who love to see a good horse in action will make it a point to see these ten good jumpers complete.

The directors feel indebted to the owners, who are bringing their valuable mounts so far, from pure love of the sport.

In England where a hunting horse has to be an expert at taking a fine barred fence as only a frequent incident in the day's fun, the high jumper is not uncommon, but in Canada the hurdle facing equines are so few as to be a decidedly unique attraction. Later on the hour at which the horses will jump will be announced.

COUNCIL MEETING TO-MORROW NIGHT

Regular Monthly Budget of Business to be Disposed of—Council Will go to Toronto on Tuesday

As Monday next is a holiday the regular monthly meeting of the City Council will be held on Friday evening next when a budget of general business will be disposed of. On Tuesday next the City Council will journey to Toronto for the purpose of conferring with the Provincial Board of Health, respecting the proposed sewerage disposal plant. On that day the Provincial Board has agreed to deal with the matter and the Council as well as the long suffering township are excepting something definite in the way of a decision.

An Important Announcement Will Be Made Shortly

Every Person Who is in Any Way Affected by Kidney Trouble Should Look for It

It is the duty of every person to conserve their health and advantage should be taken at the very earliest opportunity, when any symptom presents itself to one to see that it is corrected.

One of the most prevalent ailments is kidney trouble, and, which if not taken in time leads to serious consequences. An announcement will be made in Tuesday's paper of a remedy that you can easily secure and if it does not prove effective in your case, your money will be refunded to you. Watch for the announcement in Tuesday's paper.

MR. HARRY RUSH TOOK MAGISTRATE'S PLACE

Among the absentee court officials these days are the city and county magistrates and County Crown attorney Hatton. Mr. Dumble is fishing and enjoying the late summer warmth at his cottage "Ballyraggit," Stony Lake, Mr. O. A. Langley is in Toronto, and Mr. Hatton is sequestered at Jack's Lake. However, Mr. Harry Rush was called in this morning to substitute in the police court. A Swede by the name of Isaacson was on a super-cargo of "dizziness" last night, creating more or less disturbance among his fellow boarders. The police report that he has been hitting it rather frequently while the hitting is possible, but in reply to Mr. Rush's objurgations and threats he promised to follow the water rout. THANKS TO THE KAISER.

We don't have occasion to be grateful to Kaiser Wilhelm for much. But we have to thank him for an eloquent expression of his opinion as to the outcome of the war; of his feeling that he is in a mighty tight corner. When the Rumanian tiger jumped upon his back, blue funk seized him and he dismissed his chief of staff, and tumbled the heads of thirty of his generals into the basket. This was not wise, but one can't expect wisdom of action from a man frightened out of his senses.

It is unjust on his part to visit displeasure upon a chief of staff and generals who are not to blame, who have done their best. His generals are as good as his soldiers, and it wouldn't be fair to put the blame on them, either. They have done their best; have fought with bravery; but they fought against better soldiers, better commanded, better armed—with a just cause and big guns. The Kaiser's petulant action has given the lie afresh to the German fable of the invincibility of the Germans. The military machine has had that slip; German strategy has, and the day of vengeance and Nemesis is ripening for the dawn. The Kaiser falls back upon Von Hindenburg, the idol of the empire, but Hindenburg won't save the situation. It will have to be shown that this idol has feet of clay, as he has shown more than once since the war began. He won't defeat the enemy with which he won easy honours—a comparatively disorganised and ill-equipped Russian army—but a new Russian army, equipped to the last button, plentifully supplied with munitions and guns, in full fighting fettle from recent victory—and still going strong. The Kaiser's action in regard to his generals cheers us more than it will help him and his failing cause. We propose a vote of thanks to the Kaiser for this new personal evidence of how desperate he thinks the case has become.

FOREST FIRE ARSON.

We have not joined the cry against the Government, dubbing them the "Tories of Queen's Park," but it will have to come if the Government does not wake up to its responsibility in giving better protection of our forests from fires. The last terrible forest fire must has not, apparently, stirred them to action. It may be pleaded that the Government has not had time to do something. It has had what seems to be ample time since the terrible forest fire break-out of 1911—five years ago. If the government had started then, as competent authorities think they should have done, the terrible loss of life and immense destruction of property would not have taken place this summer, at least to the extent that obtained. The Ontario Government had six years of tenure to prepare against the fire of 1911; it has had eleven years to provide against the sweeping fires of 1916; and yet it has done nothing practical to meet the situation. The well-deserved criticism of the Government on this score does not come from partisan sources, but from a non-political organization—the Canadian Forestry Association. This association has issued extracts of press comment from more than a score of papers of both shades of politics. The criticisms contain suggestions more or less practical, but it is for the Government, which has the power, to adopt and apply a policy that will involve interest in the protection of our forest resources, and the lives and property of our settlers sufficient to cut a scheme. This is the duty of the Government as trustee of provincial interests, and because the resources and the power exist a workable and practicable system of fire protection into effect. The press of both politics, instead of squabbling at cross purposes about the meaning of the South-West Toronto bye-election, now a dead issue, had better get upon common ground, and spur the Government to action in the interest of taking measures that will make reasonably impossible the recurrence of the calamitous forest fires of 1911 and 1916, instead of by doing nothing, virtually inviting a recurrence. If the Government does not speedily take action, it will, in respect of past and possible incendiarism, in the shape of forest fires, if it has a sense of its responsibility, have to plead guilty to a charge of constructive arson.

THE RAILWAY STRIKE.

The United States is suffering from the effect of a condition and a possibility that has, and promises to leave, a paralyzing effect upon the industrial and commercial and social life of the country—the presidential election, a fact, and the strike of railway employees that may become a fact in a few hours, at least on Labour Day, September 4th. The strike of two million railway employees will create conditions of helplessness and inactivity, and economical and social disturbance, only a little less serious than the effects of war upon countries where war is being waged. That is, while the situation lasts, for it will not be allowed to last. Something will have to be done to put an end to the tie-up and restore normal traffic conditions. When the strike comes something will have to be done, and there should be enough business wisdom, sufficient spirit of conciliation or justice, whichever the case demands—possibly a little of both—and enough government resource, enough statesmanship to devise preventive measures that will avert the strike and all its disastrous consequences.

A remedy will have to be provided when the strike comes, a little loss of profit on the part of the railways; a little yielding to the demands of the railway workers, would seem to be better than permitting a tie-up of railway business, which will involve not only incalculable loss to the railway owners, to the two million railway workers and to 98 millions of people, whose daily life, whose business depends upon normally continuous transportation facilities. And, after all this loss, a settlement of some kind will have to come. If an advance settlement will not be made it will probably be due to lack of authoritative legislation. To-day's despatches say that the strike situation has changed from one of pessimism to one of hope. If the United States had a law similar to the Lemieux Act there would be better prospects for cooler counsels to prevail, and the possibility of rupture would be greatly lessened, if not, as has happened in scores of cases in Canada, be entirely removed and mutually satisfactory settlement arrived at. Canada has an interest in the matter. There is such an interlocking of United States and Canadian railway lines and traffic arrangement that a strike across the border could not help affecting us very seriously. The United States, with all their great ability and political machinery, have not, in the statesmanship applied to legislation, emasured up to the achievement of Canada, in providing against putting it in the power of two million workers and a few railway magnates to impose upon the country the conditions of anarchy that must ensue upon a general strike.

SURELY NOT NEW CALEDONIA!

The Deutschland was constructed for the purpose of breaking the British blockade and bringing home a cargo of nickel, desperately needed to make more guns for killing the British and her Allies. There are only two sources of nickel worth considering. One is Canada. The other is New Caledonia. New Caledonia is an island in the Western Pacific Ocean, 7000 miles east of Queensland, Australia. It belongs to France. Now from which of these sources came the nickel which the Deutschland took on board at Baltimore?—Montreal Herald.

LET THE IRISH SETTLE IT.

It is clear that this Irish question can now only be disposed of by the Irish themselves and in Ireland. Let the government invite Sir Edward Carson and Mr. Redmond to go to Ireland and settle it. We are convinced that they could do so. But let Mr. Asquith remember that neither they nor anyone else can settle it if their agreement is to be subject to Lord Lansdowne's veto. So far as Ireland and Irish affairs are concerned, Lord Lansdowne and his friends are living in the seventeenth century, and there is no prospect of ever bringing their antiquated ideas up to date. It is preposterous that these people, who represent nobody but themselves, should be allowed any longer to stand between Ireland and a measure of self-government such as every other portion of the British Empire enjoys —London Telegraph.

The Bearing of Woman's War Work Upon Woman Suffrage Question

It cannot be denied that the movement favorable to the granting of the suffrage to women has of late made remarkable progress. What but a few years ago and regarded as the fad of a few eccentric people is to-day, in all parts of the United States and Canada, and to some extent in Great Britain, taking a place among the recognised problems of the time that have to be met. In England it will be contended that the movement has been injured rather than aided by the foolish, and in some instances criminal, conduct of the militant women. On the other hand, the women will be able to say, with some truth, that the conduct so severely reprehended was the most available means of arousing the British people to a sense of the importance of the question. The attention of the public certainly was obtained, but the attitude of the majority of the British people was changed from one of mild doubt to one of confirmed hostility to the whole movement. That hostility has, however, been much softened by the better conduct of the militant women since the war broke out, and by the splendid service that British women generally are rendering in almost all departments of affairs. That the suffrage movement in the Mother Country will at the close of the war take on a new shape is quite certain and that some concession to it will be made in the early future is altogether probable. This much was virtually admitted by Mr. Asquith in a recent speech.

On this side of the Atlantic the movement has made much progress, the women in a number of States having obtained the right to vote. Now the question is thrusting itself into national politics. But a little while ago the leaders of the great parties would have smiled at any proposal to treat women suffrage as one of the serious problems requiring recognition and consideration. Now, all the great parties—Republicans, Progressives and Democrats—have deemed it expedient to give the question recognition and a considerable degree of approval in their platforms. Undoubtedly they have been influenced in this direction by the fact that the franchise is in the hands of the States and that in the States where the vote has already been granted the women are numerous enough to prove an important factor in the Presidential election. The Progressives have been the most unqualified in their approval of women franchise, their platform declaration, unanimously made, reading as follows:—

"We believe that the women of the country, who share with men the burdens of government in times of peace and make equal sacrifice in time of war, should be given the full political right of suffrage both by States and Federal action".

Excepting that of the Progressives, the women suffrage planks in the party platforms are somewhat weak and evasive. Mr. Hughes has endeavored to make amends for this, as respects the Republicans, by a more pronounced statement. But the fact that all the parties have deemed it necessary to make some declaration on the subject marks a distinct advance in the movement an dindicates that further progress may be looked for.

In Canada movements of this kind make slower progress than in the Western United States. But here the women's part in the war is having an influence upon public opinion, and there is everywhere a disposition to treat the demand for "votes for women" with a gravity that has not always been accorded to it in the past. Both prohibition and women suffrage have undoubtedly received much impetus from the war.—Journal of Commerce.

ITALIAN MURDERED AT SAULT STE. MARIE

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., Aug. 31.—With two bullet holes in the head, the lifeless form of Rocco Scalso now lies in Simpson's Morgue, this city, while his alleged slayer, Charles Bagnato, alias Pasquato Bagnati, still remains at large.

The crime, which is thought to have been the outcome of a quarrel, was perpetrated at the edge of a wood on the outskirts of the northwestern part of the city shortly before 9 o'clock last night. The weapon used was a 38-calibre revolver from which two shots were fired both of which reached their mark.

650 CHILDREN AT CLOSING OF KING EDWARD PLAYGROUND

The success of the King Edward school playgrounds during the past two months was amply illustrated at yesterday's closing exercises, when over six hundred and fifty children and seventy adults gathered for the last gambols. Many expressions were heard of the efficient work of the directors, Miss Dora Smith and Mr. Pinmuot, and parents were unanimous in hoping that they would return for next summer's work.

LEGAL FIGHT OVER ORDERS FOR LIQUORS

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

TORONTO, Aug. 31.—A big legal fight is looming up as the time draws near when the Ontario Temperance Act will go into force. The question to be settled will be as to the right of liquor dealers to fill orders placed with agents outside the Province from stock kept within the boundaries of Ontario, or in other words, to make direct deliveries to customers.

In the event of the court ruling that such a transaction is legitimate the result will be that the liquor shops will still be able to remain in business, and that without having to pay a license fee, as the law now stands, providing all orders are placed with agents located outside the Province.

OWNERSHIP OF LAND

Puts a man upon a business and financial footing which nothing else can do. Such being the case, should not every wage earner be ambitious enough to buy one or more of my Western Ave. lots near May's school and all south end factories, right in the way of the city's most rapid growth; certain to increase in value as the city grows south and west, which all know it is doing. My lots are priced under value, $150 to $225 for inside lots, average size 30 x 125 ft. Perfect lots and perfect title. No taxes this year and no interest until March, 1917. Terms, $10 down and $5 monthly, with assistance to build when $100 is paid. This makes it easy for a man to own his home. When the war is over, thousands will come here, and rents will be very high. A wise man will accept my offer and do so now.

Big discount for all cash paid.

The Right Time.

The right time to reach the members of the family is when they are at home, and the right way to reach them is through the advertising columns of the paper that goes into the homes. There are other methods of advertising that enjoy a certain transitory popularity, because they are new or novel, but the oldest, wisest and most successful advertisers tie their faith to the home newspaper. When people are away from their homes, there are a thousand things to divert their attention, but an advertisement read in the quiet of the family circle will be read and remembered.

AMERICAN TEACHERS RETURN FROM SYRIA

Messrs. Butler and Hoffman Traveled Two Months from Beirut to New York

Journey Through the Holy Land Convinced Them That the Turks Were Kind to Prisoners.

Clarence Butler of Grand Rapids, Mich., and William Hoffman of Columbus, Ohio, instructors at the American College at Beirut, Syria, for the last three years, returned on the Holland-American liner Ryndam from Beirut, having made a land journey of more than 3,000 miles via Damascus, Jerusalem, Tarsus, Constantinople, Sofia, Budapest, Vienna, and Berlin to Rotterdam. The trip from Beirut to New York occupied two months.

On a part of their long journey they were accompanied by British officers who had been captured at Kut-el-Amara by the Turks. At Tarsus Mr. Hoffman lent a tablecloth to the Turkish Military Governor, who was giving a luncheon in honour of the British commander o fthe garrison at Kut-el-Amara, and who wanted to do the thing in Western style. The Turks do not use table linen, Mr. Hoffman said.

Captain Tipton of the British Army Aviation Corps, who rode with Messrs. Hoffman and Butler from Jerusalem almost to Constantinople, told them that the Turks had treated the captured officers well and had given to them every comfort they had for themselves. The captured "Tommies" had received the same rations as the Turkish soldiers with a double allowance of mutton with their rice, as the Mohammedans are not great eaters of meat. Every time the train stopped on their journey in Syria a Turkish officer would come to the car and inquire in Turkish: "Where is the prisoner?"

Part of Beirut Is Closed.

"Then Captain Tipton would rise to his feet," Mr. Hoffman went on to say, "and exclaim in English, 'I am here!' The Turkish officer then would raise his hand in military salute, which was returned politely by the British captain, and that was all the ceremony. The British officer had given his parole before starting on the journey to the Turkish capital that he would not attempt to escape, and that was sufficient for the Turks, who allowed him to travel independently.

"He told us that he was flying over the Turkish lines near Kut-el-Amara when a shot went through his petrol tank and he was forced to descend within the enemy's lines, but he managed to disable his aeroplane before he was captured. The Captain told us that the railroad from Jerusalem toward the Suez Canal had been constructed as far as Beersheba."

Mr. Butler said that all the import and export trade with Beirut had ceased because there were no more ships calling there.

"We went by train to Damascus on June 26," he continued, "and stayed there a week to get a passport from Djemal Pasha, the Military Governor, which carried us right through to Constantinople. From Damascus we traveled by rail, passing the Sea of Galilee to Jerusalem, where there was another delay of five days. We found that all the hotels, inside and outside the walls, had been converted into hospitals for wounded brought in from the fighting in the desert toward the Egyptian frontier.

"There were no pilgrims in Jerusalem and no Jews so far as we could discover, as the majority of them had been driven out of Palestine shortly after Turkey entered the war. Those who remained were converted to the Moslem faith and retained their lands and other property. There is very little business in and around Jerusalem, and the majority of the men in the streets are soldiers. Food was expensive, but there was no shortage

Turks Kind to Prisoners.

"The journey from Jerusalem to Constantinople occupied two weeks, and was made entirely by rail, except an eight-hour trip over the Taurus Mountain in a German automobile, and a carriage ride over another range of mountains near Smyrna that I do not know the name of. At different points along the railroad journey we had to step on account of cars filled with Government stores catching fire, and it was rumoured that these accidents occurred through the Armenian locomotive engineers seeking revenge for the killing of their people.

"The Turks appeared to treat their prisoners with great kindness wherever we met them.

"Our journey from Constantinople to Berlin took ten days instead of forty-eight hours under normal conditions. The authorities would not permit us to go through Serbia, but sent us through Bulgaria to Sofia, and then we had a day's ride on the Danube.

"The Bulgarians were anxious that the Roumanians should not enter the war, as they were anxious to retain the territory they had captured from the Serbians. The food was cheaper and more pletiful in Sofia than it was in Budapest, Vienna or Berlin, and the officials were not so strict.

"Dr. William M. Keith of Roberts College at Constantinople accompanied us from that city to Berlin and helped us out considerably at the frontier stations, as he had set the broken arm of a Turkish General just before leaving, and in gratitude the General had given to him a special passport."

Mr. Butler said the Germans were strict in their examination, especially as to books and all printed matter carried by travellers in their baggage. The Turkish authorities did not appear at all worried about the revolt of the Arabs at Mecca, and said they would attend to them when the war in Europe was over.

A great Help on a Busy Day

ONCE a week at least there is a big day centering around the kitchen range. The boiler takes up a lot of room, and there is the dinner to cook —because no woman wants to serve "wash-day dinners."

The range should take care of both the dinner and the washing. And if you have a Pandora, it will.

Set the boiler on the long way of the Pandora —not on top, but right down in the pot holes That leaves two of the hot front holes free, for cooking and at the same time keeps the boiler on the boil. Should you have to add coal to the fire, you can do so without taking off the lids or disturbing your cooking.

This is the sort of range every woman should have—one that saves her time on busy days. It is almost as important as the saving of coal for which the Pandora is famous.

McClary's Pandora Range

Before you invest in a new range investigate the Pandora. If you would like to know why the Pandora gives a lifetime of perfect service, why it saves coal, why it saves time, we will be glad to place the reasons clearly explained in your hands. The Pandora has a glass oven door, a white enamel removable reservoir, wonderfully smooth working grates and dozens of features that are illustrated in our new booklet, "The Magic of the Pandoras" You may secure one by mailing the coupon to the factory.

Iowa Teacher Finds Fortune At the Beach

ROCHESTER, Aug. 30.—A "grinder," if you know anything at all about the circus and carnival business, is an individual who stands outside the show and barks loudly and huskily, or "lectures" properly and politely about the sterling attractions to be seen upon the inside for the small sum of whatever-it-may-be.

Heretofore this field has been left to the members of the sterner sex, if you know what I mean.

But kindly permit us to introduce to you to-day Miss Hannah Dautoff.

Hannah started out in the world twenty-two years ago to be a school teacher. Her poor but honest parents sent her to the Iowa State Normal school and Hannah did right smart.

The Fatal Moment.

Miss Dautoff taught school in Cedar Rapids for a year, and when summer came she went to Far Rockaway to spend her glad vacations, far from the books of Plato and Socrates.

It fas while she was in Far Rockaway that Miss Dautoff came upon the Fatal Moment. You know how it is Down on the Mall or the Strand, or whatever they call the main stem in Far Rockaway, was a very high-class educational institution.

"The Mummy of Old King Bamesis."

That was the name of it. Two professors, with white vests on and wearing Moose buttons, owned the old king, and he was stretched out on a slab mounted in pretty red velveteen.

For the small sum of a dime, ten cents, any passerby might enter the enclosure—"the pit" the show folk call it—and take a squint at the poor old king, lying there cold and still.

The only sorrow of the two owners of the king was that no passerby seemed sufficiently interested to deposit the necessary dime and visit his majesty.

Several polite lecturers, including two professionals, a cook out of work, a newspaper editor who had been on a "party" and lost his job, and a medicine show actor had taken turns in barleying the dear public. But the public refuses rudely to be parleyed out of dimes to visit Rameses.

Enter the School Ma'am.

She was impressed.

Who could blame her? She came from Iowa Falls, Ia., and it was the first Egyptian king she had ever seen. The only kings she has glimpsed were those dealt at the Saturday afternoon whists of the Ladies' Progressive Whist and Social club.

The two learned professors who owned the king finally became discouraged, and they sold poor old Ram to Miss Dautoff for $75 of her hard-earned money.

Ordinarily this would have been a mean trick, for there is a factory in Cambridge, Mass., where you can buy all kinds of dead kings with the velveteen slab, and a 12 by 20 banner thrown in, for $30, half cash, half C. O. D.

But Miss Dautoff, being from Iowa, didn't know.

So Miss Dautoff turned her king show into a very high-class exhibition indeed, and boosted the ante from a dime to two-bits. It was a streak of genius, for it attracted the e-lite of Far Rockaway. And when the September month waned—when the frost was on the pumpkin, as you might say—Miss Dautoff stored her king away and decided to stay in the vicinity of the Big Town, where $1,100 could be made in five weeks with a musty old papier mache figure.

Not that our heroine knew it was a fake in the beginning; not at all. But she, coming from the state where frugal farmers fritter away no coin made the best of the situation.

Her scholarly lecture in front of the pit of the dead Rameses made the boardwalk visitors blink; it was the brow stuff that emanated from Miss Dautoff's ruby lips that the yokels yielded for; they didn't care whether Ram was made out of papier-mache or was the real fromage.

HOW EASY IT'S DONE.

So you see how easy it was for Miss Dautoff.

This was in the summer and fall of 1914.

Last season the Iowa school-ma'am made her debut as a regular "grinder" in front of the ornate "Streets of Cairo in Luna park at Coney Island. Visitors will remember her.

Tall, with wavy hair, bright eyes, and the gift of gab that has made empires fall and builded 'em up again.

To-day, in the uniform of a vivandiere, you'll see her hypnotizing 'em in front of the Rostock Wild Animal arena.

Here is where her Iowa State Normal school stuff comes in rich again. She knows all about the bounding antelope of the Andes; the Nubian lion of the jungle; the saber-toothed tiger of Tangiers and other pets that cavort "on the inside."—New York Review."

A young fellow was looking over a fence watching a girl milk a cow in an open field, when suddenly he observed a young and excited bull, with his head lowered and tail cocked high in the air, rushing madly toward her. The youth called out to warn her on the approaching danger, but she just glanced at the bull and continued calmly to milk the cow.

Still the infuriated animal rushed toward the dauntless girl, and then, when it was almost upon her, it galloped away to the farther side of the meadow.

The young fellow now ventured to ask the girl how she knew the bull would not touch her.

"Oh," was the gentle reply, "this cow's his mother-in-law."

RECRUITING IN MONTREAL

Some Complaint Made as to Methods Used by Some Soldiers.

MONTREAL, Que., Aug. 26.—Recruiting disturbances have been increasing in frequency recently, but none has had serious consequences so far. While some of the rows have undoubtedly been due to French-Canadian hostility to recruiting, the soldiers have not always been as polite as they might be. Place d'Armes, which is in the centre of the French-Canadian business district, has been the scene of many of the encounters, French-Canadian Nationalists starting opposition meetings, which, naturally, led to disturbances.

The most exciting of these was a few days ago, when the Irish-Canadian Rangers meeting was dispersed by the police after a disturbance which seemed likely to lead to bloodshed. Since then, however, Place d'Armes has been declared out of bounds for recruiting meetings, and several of the Irish Rangers engaged in the fracas have been sent to Valcartier.

Recruiting methods have been far from tactful in many instances lately, soldiers buttonholing civilians and peremptorily demanding that they give their reasons for not doing in khaki. These methods do not meet with the approval of the business men any more than they do that of the National French, and the military authorities show a disposition to punish soldiers who exceed the limits.

After a lull of a few days, recruiting appears to be picking up again lately, and the last few days have seen a number of men poin the local regiments.

BRITISH SUBS FAR OUT-CLASS THE GERMAN

As war broke out in Europe there were two arms of military service practically untried and only theoritical planned—submarine war fare and aerial war fare. Immediately, there were numberless predictions. On Germany's side there were statements to the effect that their subs would soon destroy the British navy and their seps would soon wreck and devastate most of England. But England has captured many German subs and suffered only negligible loss to her navy, while the whole German merchant fleet has been swept from the seven seps and her once powerful navy is held rusting in the Kiel Canal where it was driven like a whipped cur th efirst time it dared look from its hiding place, an dthe seps are yet straining every effort to do serious damage, with regular and consistent failure.

We have heard much about the German sub, especially since the Deuchland's trip. But, England, as usual, has said little of her own. As a matter and rapidly getting more numerous. England now has subs, considerably larger and more powerful than the best of the boasted German boats. Her latest and largest, fully equipped with a wireless outfit of five hundred or more miles reduits.

So, here again, the inherent power of the British Empire is clearly shown. It seems that there is nothing that she cannot do when she is once aroused—in two years time, with her allies, she has outclassed the Hun's toiling preparation of forty years, in every line of military endeavor. The end is not far off.

Heavy Eating a Lost Art, Louis of the Waldorf Says

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Regarding a recent article on the Majestic hotel having special menus for those adipose persons who wanted to eat well and yet become less weightier, Edouard Panchard, the chef of the McAlpin said that every waiter in the hotel has a printed slip with suggestions to customers. He believes that most men in the habit of dining in a hotel rather like the idea of receiving suggestions regarding what they should eat from their favourite waiter.

"Not every person who is fat needs to diet," said Mr. Panchard. "To diet is simply to eat plain food, and there are many who adhere to those dishes selected by their physicians. There are others who get along nicely on a half diet, being careful to mix their edibles in a good proportion and thus avoiding becoming fatter than they really want to be. In summer the really stout man becomes extremely careful. He knows that farinacious foods are not good for him, and sticks to salades and fish and chicken. The knowledge as to what is good for a fat man is pretty general nowadays. Now and again he drops off the proper food wagon. But he regrets it so much that he does not do it often."

Louis Gremer—known as Louis of the Waldorf—Oscar's chief assistant, says he believes that most persons are on a diet, the fat man seeking to become thin and the thin man seeking to be more like the fat man.

"I have observed, said Louis, "that Americans eat less and less. They have discovered that they overdid their eating, and now most of them are pretty careful. You notice it principally in the morning. The heavy breakfast seems to be a thing of the past. There are those who indulge only in a cereal and fruit, and often at luncheon we have men who stick to a bowl of milk and crackers or a plate of soup and rolls."

The Ernie Marks Stock Company

Mr. Turner, manager of the Grand Opera House, has again secured a treat for the theatre going public of Peterborough in being able to secure the supreme favourites of the stage, The Ernie Marks Stock Company, for an engagement of three nights, commencing Monday, Sept. 4. In the last appearance of this popular Stock Co., Mr. Ernie Marks demonstrated the fact that he had lost none of the skill which made him famous in this city on the occasion of his several other appearances production of all standard plays. Mr. Marks ranks with the very best. He does not spare expense, but tries to give the public the play it wants. The plays he produces are expensive productions and the casts are unusually large, giving complete productions of all standard plays. Mr. Marks, a clever comedian, is a creator of laughter and thrills, and the admiration of the general public is testified by the round of applause his appearance throughout each entire performance receives. Miss Kitty Marks, a well known dramatic star, dainty and fascinating, by common consent achieves supreme triumph in each role she portrays. Her style of delivery and wonderful personality win her many friends and increase her popularity. Mr. Marks, a rare judge of dramatic art, considers Miss Kittie Marks the most efficient leading woman who has ever appeared in his Stock Company. The other members of the present company measure up to a high standard of excellence and are fully capable of giving a representative performance, and there is no reason why these popular performers should not make a big hit. They work well together and are letter perfect in their respective roles. The play selected for the opening of the Ernie Marks Stock Company's, Limited, engagement here, "Why Girls Leave Home," is one of the best ever produced by Mr. Marks, and the increased attendance at each performance throughout the circuit shows that the patrons appreciate the company's efforts to give them their best. "Why Girls Leave Home" is an up-to-date comedy drama that has scored a big success in New York and is sure to go big here. Miss Kitty Marks, in the title role, is exceptionally sweet, and proves herself a real leading woman. Her poise is excellent and her acting wins superlative praise. There will be 3 different performances of the Ernie Marks Stock Co. present engagement. Prices are 10c., 20c. and 30c. Reserved seats on sale at Grand Opera House.

Bold Statement in Berlin Paper Casts Slur on Kitchener

Urges Readers to Endure the Name for Four Months, When Steps Will be Taken to Have it Changed Back to Berlin

BERLIN, Ont., Aug 31.—The Ontario Government has alienated the German vote of the province, according to Tuesday's issue of the Berliner Journal, as the result of the order-in-council to change the name of this city from Berlin to Kitchener, following closely upon the enactment of the Ontario temperance act, which comes in force on September 16.

The paper predicts that there will be a reckoning day coming for the Government when the German vote of the province will show its disapproval of its recent legislation.

The Journal urges its readers to endure the name Kitchener for a period of four months, after which steps will be taken to have it changed back to Berlin.

WHAT WE ARE FIGHTING --AN ARMY AND A LIE

BY CANADIAN OVERSEAS

Britons to-day are filled with pride. Imperishable history is being written in blood by our gallant men, whose courage and resources have been beyond experience and beyond belief.

The British, newly trained to war, have shown themselves more than a match for the flower of the Kaiser's Army. They have gone happily to their death with a smile in their eyes and a song upon their lips.

Already the battle of the Somme will go down to the end of time as a name of glory, like Crecy, Agincourt or Waterloo.

It is not the first time this river has made its imprint upon English history, for upon its bank, Edward, the Blac Prince bivouaced on the eve of victory. Across this stream Henry V. led his army when he marched forward to meet the foe upon St. Crispin's Day. And now, by the waters of the Somme we are fighting the best and greatest fight of all—the fight against bombast and oppression, against pedantry and decivilization.

The task that still lies ahead of us, the obstacles still to be overcome and the battles yet to be won, will require our utmost effort. We are fighting with a sense of great confidence in the courage and loyalty of our Allies, and we know we shall win, and future generations will recall with pride the names of Contalmaison and Longueval, of Bazantin and the Bois des Trones, of the Somme, and of Ypres, where the Canadians saved Calais.

We hear that the end is near; that already final victory is in sight: that we shall have peace in October, and of the enemy's speedy collapse. To their over-sanguine boasts we must pay slight heed. Many of the rumours are instigated by our enemy, to weaken our arms, and abate our vigilance. It is true we have accomplished much and are on our way to certain victory, but whether it will be next year or 1918 will depend upon circumstances which we cannot force.

The battle of Trafalgar put an end to Napoleon's hopes of universal sovereignity, but it took ten years after Trafalgar to prepare for and to achieve the crowning victory of Waterloo. The Germans could not, if they would succumb to the first assault. They have placed themselves and the Kaiser upon the loftiest pedestal that human vanity has ever fashioned. Their pass-word is "Superman." They have pretended until it is a belief that they are not as other men, do not obey the general laws of human kind, may do, and suffer what is beyond the compass of French, or English, or Russian endurance.

One by one their overwhelming ambitions have been crushed. They have not taken Paris; they have missed Calais; the conquest of Egypt and the East is still a dream of a disordered brain; the brilliant fancy of a route from Berlin to Constantinople is a myth still, which is being dimmed and damaged by time. Yet these people are neither repentent nor despondent. So long have they been intoxicated with the hope and rumour of victory that they still believe themselves invincible, and will fight until they are convinced beyond a certainty that they are beaten.

As are the German people, so is the Kaiser. The bitter offensive of the West and East has in no way checked his inate habit of blasphemy. He still looks upon the Deity with patronage. "We must live with the Lord," said he, on his most recent visit to the Somme front. "Suppose the Lord entered through that door, could we look upon Him in the face?" He assured them that he could.

The murderer of Belgium, the starver of prisoners, the pious inventor of poisoned shells still claims partnership with the Almighty, firmly believing in his divine appointment. On the line, near Peronne, he said, in addressing his troops: "It is the most poignant grief of my life that I am unable to take a more active part in this war. It is my earnest desire to take my place in the trenches and to deal such blows at our enemy as my age and strength permit. I could take my share with the youngest of you, and I promise that I would leave my work on the enemy. But the inscrutable Almighty has willed otherwise. Into my care has been committed by Divine destiny the leadership of our country, of its armies, of its forces on land and at sea.

The burden of thinking, deciding, leading, has been laid upon me, and, realizing this, I know that my life must not be risked in the foremost line of battle, where my feelings, if unrestrained, would carry me swiftly. My life must be conserved carefully for the welfare of Germany, to carry out the duties assigned to me by Divine appointment."

When we hear whispers in our ears that victory is not far off, we must carefully keep in mind how far and how long the Kaiser and his people must fall before they stand again upon the solid earth of truth and sanity.

For our task is not only that of defeating the German armies in the field, but of reducing the German mind to sanity in thinking. We have to expose to the Germans the conspiracy of falsehood in which the whole nation is involved before we can hope for peace and this cannot be done by October.

A sudden revelation of this truth would be the death knell of the Hohensollerns. The process of descent, already begun, will be gradual, and deliberate, for the Kaiser could not, even if he would, make the only peace which is acceptable to the Allies, because for years he has led his people up to the top-most heights of illusion. Whether he will be able, in the time left him, to deceive his beaten people into the mood of peace is still doubtful. If he fails, then assuredly his dynasty will perish.

So we are fighting not only an army, staunch in battle, but also a lie, which will be slow a-dying.

The Kaiser has to face the situation not merely from the view-point of a soldier. In vain does Maximilan Harden clamour for peace; in vain does the Chancellor protest that he wishes to annex nothing. The Kaiser has proclaimed the German sovereignity of the world and unless he proffers his universal Empire to his braggart subjects his fasehood may cost him his throne.

It is plain then that we must win a moral, as well as a military victory. We must prove to the Germans that they are not covered with the armour of invincibility, and show them that the Kaiser is like all human creatures before we can make them understand what it means to be beaten in battle.

TORONTO EXHIBITION HEADQUARTERS INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS

is the Independent Order of Foresters' headquarters, where they have erected a magnificent tent, beautifully furnished and decorated with palms and flowers, and where every comfort is offered to the many Foresters, friends and visitors whom they will receive during the two weeks of the Fair. This will be a much sought-after spot, as there are so very few places of rest.

When visiting the tent you will be welcomed by G. A. Mitchell, A.S.C.R, assisted by the two able Deputy Supreme Chief Rangers, Brothers Fellman and Harvey Lloyd. A most attractive calendar has been prepared for distribution, and several other novelties will be given to all visitors. It will be well worth while for the many admirers of this great Order to make a call at this tent, and learn more about the great Fraternal work the I.O.F. are doing, and to listen to the stories they tell with reference to caring for the Orphans—the little children who have lost their mothers and fathers— and also the great work they are doing in their Sanatoriums in treating their members who are afflicted with tuberculosis.

Car Ran Over Leg But Broke No Bones

YOUNG LONDONER'S CASE IS A PUZZLE TO BUFFALO PHYSICIANS.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—Rody Mecredy of London, had a remarkable escape in the M.C.R. yards a couple of days ago. Mecredy, who is an M. C. R. trainman, was run over by a heavy car, and it was feared it would be necessary to amputate the limb. He was rushed to the hospital, and the attending physicians were astonished to find that not even a bone had been broken, although the heavy car had passed over the leg. In order to make absolutely sure, an X-ray picture was taken, and not the slightest trace of a fracture was shown. The leg, however, is considerably crushed and Mecredy will be in the hospital some time. He is, however, doing nicely. His father, John Mecredy, is an old G. T. R. employee.

German Prisoners Tell How They Made Their Escape

Reach Clayton, N.Y., After Crossing the St. Lawrence in a Leaky Skiff— Broke Their Parole in Order to Make Their Escape

The two ex-German officers, who escaped from the Fort Henry internment camp on Wednesday, after having given their word of "honor" not to do so in return for privileges accorded them, made a safe getaway, as indicated by the following account of their adventures given at Clayton, N. Y., on Saturday:

One of the most thrilling escapes from a military prison ever recorded was that made by Willy Brubacher, 37, and Erwin John, 25, both officers of the German army, on Wednesday evening, August 23rd, from Fort Henry at Kingston, Ont. The two men made their way to Clayton and are now here.

The men found enthusiastic friends in Kurt Eisfeldt and May Irwin. Eisfeldt happened to be in Clayton this morning. He met the two Germans, and conversed with them in their own tongue, much to their delight. He invited them to go to Irwin Isle as the luncheon guests of himself and his wife, Miss Irwin. They accepted and started off towards the actress's summer home in the motor boat, "The Widow Jones," returning to Clayton early this afternoon.

"We always admire courage," said May Irwin, in discussing the exploits of the two young men. "And then, besides, haven't I got two boys of my own, and wouldn't I like to have someone take them in for a luncheon if they should be situated like this pair?"

HOW THEY ESCAPED.

In conversation they told the story of their escape:

For some time the two had been digging a hole in the yard of the prison large enough for both to enter. They had been allowed to plant a flower garden early in the summer, and when the plants were large enough had started digging in the centre of the garden.

Each day they carried boards concealed under their prison suits, to the hole. Then over the boards they placed a box filled with celery. This box also had holes for light and air. At about three in the afternoon of Wednesday some fires were started for the purpose of burning up some rubbish at the opposite end of the prison yard. The guards' attention thus being taken, the two Germans immediately jumped into the hole, the box being replaced by a couple of their friends.

They were not missed until six that same evening, a search being strated at that time. The two men could hear the confusion caused by the search, but went calmly on changing their prison suits for Canadian uniforms which they had purchased some time before of some Canadian soldiers.

At 10.30 that evening they stole out of the hole, jumped the high wall which surrounds the prison, crept on their hands and knees past the military camp and continued on their way toward Gananoque.

At daylight they hid in some bushes and remained concealed until dark Thursday night they arrived at Gananoque and at 5.30 on Friday morning they took an old skiff and started for Clayton. They landed near the home of John Johnson, a farmer residing about two and a half miles above Clayton, and were given their dinner there. After dinner they came to Clayton, made their report to the customs and immigrant officers to find out to whom the borrowed boat belonged, and to notify John Johnson, who would repay the owner for the use of it.

While crossing from Gananoque one one of the men was forced to bail water from the boat constantly to keep it from filling. After securing a new outfit and rooms at the Harold House they telephoned to the officer of the day at Kingston, telling him where they were and thanking him for the good times they had had during their stay there.

TRIED TO ESCAPE BEFORE.

Willy Brubacher has been a prisoner at Kingston for the past 18 months. About 12 months ago he made his first trial for an escape by jumping from the second storey of the military hospital, a distance of about fifty feet. He was recognized by one of the officer sand was then sent to Fort Henry.

Mr. Brubacher, before his arrest of 18 months ago, was the manager of a large paper mill near Quebec. He was arrested at Monvreal.

Erwin John, was a mechanic working in Chicago. He took the Michigan Central from Chicago to go to New York. It seems that this line runs for a short distance through Canada, and it was when he was going through this section that he was arrested by a Canadian officer as a German spy. Mr. John has been a prisoner for the past 20 months, this being his first attempt to escape.

SIX MEN ARRESTED FOR BUILDING CRASH

Contractors, Builder and Three Inspectors Held for Criminal Negligence— Architect's Plan Changed

Coroner's Inquest Will Be Next Step in Marion Avenue Disaster.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—The preliminary inquiry which District Attorney Martin and Coroner William J. Flynn of the Bronx have been conducting into the collapse of the Marion Avenue tenement, which caused the death of two men and serious injuries to fifteen others, terminated in the arrest of six men, who later were released in $5,000 bail each.

The men, who were arrested on a charge of criminal negligence and who, according to Mr. Martin, may face a charge of manslaughter after the Coroner's inquest on Sept. 6, were Jacob Polstein, contractor; John Petersen, sub-contractor; Max S. Beck, a member of the S. M. C. Building Company, the owners, and Joseph J. Dunne, Ralph C. Smith, and William Shary, Building Inspectors, who are charged with failing to report the many violations of the Building Code which the investigation disclosed.

At the morning session of the inquiry William Kreymborg of 163 Southern Boulevard, the architect who drew the plans, testified that any changes made had been without his knowledge. He added that if it were true bluestone had been substituted for cast-iron templets the effect would have been to lessen by about 66 per cent. the carrying capacity of the wall which fell.

Ralph C. Smith, the iron and steel construction inspector assigned to the Marion Avenue district, was next called. Smith admitted he had noticed the use of bluestone, but that he thought it would serve the purpose as well as cast iron.

Committed for Trial For Throwing Tumbler

LONDON ALDERMAN WILL NOT FACE JURY UNTIL NEXT DECEMBER.

London, Ont., August 31. — The tumbler throwing incident in the city council two weeks ago, has had its sequel, when Ald. Adam W. Palmer was committed for trial by jury at the December sessions by Police Magistrate J. C. Judd.

Palmer was charged by Ald. Wilson, whose head was cut open by the tumbler, with having inflicted a serious wound. Witness alone took the witness stand and told of the trouble, explaining that he had said that Palmer had "scabbed it" in the McClary foundry strike some years ago. An instant later he was struck by the tumbler which he did not see thrown. The defence did not offer any evidence, contenting itself with having scored a point in postponing the trial until the defendant's aldermanic term is concluded. It will thus be impossible to take any steps to unseat him on the strength of a possible court conviction.

When a girl is introduced to a young man she always looks at his hands to discover whether he works.

POLICE MAKE ANOTHER ARREST IN MURDER CASE

Claim That as D'Amore Lay Dying on Floor of the Saloon, Palasino Stole the $20 Bill the Murdered Man Had Placed on the Bar to Pay for the Drinks

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.— The second chapter in the murder of Guiseppe D'Amore, who was shot through the heart in the White Palace saloon, St. Lawrence Boulevard, Monday night, commenced, when Detectives Tierney and Forget, who are at work on the case, made the second arrest. Frank Palasino, who was held by the prosecution as a witness, was charged with robbery, alleged to have been committed while the victim was lying on the floor of the saloon dying.

According to the detectives, D'Amore passed a $20 bill to the bartender, in payment for three drinks. They claim now to have evidence to prove that Palasino grabbed the money and shoved it in his pocket. The bartender has been secured as a witness for the crown and it was on his statement that Palasino was held for the robbery. A $20 bill was found on Palasino when searched at headquarters.

It was brought out this morning that the dead man was working for Alderman Blumenthal and had secured evidence to greatly aid in the showing up of the underworld activities of Montreal. Last Thursday D'Amore, who had been at work for the Alderman during June, July and August, had a consultation with Alderman Blumenthal, and was told to make a full reporti n writing to-day. make a full report in writing to-day. star witness against disorderly housekeepers was shot to death when D'Amore was murdered at the White Palace saloon.

NOMINATIONS IN HAVELOCK

Three Candidates are in the Field For the Position of Reeve— Office May Go to Matheson By Acclamation

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

HAVELOCK, Aug. 31.—Nominations for the position of reeve were held here yesterday. Three candidates are in the field. They are William Matheson, W. T. Curtis and Frank Brown. Up until noon to-day William Matheson was the only one out of the three who had qualified. The other two have up until nine o'clock this evening. If by that time they fail to fyle the formal declaration of office, the reeveship will go to William Matheson by acclamation. If there is to be a contest the vote will be taken on Wednesday next. There is a feeling in the village that the position will go to Matheson by acclamation.

The vacancy was caused by the retirement of Edward Fennel who objected to the manner in which some of his colleagues conducted the business of the municipality.

BUSINESS CHANGES

A number of business changes are being spoken of on George street, not so much in the matter of changes in the personal of the managements of the stores as in the localities. Both sides of George street between Hunter and Simcoe street is said to be affected.

It is a little too early, however, to make mention of the particular stores, but if the changes all materialise the appearance of George street in this block will be altered.

A Mark Twain Production At The Empire

High Class Pictures For The Balance of the Week

In producing Mark Twain's famous work, "Pudd'nhead Wilson," the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company presents the first of a series of picturizations of the noted humorist's novels. "Pudd'nhead Wilson" will be followed by "Tom Sawyer," "Huckleberry Finn" and others.

"Pudd'nhead Wilson" occupies a unique place in the annals of American humorous literature. Its story—said to have been the best piece of fiction which made use of the now-familiar finger-print method as a means of establishing identity—is melodramatic, romantic and suffused with a deep note of human sympathy and interest. "Pudd'nhead" Wilson, the Southern lawyer from whom the book takes its title, is a character in American literature, and his crisp sayings will live forever.

No actor of the stage or screen is so well suited to the role of "Pudd'nhead Wilson" as Theodore Roberts, America's leading screen character star. Mr. Roberts brings out the subtle humour of Wilson, who swayed a whole community by his personality during an exciting trial, finally establishing the innocence of a youth unjustly accused. There is a gripping love story through the photoplay.

Do not fail to see this excellent picture at the Empire.

MAKE SILK SAUSAGE SKINS

New Invention Tried in Germany Proves Successful.

Germany now is making sausage skins of raw silk, according to the Rheinische Westfaelische Zeitung. Even before the war experiments were being conducted in the making of a hollow casting of raw silk to be filled with sausage meat. The Elberfeld Ribbon Factory is now turning out great lengths of this sausage casing. Just now, however, owing to the shortage of meat very large quantities of casing are not needed. With the ordinary prices of raw silk prevailing the new casing is no dearer than the usual sausage skins.

The Berliner Lokal-Anzeiger of Aug. 8 says that a new invention has been introduced by the Berlin Inventions Bureau for putting up in briquettes for transport. These briquettes, it is said, are impervious to the attacks of insects.

BEER PARTY IN HONOR OF ESCAPE

Germans Alive After Verdun Celebrate Fact—No Nerves Left After British Fire

Paris, August 31.—The scene is a little village near the Verdun front. On one side is an orchard, and on the other are fresh green meadows, on which horses and cows are peacefully grazing. Now and then an aeroplane flies by and the only thing to disturb the peaceful scene is the occasional roar of the guns on the heights of the Meuse.

Along the meadows are long tables and benches occupied by young German soldiers in their gray-green uniforms. Every one has a large glass of beer in front of him while nearby are stacked several big kegs from which the glasses are constantly refilled.

It is a beer party or festival given by First Lieutenant B——— to his company in appreciation of the bravery of his men at Verdun. For months they fought between Thiaumont and Damloups, and as some of them express it, "they have gone through hell." But now they are merry, laughing and singing songs.

While the beer is being tapped the regimental band is playing the favorite songs of the men, most of them from Von Weber's opera, "Der Freischutz." "Auf der Heide" and "Ich bin ein Jagersmann, ich bin ein Jagersmann!" are the favorites.

First Lieutenant B—— rises and calls for order. He is a man of splendid physique, with deep yees and a prominent nose. He looks over the whole company and says:

"My dear brave boys, I am glad to see that despite the terrible experience you have gone through you are still able to enjoy yourselves. We have had our share under fire, but I know that when we again face the enemy you will defy death as before. Let us drink to our great and beloved Fatherland."

At the office table are several wounded men, now convalescent, and wearing the Iron Cross. They are busy telling their experiences. A captain of another company in the same battalion, who fought at Douaumont, states that he was under fire for hours.

NO NERVES LEFT.

"However," says he, "I got so that I did not mind it after a while. You see, I have no more nerves left, and the French could shoot until they burst, for all I cared."

The party continued until after dark, and when the men had all the beer they wanted, it slowly dispersed.

"Dear boys," said the first lieutenant, "we have had a good time. We have had good, cold beer; plenty of beer. To-morrow we go back to duty. Let all of you have a good night's rest, for we rise early. Good night."

It is ten o'clock. The tables are deserted and in small groups the men slowly wend their way to their quarters. Over there in the heights, the guns are still roaring.

FATAL DRESDEN RIOTS

Twenty-Two Soldiers and Four Police Among the Victims.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—Reports have reached The Hague, says the Correspondent of the Central News, that 85 civilans, 22 soldiers and 4 policemen were killed in riots in Dresden last week. The disorders are said to have been brought on by a demonstration against the imposition of an increased sentence on Dr. Karl Liebknecht as a result of his appeal from the finding of the military court. The crowds were eventually dispelled by troops, the despatch says, after 200 persons had been arrested.

THE FALL GIRL WILL BE SILHOUETTE GIRL

Long and Narrow, Her Skirts to Chum With Her Boot Tops.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Women's skirts are to be narrow and there will be more of them. Representatives of women's clothing houses, returning from France, stated that the fashionable fall girl will be the silhouette girl. Long and narrow is the silhouette girl, her skirt will have an opportunity to become acquainted with her shoe tops and the "hoops my dear" effect that was so given to ballooning is now au fait.

Hats, too, are to become smaller. Mme. Georgette says that, while dancing gowns will carry long trains, they will reach just below the knees in front.

NO LIQUOR ON TRAINS AN ONT. AFTER SEPT. 16TH.

Nine railroads operating in the province of Ontario have, in answer to a request by the Ontario License Board, notified Chairman Flavelle that they will stop selling liquor on their trains after September 16, when prohibition goes into effect. The board invited the companies to voluntarily cease the business, or else court prosecution would follow to test the legality of their action. The companies all say that they will voluntarily stop the sale on their trains, and will enforce the prohibition act in every possible way.

COMPANIES AGREE

The license board has been aware for some months that the railroads were selling liquor at the dinner table without license, but no action was taken as the board's time was occupied with other important business, and no serious harm seemed to be resulting from the practice. The temperance people have pressed the board on numerous occasions to stop the sale. The Board now feels that it is justified in asking the companies to voluntarily stop the sale without a test case to the courts.

WHY IS HAY FEVER?

By Woods Hutchinson, M.D., The World's Foremost Writer on Medical Subjects.

Finally the mystery of hay fever was solved, or at least, one side of it, by the discovery that the real cause of all this annoyance and discomfort— for, although its victims put a brave and cheerful face on it, the malady is anything but a joke—was neither a demon nor a germ, but the innocent and picturesque pollen of the flowers of certain plants.

The delightful and romantic scent of new-mown hay, with all its poetic associations, which had been incriminated in the popular name of the disease, was found to have very little to do with it. The real Ethiopian in the woodpile and hinc illae lachrimae (hence these "weeps") were certain flowering weeds, which blossomed just about the same time as the meadow grass or a little later. And while, as might have been expected in a disease in which nervous susceptibility plays such a weighty part, there are quite a number of different floral pet antipathies, and some are set sneezing by golden rod, some by plantain, some by false fever-few and a very few by the meadow grasses themselves. It has now been pretty definitely determined that something like two-thirds of all sieges of hay fever are due to the pollen of one pesky weed, the ragweed, known in polite society as Ambrosia artemisiifolia. This is a dark green dusty-looking weed, with tough wiry stems, about a foot or eighteen inches in height and deeply cut, rather graceful, fern-shaped leaves. When it flowers it pushes up a short green spike, not unlike an erect willow or maple catkin, so insignificant and unattractive that nobody but a botanist would recognise it as a flower at all. The whole plant looks not unlike a stiff, dusty "dry land" fern, and it grows in patches along the sides of the road, around the margins of fields, in vacant lots, usually in company with the almost equally hardy and abundant dog-fennel. It forms solid sheets over the stubble fields after the grain is cut; in fact, if you would just go out of doors anywhere in the late July, August or September, and pick out the commonest weed in sight it would probably be Ambrosia artemisiifora.

With the discovery of the definite cause came the possibility of prevention and the hope of cure. The sneezeshane most fortunately is a weed both in the sense that it has no value and grows where its room would be more valued than its company, and also in the sense that it can grow only in cultivated soil or close along its margins. This peculiarity and limitation of the plant explains the comparative immunity from the disease possessed by the different zones of safety or much prized hay fever resorts. These, almost without exception, are up in hilly, mountainous or densely wooded regions, where there is little or no cultivated land and no tame hay or grain and where the ragweed consequently has never yet got a foothold.

It also explains why so many of these vaunted resorts lost or, more accurately, destroyed their own reputation for immunity, because, as they became famous and popular and crowds of pilgrims resorted to them, either the real estate speculator got busy and proceeded to clear off the forest and lay off the hill-sides in bungalow plots, or the mere gardens which were needed to grow vegetables and fruits for the crowds of invalids, or, worse yet, the fields of hay and grain for their driving and saddle horses provided a luxuriant seed bed for the irrepressible ragweed after its seeds had got carried in, in hay or grain.

Not merely mountain and forest resorts had the reputation of being free from hay fever, but also the prairies of the Middle West and the frontier settlements of the country generally. Thirty or forty years ago the prairies of Iowa, Minnesota and Dakota were comparatively free from hay fever, and victims who were cursed with a severe form of the disease after a trial summer and fall out West not infrequently sold out their farms or their businesses in New York, Pennsylvania or Ohio, and moved out to the new Eden of safety. But, unfortunately, it was usually only a few years before they had to either celebrate again every Fall or else move on further West when the prairie sod had been plowed up and the grain fields and meadow hay of civilization had taken its place, with the inevitable ragweed on the side.

The other class of hay fever resorts were barren and sandy islands out in the ocean, where either no cultivation was attempted or the ordinary grasses and grains could not be grown and which were far enough out at sea to prevent the fatal pollen from being blown across from the mainland. Last and most curious of all, hay fever victims could often find relief by fleeing to a large city and taking a room in a downtown hotel, or on one of the busiest business streets, for the simple and obvious reason that ragweed doesn't grow on city pavements, not even in roof gardens, whatever other weeds, literal or figurative, may flourish there, and there are no vacant lots for it to flourish on in the downtown districts, though possibly certain cities, after a boom, might grow it along with other kinds of grass in their streets.

TIP SYSTEM DISRUPTED BY BROADWAY RESTAURANTS

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—There is a good deal of discussion regarding a recent article about an Englishman at the Vanderbilt who wanted to know what a man ought to tip the employes. Hotel managers were of the opinion that tipping should be left entirely to the discretion of the man stopping at the hotel, according to the actual service he believes he has received.

"So far as waiters are concerned there is hardly anybody better qualified to speak than Frank Tosattil, head waiter of the rose room of the Waldorf Astoria. Tosatti said that if a waiter is assured of receiving ten per cent tip on the average he ought to be perfectly satisfied.

"As a matter of fact," said Tosatti, "our awiters don't expect any certain amount, and if he gets ten per cent. on a check he is absolutely satisfied. If a man ate luncheon and his bill came to $1 he would have to be satisfied with ten cents tip. If this man were with a friend and their combined check was $2 the waiter would smile for twenty cents. He is a philosopher, and he knows that for dinner he is likely to have two parties in which the checks run to $2 and the tip may be more than $2. The trouble is that most persons who eat in hotels won't set themselves any fast rule for tipping. The man who tips lavishly makes it hard for the man who doesn't. Some persons give extravagant tips. For instance I know one man who gives a waiter $1.50 for serving him a drink. That sort of thing spoils a waiter and does not make good service. In a way it is a sort of ostentatious tipping. A good restaurant should provide uniform service, and the lavish tipper is a foe to no one."

A Suggested Scale.

Another employe of the Waldorf-Astoria in giving his idea of what tips should be suggested from ten cents to twenty-five cents for breakfast, the same for luncheon, and from forty to fifty cents for two persons at dinner, that, he said, is what a waiter expects. It depends upon the ordering as well as the amount of the check. Where an elaborate luncheon is served, the waiter is hopeful of receiving thirty to fifty cents for two persons this man also thought that the ten per cent. rule was a good one. He declared that where a man had a check for $30 at dinner he would not think that it was too much to give the waiter $3. It was added tha Broadway restaurants have spoiled many waiters—that is the type of place where the spendthrift orders a round of drinks and gives the waiter a dollar for bringing them.

John J. Geerin, who has charge of the bell boys in the McAlpin Hotel, declared that he would not keep a boy who showed signs of forcing tips. In his opinion tipping and the amount of the fees depend upon the alacrity of the service.

"You would be surprised how most persons have their ten cents ready for the bell boys who escort them to their rooms and how quickly this mounts up during a day," said Geerin. "In this country a boy is quick to know the man who does not tip, do his work and get back to his post."

Upholds Ten Per Cent.

An assistant manager of another hotel, who requested that his name should not be used, said that the waiters were well satisfied with ten per cent. of the amount of the check as a tip. Now and again, he said, a waiter knows that chance will throw some unusually generous person his way and he is thankful for it.

"Taking all in all, I think," said this assistant manager, "that the scheme of tipping in this country is far more sensible than in England or in Europe."

At one of the big uptown hotels there was living recently one of the lavish tippers. He had two automobiles, a valet and a chauffeur. His tips cost him about $100 a week, not because the service in the hotel expected that, but because he rather liked the idea of waiters, porters and bellboys jumping about as soon as he made his appearance in the lobby. If the restaurant was crowded he thought nothing of handing the head waiter $10 just to get him a table. He gave the doorman $1 for whistling for his automobile, and some weeks his tipping bil went up to $150. He was one of those men for whom the waiters and other employes of the hotel look to relieve the ten per cent. monotony, if it does become too tedious.

Two of Chief Thompson's Men Upset Off Hickey's Boathouse

The motion picture comics missed a scream of reel yesterday afternoon when they failed to film the double ducking of Police Sergeant Alexander Kidd and Constable John Dainnard. They are on the night shift this week, thus accounting for the fact that they could find time to go fishing. There is no doubt that Sergt. Kidd has had a long and varied experience both in and on the water, and report has it that he is no mean exponent of the art of angling. P. C. Dainnard, on the other hand, has his piscatorial glories in anticipation.

Yesterday afternoon was warm and congenial, and the two burly guardians of the peace looked forward to a pleasant hour or two on the water. At Hickey's boat house they rolled into the water a skiff with dimensions almost as generous as those of the ark, and to continue the narrative in that vein, the elephants went in one by one. They were proceeded, however, by P. C. Dainnard's seven year old boy, who had hopped on to the bow deck. His dad cautiously settled into a comfortable position amidships, and Sergt. Kidd, after a last look around the low lying dock to make sure that all the tackle and other stuff was aboard, stepped off the dock and up to his chin in water.

Just what happened isn't quite clear. Some of the wharf loungers declared that the ark groaned at the prospect of the additional weight and rolled over, spilling P. C. Dainnard into about six feet of water and the boy high and dry on to the dock. Some said that the Sergeant failed to put his weight on to the ark's beam and others claimed that in a moment of abstraction he stepped on the gunwale, with the inevitable result. This is, however, an alleged statement of a person whom the Sergeant had recently reprimanded, hence it is hardly credible. But at any rate the protectors of the "peepul" were wet up to the chin, to the great amusement of a handful of spectators. They pulled themselves back on to the float, wrung out their upper clothing and in a short time safely negotiated the embarkation and pulled out to a fishing ground where they were soon dry. But when they recall the incident they still have a laugh left, for it amused them almost as much as it did those who witnessed it.

Railway Siding Will be Constructed

Committee of the Whole Council Recommend Construction of Siding—Will Serve The Peterboro Planing Mills

The Committee of the whole Council has recommended the construction of a railway siding into the property owned by Mr. James Bogue, on the north side of Dublin street. This action was agreed upon at a meeting of the Committee of the whole Council that was held last evening. The siding will also serve the Peterborough Planing Mills which at the present time is manufacturing shell boxes. The mill has need for about six cars a week. At present it is necessary to haul the manufactured product to the C.P.R. station.

A by-law authorising the construction of the siding will be submitted for ratification to the Council at a meeting to be held on Friday evening. The parties served by the siding will have to assume certain responsibilities such as providing a suitable outlet for surface water and keeping the highway in repair. Mr. James Bogue was present at the meeting also. Mr. W. H. Baker. The latter represented the Peterborough Planing Mills.

MISS CAROLINE M'CLEAN WAS LAID TO REST

This morning were laid to rest the mortal remains of Miss Caroline McClean, whose demise on Tuesday was recorded in yesterday's issue.

The first part of the burial service according to the beautiful Liturgy of the church of England, was held at eleven o'clock in the Paris Church of St John the Evangelist, of which congregation the deceased lady had for long years been a consistent and regular member.

The second or committal part of the service was held at the graveside in the lovely cemetery situated on the shores of Little Lake. The Rev. Canon Cornish officiated throughout, and his interpretation of the Anglican Burial Office was most impressive, reverential and hopeful. As the funeral cortege approached the church the great bell was tolled, while the tune set to the well-known burial hymn, "Days and moments quickly flying" was played on the chimes. "Nearer my God to Thee" was also chimed on the bells as the funeral procesion left the church for the cemetery.

Flowers from various sympathizing members of the congregation and from the church were laid on the coffin. The church warden, W. J. Johnston represented the church, the pall bearers being: Messrs. Grieves, H. Rush, T. Walker, Jas. Browne, F. Russell and Fred Allison.

MR. TAFT STRANGER IN CHICAGO

Walks Four Blocks, Enters Store Without Recognition.

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 31.—Professor William H. Taft, here to attend the convention of the American Bar Association, told reporters Monday that Chicago convinced him he was out of politics.

"I walked four blocks through the downtown streets and made one purchase in a store without any one apparently recognizing me," said the man who once was President.

MAD DOG BITES TWO TORONTO CHILDREN

A Hint and a Warning to Peterborough Authorities and Citizens

The following report of a happening in Toronto, taken from the Globe, has this much interest for us that it constitutes a hint to the authorities to be on the alert, and a warning to the people to be careful in the matter of exposing themselves or children to attack:

Rabid dogs yesterday afternoon and last night in the west end of the city bit two children, Rita Corbett, aged eleven, 5223 Durie street, and the five-year-old son of Mr. Robert Powrie, 8 St. Ann's road.

Mr. Powrie is offering reward to any person who can produce the animal which bit his child, which is described as a yellow and white collie. His son, unless the dog is examined, will be forced to undergo the Pasteur treatment which means daily attendance at a hospital for three weeks until danger from hydrophobia has passed.

The second dog was despatched by a Mr. Robertson on Dundas street, within the city limits, after a struggle, but not before it had torn away a portion of the lip of the girl and had severely lacerated her about the face and body. After biting the child on Dundas street in the county, the rabid animal attacked another dog at Durie street, and then Mr. Robertson, who skillfully evaded its lunges until he was given a club. This dog, according to the police, does not answer the description of the one for which the reward has been offered.

The hot weather has been hard on dogs as well as on mankind, and it is still trying. The authorities and dog owners should see that dogs are kept under proper and safe restraint. For a time at least they should not be allowed to roam at will. The dog-days are not yet over, and with the continued heat and the probable scarcity of water, dogs may become affected with rabies. It is both human and wise to see that dogs have plentiful water supply. It doesn't make a dog any more amiable and well behaved to have him suffer from thirst. Yesterday a collie was seen on Walton street trying to get a drink from a fine nozzle spray on a lawn. He must have been pretty thirsty, and didn't get a very satisfactory drink, either. Dogs, especially in these days, should be well supplied with water. If care and attention to precaution will help stave off so terrible a disease as rabies, they should be exercised and taken.

Troops Have Surrender Drill

Prisoners Say They Have Had Enough of War—Shell Craters Are Ponds

Within the British Army in France, Aug. 31.—An officer and ninety Germans surrendered in a body near Guillemont to-day. They were sent out as usual with orders to stick under the British shell fire and against British infantry attacks to the last man. But when the British worked their way up on either side of the exposed trench they held they ran up a white flag without making any fight for it. They said that they had suffered enough hardship and had had enough of war and preferred to be taken prisoners.

The heavy downpour of rain, continued all day, making ponds of the shell craters and turning the trenches into mudholes.

While the German press is saying that Roumania's entry will lengthen the war, prisoners taken say that it will shorten it, and it is evident now that Germany cannot win and had better compromise than prolong the struggle.

"But we are not going to consider any compromise," the British soldiers tell them.

The British who have received the surrender of Germans say that with characteristic organization they now have what the British call a "surrender drill." When they came out of their dugouts to give themselves up, as in the case of a body to-day, they have all their letters, papers and valuables in their hands, ready as a peace offering to their captors.

TEST CASE OF FLANGED WHEELS OVE RPAVEMENT

The Council's inquiry last night regarding a recent passage of a steam threshing engine with flanged wheels over the Water Street pavement was answered by Chief Thompson this morning who stated that Mr. Richard Hurd, the driver of the engine, has received a summons. Chief Thompson is making a test case of this apparent violation of the new statute. No vehicle with flanged or ribbed wheels that may injure the highway, may be operated or driven over it without a special permit. This is the first opportunity Chief Thompson has had of applying the 1916 statute.

WAS WELL KNOWN IN WORLD OF ART

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.—Napoleon Bourassa, father of Henri Bourassa, died on Saturday at Lachenaie, where he was spending the summer. He was 89 years of age.

Though living quite in retirement for the last quarter of a century, Napoleon Bourassa was a well known figure in the Canadian world of letters and arts. A number of essays and a historical novel, "Jacques et Marie," depicting the pilgrimage of the Acadians expelled from Grandpre, one of the best novels written by a French pen in Canada, testify to his literary merit and paintings at Notre Dame de Lourdes, Montreal, at Fall River and at Montebello, maintain his reputation as an artist.

He was born at Lacadie, Que., and married Miss Aselie Papineau, daughter of the great French-Canadian statesman. He is survived by a son, Henri editor of Le Devoir, and three daughters, Mrs. T. H. Clarvin, wife of Mr. Jaime Chauvin, Miss A. and Miss T. Bourassa.

Even after a man reaches his bottom dollar he still has something left to build hopes on.

To the average man's mind an ideal wife is that of a neighbor who is said to spoil her husband.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

BY JOHN W. S. McCULLOUGH, M.D., D.P.H., CHIEF OFFICER OF THE PROVINCIAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

THE EYE.

THE HUMAN EYE is a wonderful instrument, but under the trying conditions of modern life it often fails to meet the demands put upon it, and serious trouble of all sorts results because we do not help out by getting glasses to supply Nature's defects.

Particularly at the time when children begin their school life, the new and difficult uses made of the eye often bring on eye strain and a host of resultant disorders.

The signs of beginning eye strain may vary in different cases. At first only a slight fatigue may be noticed after reading or sewing. The eyes may water easily or the eyeball may become bloodshot or the eyelids red. Some persons whose eyes are overtaxed show it by nervousness and others by drowsiness after the eyes have been used. Headaches of all sorts and even attacks of vertigo may be merely the symptoms of eye trouble.

DO YOU NEED GLASSES

The eye has a remarkable power, called the power of accommodation. When you look from a distant object to one nearby you notice that it takes a few seconds to focus the eye so that you can see it clearly. Little muscles are contracting and changing the shape of the eye to adjust it to the different distances somewhat as you change the focus of a camera according to the nearness of the object to be photographed. If the eye is abnormal in any respect these muscles have to work too hard, and, even though we may by this unconscious effort be able to see clearly, yet the strain is present. In such case we are seeing by a constant effort, while if glasses were provided to correct the defect of vision thy would do this work and save us the strain.

A careful and thorough examination of the eyes should be made by a competent person. Many a miserable hour would be saved if this were done in time.

Because of defective eyesight a child may be dull, fretful, and backward in school, without anyone guessing the reason. An examination of the eyes reveals serious defects; these are corrected by proper glasses, and the effect is most marked. The child appears happier, makes good progress in his studies, and takes his rightful place in the school community.

Glasses or no glasses, there are some things that cannot be done with the eyes except at grave peril. Too little light strains the eyes, and so does too much. A direct glare right in the face is quite as bad as a room that is too dim to see properly. For reading, sewing, or other work which requires close and accurate vision the light should be clear and steady and should come from above and behind.

EARACHE

Earache is a common and distressing trouble in young children. It often occurs in connection with winter colds and in the course of measles and scarlet fever; it is due to an infection of the middle ear, the poisonous germs being carried from the throat up the little passage called the Eustachian tube to the middle portion of the ear just inside the ear-drum. In other cases it occurs in children who have adenoids and large tonsils. In cases of earache which are severe and which may easily be neglected because the mother may not know the danger, the ear-drum may burst from the pressure of muco-pus inside it and the child is left with a running ear. This is often difficult to cure. In other cases the infection may spread to the cells or honeycomb of bone in the mastoid bone behind the ear and necessitate an operation. These bad results may frequently be prevented by a timely puncture of the drum, which at once gives relief and soon clears up the case. In an earache of any severity or where the pain lasts over a day or so, always call in a competent physician or an ear specialist, and give your child the best chance possible. In mild cases relief may be given by putting a few drops of warm olive oil in the ear and a hot water bottle outside.

BORNEO HUNTERS' DIFFICULT TASK

SURABAYA, Java, Aug. 30.—The latest orang-outang hunt in Borneo has resulted in the killing of four hunters, the serious injury of two others, and th ecapture of two orang-outangs for European zoos. The animals have been sent to Singapore for shipment.

The huntsmen headed by Charles Mayer, an expert in wild animals, who recently arrived in Borneo on a collecting expedition for European zoos, set out for the Landak river region to capture two orang-outangs, which made the adjacent country unsafe for travellers.

Natives were engaged to fell the trees within a radius of about a quarter of a mile of the tree in which the giant apes had their abode with the exception of those immediately surrounding it, which were only partly cut.

Mayer then began cautiously to search the apes' tree, and after finding the animals, which were of the same size, he gave his men a prearranged signal, and with a terrific crash the partly lopped tree fell to the ground.

A fire of branches was then lit beneath the apes' tree, and when the smoke had driven the animals to refuge in the topmost limbs of the natives began felling the tree, while others held in readiness large nets in which to catch the animals. The trees swayed and fell, and, during savage cries, the two animals, their long arms tightly clasping one another's bodies, came to the ground, and the nets were thrown over them.

The male orang, contriving to release one of his arms, clutched Mayer by the leg, and dragged him towards the net. Mayer defended himself with an axe, for his leg was broken before his men could come to his assistance, and divert the attack by belaboring the ape with a club. The animal then released his hold on Mayer, and seized one of the natives, who was killed before anyone could come to his assistance. A second native also fell a victim to the fury of the animal, and while efforts were being made to release him the female orang released her arms from the mat, and killed two men and crippled a third.

Mayer was carried away unconscious, and after having been attended by a native medicine man, was brought to Rynbang in Dutch North Borneo. His condition is serious.

Four days later his native servants arrived there, bringing with them the two captured orang-outangs, which have since been despatched for shipment to Europe.

Golf and Tennis Favored Sports Of The Japanese

American Games Taken Up and Gain Devotees by the Hundreds

Americans interested in sport, returning from Japan, report that the Japanese are rapidly assimilating Occidental sports in general, just as they did baseball following its introduction into the land of Nippon. Golf, tennis and motoring are gaining devotees by the hundreds, and some of the Japanese players are showing a proficiency on the court and links that promise to make them formidable opponents in a few years. In a recent discussion anent sport in general, and golf in particular, a prominent Japanese, who was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, not so many years ago, said:

"You know, we really have no game perhaps excepting tennis, which a man may continue as his years pile up, and we know that exercise is necessary to keep fit. Golf fills the bill for us. As a nation we are fond of games. Wrestling and fencing have for centuries been compulsory in the education of all Japanese gentlemen, and recent years have seen our schools taking up baseball, tennis, hockey and football with considerable success."

AMBASSADOR GIVES CUP.

George W. Guthrie, the American ambassador, who is an enthusiastic golfer, has presented the Tokio club with a beautiful challenge cup, always to remain the property of the club, the winner receiving a replica. In honor of the donor and the country he represents, the final round always will be played off annually on the fourth of July.

Several of the other principal cities have established golf clubs, notably Yokohama and Kobe, while in other sections organizations of a similar character are in process of formation. The turf in Japan lends itself readily to ideal fairways and greens, and the courses have sufficient natural and artificial bunkers and hazards to test the skill of the best players. Another indication of the strides golf is making in Japan is the fact that a publication devoted entirely to the game and bearing the title The Bunker is now published monthly in Tokio.

That the game will be a success in Japan returning tourists say is certain. They point out that the younger Japanese generation, which is chiefly educated in the United States and England and is now mostly engaged in successful commerce at home means to establish there the same healthful sport and games which they found in Occidental countries.

INTERESTED IN HORSES AND AUTOS.

Horse racing has taken on a new interest and successful automobile and motorcycle race meets are being held at frequent intervals.

The Japanese lawn tennis champions, Mikami and Kumagae, have something to relate of the game in the far east. They state that although tennis was begun in Japan 25 years ago, it is only during the last three or four years that serious attention has been paid to its development.

Those players came to this country primarily not to win honors but to learn the style of play of the foremost American experts. Both of the Orientals are very skilful and exceedingly fast, but they seldom have had the opportunity to play with men better than themselves. This naturally put an end to their development at home, for it is only by watching other styles and playing with more skilful players that a man is able to make any headway in improving his game.

JAPANESE HANDICAPPED.

The Japanese champions are handicapped in their game here because of the fact that the ball used in Japan is larger and softer than the one used in America, England, France, Germany and Australia. However, after they have become "acclimated" to "pill," it is not unlikely that they will be able to give a splendid account of themselves.

It will be remembered that these Japs sprang suddenly into prominence some weeks ago when they won the Far Eastern doubles from Ward Dawson and Clarence Griffin, two high grade players from the Pacific coast.

WEALTHY LAWYER WITH THREE WIVES PLAYED A TRIPLE ROLE

Litigation Over W. W. Snyder's Will Reveals Trio of Women—Was Carpenter to One—First and Third Homes Luxurious, Second Was One of Thrifty Artisan

New York, Aug. 30.—Through litigation over the will of William Wallace Snyder, who many years ago was town clerk of Orange, N.J., and then was a successful lawyer and real estate agent, it has become known that the man who in East Orange was looked upon as an eminently respectable citizen, and in Harrison, N. J., was thought to be a thrifty carpenter, had led a triple life. He had three homes and three wives, and only two of them had the slightest suspicion that Mr. Snyder's existence was out of the ordinary.

He died in February, 1915, at the home of Mrs. Sara Whitenack Snyder, whom he married last. He is supposed to have left property valued at $100,000, and his life story was revealed through an action that was brought by his third wife, who dwelt in Mount Vernon, against Mrs. Lucinda Pabst Snyder, of No. 318 Seventh street, Harrison, N.J., for $6,000 as arrears in rent, and so forth.

Mrs. Snyder No. 1, who was Miss Phoebe Baldwin, is living with her brother, Samuel L. Baldwin, No. 35 Hawthorne avenue, East Orange, N. J. She is greatly chagrined over the marital exploits of the man to whom she was married in 1876, and has refused to become a party to the contest for the property.

However, Mrs. Snyder of Mount Vernon, who was married in Buffalo, N.Y., in March, 1898, is intent on getting what was bequeathed to her, and she either wants the Harrison wife to leave the Seventh street dwelling, where she has lived for more than 30 years as Mrs. W. W. Snyder, or pay rent—and back rent, too.

FUNERAL NOTICE STARTED THE TROUBLE.

Further details of Mr. Snyder's career are to be revealed in the courts next month. When Mr. Snyder died the following notice appeared in the Newark papers:

"Funeral services for W. Wallace Snyder took place last night at his late residence in Mount Vernon, N. Y., and interment was made to-day in the family plot in Mount Pleasant Cemetery, this city. Mr. Snyder, who at one time conducted a dry goods store at Broad and New streets Newark, was born in Orange 67 years ago, and was the son of the late John Snyder. He was town clerk of Orange in 1870 and afterwards studied law, and was admitted to the New York Bar. He was a graduate of the Newark Academy and of the New York University in the class of '67. He was a member of the Westchester Bar Association, the Sons of the American Revolution and Mount Kisco Lodge, F. and A. M. He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Phoebe Baldwin, of Orange, and a brother, Colonel H. Snyder, formerly of Orange, but now of Brooklyn."

A notice similar to this one was published in the Mount Vernon newspapers, but it set forth that he was survived by Mrs. Sara Whiteback Snyder, of No. 127 Elm avenue, Mt. Vernon. This, of course revealed to the Orange wife and the Mount Vernon wife that something was decidedly wrong and an investigation was started. Meanwhile perhaps nothing would have been known about the other wife had it not been for the fact that she lived in a house owned by Mr. Snyder. Mrs. Snyder of Mount Vernon wanted her house, and Mrs. Snyder of Harrison, desired to hold on to what she believed was her home. Mrs. Snyder of Mount Vernon, engaged E. L. Davis of Orange to represent her interests, and Mrs. Snyder of Harrison, choose his uncle, T. A. Davis, as her lawyer.

In East Orange and Mount Vernon Mr. Snyder was no carpenter. In both places he was looked upon as a university man and a lawyer of considerable means. Yet he is alleged to have spent two days a week for some time with each wife, at two of the homes, playing a role of affluent culture and in the other one of thrifty industry.

The will started an inquiry by wife No. 3 into an inventory of her husband's property, and the address of the Harrison house was found in a note book which she had never been permitted to gaze upon.

Mrs. Lucinda Pabst Snyder, the second of the trio in Mr. Snyder's life, declared with emphasis that she never had been married to Mr. Snyder, when a reporter called. She was sympathetic when mention was made of Mrs. Phoebe Baldwin Snyder, of East Orange, but the name of Mrs Sara Whitenack Snyder brought fire to the aged woman's eyes.

On a chiffonier in the little home, kept as clean as a good housewife keeps her house, was a letter from a relative of the Harrison wife. It was addressed to "Mrs. W. W. Snyder," and was penned by a relative of hers. Cakes were cooking in the oven and "God Bless our Home" cards were in two or three places.

"I am going out to-morrow for a sail with my nephews," said this Mrs. Snyder, who is 61 years old. "It was my birthday last Thursday and they decided to celebrate it to-morrow and asked me to bring with me some of the cakes that I used to make for them."

"Who's picture is that?" I asked, indicating a photograph of a man in military attire.

HUMBLE CARPENTER IN HARRISON.

"That," snapped Mrs. Snyder No. 2, "is Colonel Snyder. I lived with him for about 20 years. I met him in Trenton, and at that time we only had enough money to get along with. Then we came to Harrison and began housekeeping. He told me he was a carpenter. He used to build and I was his helper, not only in the home but at his work. I carried lumber, sorted bricks and did errands for him on a bicycle. When money and labor were scarce I painted rooms, varnished the floors and papered the walls. Yet he left me without a cent and his other wives get $50 a week. His business took him away from home and I did not suspect him.

"Once I accused him of being infatuated with another woman. That was in the early days. He was so mad with me that he took his stick and smashed every plate there was in the house. I have saved the pieces of broken crockery and if I lose my suit I will open his grave and give William Wallace Snyder what is left of the dishes. Maybe the Mount Vernon woman is the woman I heard he had married in Irvington later on. When I heard that story I trudged through the snow to the place near Newark. I saw Mr. Snyder with a woman and followed him to New York and caught him at Fourteenth street, and brought him back to Harrison by the hair of his head. After that he seemed to be cured but he told me his business was getting so good that he could only stay at home two days a week. It nearly broke my heart.

"Now he's dead, and I'm here; this Mount Vernon woman wants me to pay $6,000 rent while I lived with William here. What do you think of that?"

"It was a funny thing, some time ago, when I knew that William had bought a carriage I decided that I would like to go to the funeral of a friend who lived across the street. I went to East Orange and there asked where Mr. Snyder was when I got to Hawthorne avenue. They told me he was in Trenton. I suspected him then. The woman of whom he thought the most came from the west."

DISCOVERED ANOTHER WIFE.

In the talk, Mrs. Pabst Snyder shows that she knew finally that Mr. Snyder had a wife in East Orange, and as they were not married, decided to overlook it. She has five houses, she says, from which she derives an income.

"But most of the money," said Mrs. Lucinda Pabst Snyder, "is taken up with taxes and repairs. I have lived in this house 26 years with him and I am not going to give up the place.

Mrs. Lucinda Pabst Snyder has a copy of Mr. Snyder's will which leaves his estate to his executors with instructions to pay Mrs. Phoebe Snyder of East Orange, $50 a week, "if she shall so long remain unmarried, and to Sarah D. Whitenack, daughter of Alfred Whitenack, of Pleasant Valley Mercer Co., N.J., the sum of $50 a week during her natural life, if she has so long remain unmarried."

Mr. Snyder also directs that any income above $100 a week be used to educate his children. Helen, born at Irvington, 1899, and William Wallace, born at Mount Vernon, 1901. He also makes provision of $25 a week for his brother, Edward H. Snyder, if "he should need it."

E. L. Davis, Mrs. Sara Whitenack Snyder's lawyer, said that possession of the Harrison home was desired and adjustment proceedings were begun. First, Mrs. Pabst Snyder was requested to leave the house, and on her invoking the statute of limitations of the New Jersey law, it was decided to bring legal action for $6,000 arrears in rent and rental for the house while Mrs. Snyder No. 2 lives there.

"We were warned," said Mr. Davis "that if litigation was started it would mean a scandal. But we decided to go ahead. I am convinced that as things stand that the Mount Vernon Mrs. Snyder is the real widow now. Of course there are many surprising features that have come into the case that we did not expect."

Mr. Davis and his uncle will appear against each other in the will contest. It is understood that the uncle is trying to break the will for his client, Mrs. Pabst Snyder.

Mrs. Phoebe Baldwin Snyder was married to Mr. Snyder at a time when his family was one of the first families of Orange. There is a street in the vicinity which is named for the Snyders. The house where Mrs. Phoebe Baldwin Snyder lives is in the exclusive section of East Orange and is quite a handsome place. This Mrs. Snyder, through a servant, said she had nothing to say. It is understood that she is wealthy in her own right and does not wish to figure in this unpleasant situation.

Mr. Snyder was a quiet man, and a hard worker. He had many friends in Orange and Newark.

In Mount Vernon Mr. Snyder lived quietly with Mrs. Sara Whitnack Snyder in a fine home. His Mount Vernon wife now is said to be at her country place in Bedford Hills, N.J.

MRS. JOS. CHAMBERLAIN BECOMES BRIDE OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY RECTOR—Rev. Canon Carnegie and his bride, formerly Mrs. Jos. Mrs. Chamberlain was the second wife of the late British statesman, and formerly Miss Mary Endicott of New York.

STORM STOPS WATCHES

One Thousand Mainsprings Broken in Electric Manifestation.

Mainsprings of 1,000 watches snapped within a radius of twenty miles of Ringling, Okla., during a recent electrical storm. "This is not unusual," said a jeweller as three men came to his counter with "dead" watches. "All over the Middle West and probably in other parts of the country, electrical disturbances play havoc with the time of day. I recall that a few years ago in Chicago a record was kept of the number of watches broken during an electrical storm, and the number reached 2,800. All of them stopped during a period of fifteen minutes.

"I can't tell how many were affected," said the jeweller, "during the storm here, but I shouldn't be surprised if 1,000 are out of order in this section. All day long they have been coming to me, and in nearly every case it was the same trouble—a broken mainspring."

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH

Certainly knows good tobacco when he smokes it---that's why he has adopted Master-Mason the tobacco which smokes easier, lasts longer, tastes better and gives more satisfaction than other tobaccos ready cut and sold in tins or paper packets.

SMOKE Master Mason

it is made of selected, fully matured tobaccos, pressed into a solid plug so as to seal in, as-it-were, the natural moisture and fragrance of the tobacco and ensures that mellowness and smoothness so much appreciated by smokers.

Equal by test to the very best, Much better than all the rest.

Say MASTER-MASON to your dealer---he knows.

Funeral Will Be To-morrow

The funeral of Miss Nellie Gilmour will take place to-morrow (Friday) at half past two, from the Murray street Baptist church. The many friends of this family, so well and favourably known in Peterborough, will be glad of this opportunity to show their regard for the memory of one whose life has been conspicuous in its service to others. Miss Gilmour spent some time in Labrador engaged in the hospital of Dr. Wilfred Grenfell. She was at the time of her taking ill superintendent of the hospitals in Edmonton, Alberta.

She was the youngest daughter of the late John Gilmour of this city and granddaughter of Rev. John Gilmour, the first pastor of Murray street church.

Fried cabbage is delicious. Cut the cabbage up as for slaw, put it into a pan with enough water to cover and let simmer until almost tender; then put it in the fat and brown it as you would potatoes. It takes little time to cook it in this way.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. Clarke and her mother, Mrs. Jackson, were in the city to-day.

Miss L. A. Yale, Prince Street, is visiting in Toronto for a few days.

Many friends of Mr. T. A. S. Hay were delighted to see him out driving yesterday after his recent illness.

Mrs. Russel S. Merifield and son of Chatham, are visiting at her mother's Mrs. George Stevens, East City.

Mrs. George Stevens and Mrs. Merifield have gone to Napanee to be present at the Root-Stevens wedding Friday at noon.

Mrs. Fred A. Clarke and son Freddy of Winnipeg, are making an extended holiday with Mrs. Clark's parents at Stoney Lake.

Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Rose and family of Morrow street left this morning for Stoney Lake and will remain until after the holiday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Richardson, of Fredonia, N.Y., are visiting with Mrs Richardson's sister, Mrs. W. Wand, 362 Burnham street, East City.

Rev. and Mrs. John Bedford of Pickering announce the engagement of their daughter, Tena, to Mr. William B. Brandon, Fenelon Falls, the marriage to take place on the 12th of September at the Methodist Church, Pickering.

Messrs. Ormie and Vernon Spilsbury of the 52nd Battery, 12th Brigade, Peterborough, Ont., have been the guests of their grandmother, Mrs. R. B. Martyn, Toronto, saying goodbye to Toronto friends previous to leaving for overseas.

Mr. J. Kratz, of Kingville, Essex county, member of the council and school board, and Mrs. Kratz are in the city for a few days, the guests of their old time friends and former fellow citizens, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Vosden, 495 Gilmour street.

A few friends gathered at the home of Mrs. Lille, 454 Chamberlen St., on Tuesday evening to bid farewell to Mrs. Joseph Richards, who left for England Wednesday morning, on the 11.27 train. During the evening, refreshments were served, and a fitted hand-bag was given Mrs. Richards, which took her by surprise, but she managed to thank the ladies for their kindness. After a pleasant evening was spent, and many good wishes passed, the gathering dispersed with "Auld Lang Syne."

WEDDING BELLS

GRAHAM McCALL.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the George street Methodist parsonage yesterday afternoon, Aug. 30, when Mr. George E. Graham and Miss Lucretta E. McCall, both of Peterborough, were married by Rev. R. G. Peever, B.D. Mr. and Mrs. Graham will reside in Peterborough.

EVANS—STEWART.

The marriage of Mary Elizabeth Stewart, of Lundy's Lane, Niagara Falls, and Mr. W. J. Evans, of Toronto, took place on August 19 at the home of the bride. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Lieutenant J. D. Morrow. The bride was attired in a travelling suit of taupe taffeta with hat to match. After the ceremony the young couple left on a honeymoon trip to New York, and on their return will reside in Toronto.

Mr. Evans mentioned above is a nephew of Mrs. S. Kemp, 655 George street, and has visited with her many times, and has a host of friends in this city, who will wish him and Mrs. Evans every happiness.

OBITUARY

NELLIE GILMOUR.

The death occurred in the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, on Tuesday, August 29th, of Miss Nellie Gilmour, daughter of the late John Gilmour and granddaughter of the late Rev. John Gilmour. The funeral will be held from Murray Street Baptist church on Friday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock to the Little Lake Cemetery. The deceased was superintendent of two hospitals in Edmonton, and having taken ill came east to Montreal to consult a specialist. Many friends in Peterborough will regret to learn of her death.

GERMANY SPRINGS STORY OF "FRENCH BARBARITY" TO COVER UP OWN COWARDLY CRIMES

BERLIN, Aug. 31.—Charges that the French have introduced a new body of men whose sole duty is to assassinate all living German living soldiers in conquered trenches with knives, revolvers and hand grenades, were made in a statement given out by the semi-official news agency today.

The statement was headed "Baralonge of the trenches," recalling the alleged killing of German submariners by the crew of the British ship Baralong.

"The French some time ago introduced a fighting system which is the most cowardly and flagrant violation of the laws nown up to the present," it was stated. "Within French companies special detachments are formed with the express order to remain behind in conquered trenches and kill all Germans still alive. These troops are called 'nettoyeurs.'

"Their equipment is not the rifle, cartridges and bayonet of the other soldiers, but the revolver, knife and hand grenade. When a French storming party succeeds in taikng a trench the Nettoyeurs start clearing the trench of all living persons, that is, assassinating the Germans.

"Hand grenades are thrown into the dugouts where often there are wounded. Those who escape the grenades are killed by revolver shots and knives when they attempt to come out. Every man, whether he is wounded or not, is mercilessly stabbed or shot."

LIQUOR SLEUTHS TOOK GIRLS ON "SOUSE" PARTIES

Windsor Magistrate Dismisses Case Against Hotelmen When This Fact is Brought Out

WINDSOR, Aug. 31.—Liquor prosecutions in the Windsor district had the bottom knocked out of them when, by a stiff cross-examination of two Toronto detectives, employed by the Government, Barrister F. C. Kerby, acting for Vital Benoit, of the Wellington Hotel, Ojibway, brought out the fact that the two sleuths had taken two 18-year-old girls with them on their rounds of the various hotels.

Benoit was charged before Magistrate Leggatt with selling during prohibited hours. Crown Attorney Rodd said the same evidence would be put in as in the case of Richard Rutley, of the Country Club Hotel, who was fined $300 and costs on the testimony of the two detectives.

Barrister Kerby scored the knockout punch for the defence by producing two girls, Essie Morrison, aged 18, and Gertrude Evans, also 18, employed in a local hotel.

They told of "parties" they had in company with the two detectives. Barrister Kerby relentlessly pursued the detectives on the stand. One of them, Charles Stuart, admitted he had drank eleven bottles of beer at various hotels on the day named in the complaint against Benoit.

Dismissed the Case.

Magistrate Leggatt expressed an opinion that with all that aboard the man could not be expected to know the difference between "Indian" and real beer. He dismissed the case, severely scoring the detectives for taking two young girls around with them on their drinking tour. He said it was an obnoxious state of affairs for Government detectives to procure two girls of such tender years to aid them in making the hotelkeepers break the law.

As conviction in the other cases depended on similar testimony from the sleuths, Magistrate Leggatt dismissed those charges against other hotelmen. Crown Attorney Rodd concurred.

Barrister Kerby throughout the trial hinted at asking for a charge of perjury against the two men for their conflicting stories.

The cases dismissed without trial were: Albert Hebert, Island View, River Front, Ford City, selling liquor during prohibited hours; John Major, Waverley Hotel, Sandwich, without a license; and Jake McGee, Sandwich, selling without a license.

An appeal has been taken in the Routley case on the grounds that one of the defence witnesses was drunk at the trial.

WILL HOLD A JOINT MEETING

Matter of Closing Mill Street and a Part of Murray Street Will Be Discussed Later

The matter of closing Mill street and a part of Murray street was brought up at last night's meeting of the committee of the Whole Council. The Dickson Company is opposed to the closing of either of the streets, so the committee decided to leave the matter until a later date, when all parties interested will be asked to meet and thresh the matter out to some definite conclusion.

13 CASES IN THREE DAYS AND MAGISTRATE TAKES VACATION AT THE LAKE

Magistrate Dumble went up to his Stoney Lake cottage yesterday afternoon and will enjoy a rest until Sept. 7th. Counting over the police court cases of the past three days shows that the Magistrate dealt with no less than thirteen that Chief Thompson had listed for him. On Tuesday the court opened at 10 a.m. and adjourned after six with an intermission of two hours. Some persons may hold the opinion that the police are mostly ornamental, but the daily slate of cases belie such expressions that are made without sympathy and knowledge of the facts.

"Bought And Paid For"

To-Night "Madame X" will be presented at the Grand Opera House - A Good Company of Performers

Another success was scored last evening, when Florence Johnstone and her company presented to a large audience at the Grand Opera House, that stirring melo-drama "Bought and Paid For." The play was well acted and the individual work of the performers was excellent. To-night the same company will present "Madame X," and to-morrow night "The Rosary."

Corner Stone Will Be Laid

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Will Not be in Attendance at Ceremony

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, Aug. 31.—The corner stone from the old Parliament buildings will form the centre of interest of the ceremony which will take place at noon to-morrow. His Royal Highness will manipulate the silver trowel upon it. The Governor-General will make the main speech, and it was intended that Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier should reply, but Sir Wilfrid has written expressing his regret that he will not be able to attend. Sir Wilfrid is in the city, and the fact that he will not be present is considered significant of his disapproval of the methods pursued in construction.

COL. JOHNSTON SAYS 93RD IS STILL INTACT

"The weather has been extra fine, no rain since we came," writes Col. T. J. Johnston, O. C. 93rd Battalion, in a letter to Mr. D. Drummond. Otterpool camp is but 36 miles from the front and we can hear the firing very distinctly. You would not think they were more than six miles. Twenty-two miles of that distance is water, and I expect that partially accounts for it. We have received scarcely any news from Peterborough and I will be very pleased to hear from you. The 93rd is together yet, although we hear a lot of reports. Our instructions are as yet not up to what we got in Canada, and the Canadian does not take too kindly to what we get." True to his civilian occupation, Col. Johnston closes with reference to the English crops, the sheep flocks and the comparative absence of dogs, and other observations a man used to farm life and interests would naturally record.

Coal Advances 50c a Ton

General Increase Registered in Toronto To-Day

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Aug. 31.—Coal dealers here have advanced their prices fifty cents per ton on all grades of coal following an advance in prices at the pits mouth. They said this would have come whether a strike was pending or not.

Last Trip In Aeroplane

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Aug. 31.—Having covered a distance of sixty miles in one hour and thirty minutes, Victor Carlstrom, pilot of the Curtiss aviation works, reached here from Buffalo today about 11 a.m. He carried one passenger, Flight Lieut. Gardiner of the British flying corps. Pilot Carlstrom used a new type of fast scout machine and his experiment is considered a great success.

Military News

M.P.P. for East Peterborough, had been recommended for the position of Paymaster of the 247th Battalion, was an error, due to a mistake in a telephone message. The paymaster recommended is Capt. J. M. Thomson, who has been on duty for some time in the pay office of No. 3 Military District. Mr. Thompson, M. P. P., has not been a candidate for the position, and last night's announcement was as big a surprise to him as it was to the general public. Just to make it clear, the 247th's paymaster will be Capt. J. M. Thompson, not Mr. Jas. Thompson.

In a card sent to relatives in England Pte. Arthur Pritchard, who left here with B Squadron, 8th C.M.R., and who is now wounded and a prisoner in Germany, says: "I am going on fine and hope to be all right again soon. Hope you all are in good health and having a fine time. Don't forget to send a few parcels, including lots of tinned goods." Pte. Pritchard's address is: 4th Canadian Mounted Rifles Battalion, Reserve Lazarette II., Aachen, Germany.

ROUMANIA IS SWEEPING THROUGH TRANSYLVANIA

Russia Will Throw a Large Army into Bulgaria

Austrians Have Abandoned Over 400 Square Miles of Transylvanian Territory

Roumanians are Pressing Forward on Both Wings Squeezing the Enemy Out all South Eastern Transylvania—Arstrians are Retreating on the Center—Roumanian Right Wing is Linked up With the Russians Near the Bukowina Front—Enemy is Preparing to Evacuate the Important Hungarian City of Bistritz.

ROUMANIA SHARES THE ALLIES' RESOURCES

LONDON, September 1.—(Special Cable)—Using the famous German "Nut Cracker" tactics, the Roumanians are pressing forward rapidly on both wings squeezing the Austrians out of all Southeastern Transylvania.

The Austrians caught in the centre are in danger of being crushed by the jaws of the "Nut Cracker." Already they have abandoned more than four hundred square miles of Transylvanian territory to the invaders. At least a dozen towns and villages have been captured by the Roumanians since war was declared Sunday night. So rapidly are the Austrians retreating on the centre that there has been little heavy fighting, and but few prisoners have been taken. The Roumanian right wing linked up with the Russians near the Bukowina frontier is advancing on the famous hungarian City of Bistritz, thirty miles from the Roumanian frontier. A Central News despatch from The Hague said to-day that the Austrians are preparing to evacuate Bistritz without a battle. Heavy fighting continues along the mountain front leading southward from Bukowina.

Should the Roumanians burst through the Red Tower Pass in large force they will cut off and capture the Austrians retreating from Southwestern Transylvania. Forty-five miles further west the Roumanians have pierced the Valkan Pass, it is admitted at Vienna, and have marched ten miles northward into Transylvania to the railway town of Petroseny.

ROUMANIA SHARES RESOURCES.

Roumania already is being taken into the heart of the Entente alliance and is beginning to experience the great benefits of having an open account with such Powers as France, Great Britain and Russia. She is sharing in the funds and general resources of the Allies.

The knowledge of this fact is expected to have a very rapid effect in deciding the Greek government to declare itself in the only way now left to it in view of the measures taken by the Allies to cut off Greece from any direct relations with the Central Empires.

The first operation on the part of the Roumanian army, it is announced, will be a defensive offensive in the Transylvanian Alps. The method adopted by General Cadorna in the Dolomites and in Carnia will serve as a model for the form of operations to be carried out in the early stages of the Roumanian campaign.

As in the case of the Italians, the Roumanians will actively continue their military preparations while boldly striking at once instead of awaiting a blow from the enemy. This policy by General Cadorna gave him the great advantage of the initiative, although its very boldness was a surprise to the Allies themselves.

In Roumania for some time trenches had been prepared along the border lines as well as artillery positions, shelters and observation posts. Along their entire extent, from Bukowina to the Danube, the Carpathians have been well prepared by Roumania for defence in the same way as the banks of the great river and the confines of the Dobrudja.

France's Contribution.

A second consignment of French 75-millimetre guns and munitions for them has been shipped from Russia into Roumania. Other French war material, consigned eventually to Roumania, has been lying at the port of Vladivostock and has now been ordered immediately routed to Roumania, and still other shipments of munitions deposited temporarily at Salonika in the expectation that in certain contingencies they might be passed through Bulgaria into Roumania, have now been ordered sent by sea to Vladivostock and thence overland to Roumania.

France's chief contribution to Roumania is thus in the form of war material. Roumanian artillery is at present equipped in great part with Krupp guns, many of which were received during the last six months in part payment for the 681 cars of grain and fresh meat sent from Roumania to Germany.

Russia's contribution will be in the form of troops. Besides undertaking to guarantee Roumania's security on the side of the Eastern Carpathians and apart from the prospective operations of Russian forces through Roumania against Bulgaria, Russia is to provide 200,000 men to co-operate with the Roumanians in Transylvania.

An interesting feature of this combined action will be its parallel with the operations against Turkey in 1877. Then, as now promises to be the case, Russian armies passed through Roumania, and it was the Roumanian King, father of the present King, who commanded the Russian forces in some of the most important operations of the war.

Contribute Financial Aid.

Great Britain will contribute immediate financial aid to Roumania by buying at high prices Roumania's surplus wheat and corn of this year's crop and by combining with France to float a Roumanian loan on the French, British and American markets.

Italy has already sent to Roumania twenty cars of shoes, military uniforms, blankets and other equipment and has agreed to continue to supply that country's needs in this regard. Medical and sanitary supplies are being furnished to Roumania by both Italy and France.

Roumania's domestic industries have been mobilized, according to a despath to the Neue Zurcher Zeitung, and the factories are displaying a feverish activity in producing the commodities needed by the army for the purpose of putting an end as soon as possible to the costly expedient of importing them. The manufacture of articles of luxury is forbidden at present, and all factory labour must be devoted to the filling of the elementary needs.

All Coal Requisitioned.

All the coal in stock in the country has been requisitioned by the Roumanian government and placed under the control of the local authorities wherever it exists in large quantities. To replace coal for general use large deposits of petroleum, lignite and peat are being substituted, and the authorities have fixed maximum prices on these articles to prevent the possibility of speculators forcing up prices and to guarantee sufficient quantities to the people at moderate rates.

Many of the great oil fields of Roumania, the largest in Europe after those of Russia in the Baku region, were owned and operated by Germans. The companies controlling them had gradually been syndicated, largely through the banking operations, and the German government, when a few years ago it took over for the State the monopoly of the sale of petroleum within the empire, acquired a form of domain over many of the Roumanian oil fields.

Time for Peaches and Cream! Roumania's Transportation Facilities Will Aid Allies

Railways and Roads as Important as Her Armies, National Geographic Society Says—Russia May Now Hurl Troops Against Bulgaria and Hungary— What Roumania Wants as a Reward for Services Rendered.

THE ROUMANIA WAR BUDGET

LONDON, September 1.—That the entry of Roumania into the war on the side of the Entente Allies will be of considerable advantage to that side is the opinion expressed in a statement issued by the National Geographic Society.

Of particular importance, the statement asserts, will be the transportation facilities which Roumania will be able to afford to Russia for the rapid concentration of troops on the northern frontier of Bulgaria and at the southeastern gateways into Hungary. The statement reads as follows:—

"With a field arm of 800,000 men, thoroughly trained and fully equipped, and with a reserve force of at least 200,000 additional fighting men, Roumania's late entrance upon the great battle field of Europe inevitably would have great weight. But of equal or perhaps even greater importance to the Allies is the fact that with this country's declaration of war again the Central Powers her highways and her railroad systems could be used in moving an unlimited number of Russian soldiers to the northern frontier of Bulgaria and the southeastern gateways into Hungary.

TRANSPORTATION AFFORDED.

"In the present struggle it has been easier on many occasions to procure men for the firing line than to control the facilities for transporting them and to find the necessary food for them after their arrival in the trenches. Roumania possesses the means to solve in part both these problems.

"With an area about equal to that of the State of Arkansas, but with a population nearly five times as great, Roumania is esentially an agricultural country, producing vastly more wheat in 1915 than Bulgaria, Serbia, Greece and Montenegro combined. Its crop last year (89,000,000 bushels) equalled the joint production of our fertile wheat States, Minnesota and Iowa. The yield of barley, corn, oats and rye is also large, and during the two years of war the country has waxed rich playing the role of an Egyption Joseph to starving Brother Nathans, the well paying Central Powers.

"Before the war the value of Roumania's grain exports exceeded $100,000,000 annually, and second in the list of international sales was her petroleum, valued at nearly $8,000,000 a year. Her forests, too, are a source of revenue. The wooded slopes of the Carpathians, which form the western boundary between Roumania and Hungary, yield excellent oak, beech, pine and fir, the exports being valued at $5,000,000.

HAS BIG SALT MINES.

"Roumania is famous for its salt mines, and could supply all Europe with this commodity for hundreds of years. In some mines the beds are from 600 to 750 feet thick, and at Sarat there is a salt mountain whose sides are quarried with electric machines which cut out blocks each a cubic yard in size, while the fragments are scooped up in steam shovels.

"The precedent of her success in choosing the right moment to join in the Balkan imbroglio of 1913 would seem to have had considerable influence in prompting Roumania's waiting policy in the present instance. The country remained aloof in the first Balkan war (1912). During the second war, when Bulgaria, Serbia and Greece were fighting over the spoils which had been wrested from the Turks in the previous struggle, Roumania again remained an interested bystander until the closing days of the conflict. Then she threw her weight with Greece and Serbia in time to demand as her reward the valuable strip of Bulgarian territory lying north and east of a line drawn between Turtukai and Baltchik, in the Dobrudja region, between the Danube and the Black Sea. This prize added 2,900 square miles to her area.

WHAT ROUMANIA WANTS.

"If, as is reported, Russia has promised the big Balkan State the important province of Bessarabia, which adjoins it on the northeast, 17,000 square miles will be added to Roumanian domains, together with two and a half million kindred people. In addition to this tempting spoil of diplomacy, it is highly probable that the Roumanians will expect Bukowina as their share of the 'parings' in the event the Central Powers are defeated, for this Austrian crown land was a part of the Roumanian province of Moldavia up to 1777, at which time it was appropriated by the larger nation. Roumanians still comprise a large percentage of Bukowina's population.

"The Roumanian war budget for the fiscal year ending just prior to the outbreak of the war was $20,000,000. The infantry of the standing army is equipped with the Mannlicher magazine rifle (five cartridges), named after the Austrian inventor, and much used in both Austria and Germany. The horse and field batteries are armed with Krupp quick firing and 75-millimetre guns.

"In the transportation of Russion troops, as well as in handling her own forces to the Austro-Hungarian and Bulgarian borders, Roumania's 2,800 mile railway system, nearly ninety-five per cent. of which is State owned, would play an extremely important role, as would also that great water highway, the Danube, which flows out of Austria-Hungary at the Kazan Pass, and in its eastward course to the Black Sea forms the navigable southern boundary of Roumania for nearly 350 miles. The 1,806,000 miles of national roads criss-crossing the country would also greatly facilitate the despatch of troops."

AHMEEK IS DEFEATED IN SECOND CONTEST

Skipper Addison Hannan Brings His Boat Home in Front.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Nahma had to beat ten Yachts, Father Time and the clock to win the second of the series of races for the Manhasset Bay Cup. With just thirty-five minutes of time staring him in the face, Addison Hanan, who was at the tiller of the cup defender, squared away from the last mark of the twenty-mile triangular course. He was then at Oak Neck, and had to cross the Sound, a distance of three and one-half miles, in that time, or there would be "no race." After five hours of hard sailing Nahma got within the time limit by a few seconds. The others failed to do so.

As Nahma and Ahmeek are now tied in points, the next race will presumably decide the possession of the much-coveted trophy for another year.

CATTLE MARKET.

Receipts at the Toronto Union Stock Yards yesterday were 43 cars, with 293 cattle, 100 calves, 1,457 hogs, and 545 sheep.

There was little change in cattle prices. The run was small, and trade was rather dull, the market dragging along slowly. Hogs were fairly plentiful and sold freely.

Spring lambs were steady and there was a good demand for light sheep, but little demand for the heavies. For butcher cattle the demand was poor, and butcher cows were somewhat easier.

REFUSE WORK TO IRISH

English Farmers Fear Labour Trouble Would Result.

Hundreds of Irishmen, young and old, are walking the streets of many English towns because they have been refused employment on harvest work, in quest of which they crossed the Irish Sea. The English labourers have barred the Irish and the English farmers refuse places to them for fear of getting into difficulties with the native labour.

The whole trouble is said to be due to the fact that while English labour in the army is in Ireland receiving one shilling a day as Government pay, the Irish labourers—excluded from provisions of the Military Service Act—take their places in England at six and seven shillings a day.

In Lincolnshire and other important farming counties on the east coast the situation is said to have grown serious. There is no denying that labour is needed to harvest the crops, but the farmers are unable to employ the Irish. They have been told that a rupture will result which will leave them without any labour at all.

Army of 2,000,000 Making Munitions

LONDON, Aug. 24.—When the British forces in France began their great offensive bombardment on June 27, and for days hurled into the German lines such an avalanche of steel and lead as the world had ever known before, even the people of England expressed wonder that it should have been possible to assemble so vast a store of munitions. The story of how these supplies were created constitutes one of the most important chapters in the history of British achievement during the war.

At the outbreak of hostilities two years ago, there were only three important Government munitions factories in the British Isles. To-day some 4,000 Government-controlled firms, employing more than 2,000,000 workers, are turning out virtually all the tremendous amount of war materials which have gone to equip the 5,000,000 British soldiers in the field.

The organization of this great industry has been accomplished in a little more than one year by the Ministry of Munitions, which was established in May, 1915, under the leadership of David Lloyd George. In that time every available resource of the country has been built for the production of munitions. Some idea of the scale upon which this organization has been carried out may be gathered from the statement that the largest of the new plants covers an area nine miles long and from three to four miles wide.

A staff of 5,000 persons has been required to supervise the work. At the head of the staff and responsible only to the Minister of Munitions, has been a man whose organizing ability has been accorded widespread recognition. He is Dr. Christopher Addison, internationally known for his medical research work. For some years he has devoted his attention to politics, and besides holding a seat in the House of Commons had been Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education before entering on his present duties as Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Munitions.

Every detail of the munitions production is known to Dr. Addison, and during an interview he told as much of the story of the creation of this industry as could be made public at this time.

At the outset he disposed of statements in America to the effect that if it were not for the munions furnished by the United States Great Britain would have to quit the war.

Used Few American-Made Shells.

"I have heard that statement made," said Dr. Addison, "and it is preposterous. The United States has furnished, and is furnishing, many raw materials which we are anxious to get for the manufacture of munitions, but so far as the actual production of shells goes America has provided us with only a small percentage of those which we have used.

"In the early stages of the conflict," he added, "more attention was paid to field guns and their equipment than to heavy guns, but as time went on the requirements for heavy shells greatly increased. In June, 1915, we made an inventory of all the available machinery in the country and it was evident that it was entirely inadequate to meet the demands. There were, however, a great many private firms which could be brought in to make munitions and it was decided to mobilize them for national service. In order to do this the country was divided into districts, in each of which a working board of management was set up.

By means of this scheme of local organization thousands of firms have been brought in, many of which had never seen a shell body, or a fuse, or a grenade, or a bomb before, much less made them. Now munition making in some form or other has extended well night to every considerable town—indeed, to large numbers of villages.

"What all this amounts to in the aggregate you can form some conception of when I tell you that a calculation made three weeks ago showed that there were being turned out weekly by firms which a year ago had not been engaged in munition work sixteen times as many heavy shells as were being produced a year ago by all the national plants and, private armament firms put together. Of course, the big armament firms have been greatly extended since then, and that figure dos not apply to their present output.

"Coincident with this programme of bringing in private firms it became evident that even with their help the output would still be insufficient, so the Ministry of Munitions proceeded to provide a large number of 'single purpose' factories, that is, plants where the work could be specialized. Skilled engineers divided the work up into a number of repetition operations such as could be done with a few weeks' training by women or unskilled labour. There are now in the country fifty-three national shell factories of this kind, all of which have either been built or reconstructed by the Government.

NINETEEN EXPLOSIVES MILLS BUILT.

"Just as the output of shells, shell bodies, etc., had to be augmented, so we had similarly to provide explosives and filling factories. As a result of this, apart from the enormous extensions of existing institutions, nineteen special explosives works have been provided. This has practically doubled the whole previous output of the country. Similarly there had to be built fourteen filling factories, each of which has been provided since last August. Altogether there are now ninety national factories which have been equipped with machinery and, in most cases, built during the last twelve months.

"We can now produce in less than a month as many of the lighter shells as could have been turned out in the whole year of 1914-15. In less than a fortnight we can make more heavy shells than we could have done in the year 1914-15. We can now turn out in a week far more shells, filled and complete, than were used in the whole battle of Loos, which extended over a fortnight, and they had been saving ammunition for that battle for a month. We could have a battle of Loos every week now and it would not touch the shell reserve stock.

"The manufacture of guns, which did not lend itself to the process of sub-division like ammunition, has had to be concentrated largely in the hands of experienced firms, but new factories under the direction of these firms have been made for 'single purpose' work.

"One of the earliest steps the Ministry of Munitions had to take was to acquire control of every machine-tool maker in the United Kingdom, and also to bring in the manufacturers of machine tools. Every machine tool made during the last twelve months has been disposed of as directed by the Ministry of Munitions. The tools have been sent where they were most needed for the making of munitions.

One of our most anxious problems has been the supply and the distribution of skilled labor to go around. This fact was recognized by the trade unions and the Government has received their hearty assistance through out in the distribution of skilled labor and in the dilution of skilled labor with unskilled. The introduction of unskilled labor into the field of skilled labor is a sacrifice of skilled labor to which no too high tribute can be paid.

"Their position was rendered more difficult by the fact that many skilled workmen crowded into the army. More than 43,000 highly skilled workmen have since been withdrawn for munitions work. They go where they are sent. This has given the Ministry of Munitions control of a large body of skilled workmen who can be moved as required.

ABOUT 2,000,000 ARE EMLPOYED

"Apart from the manufacture of ships, aeroplanes, etc., which do not fall under the charge of the Ministry of Munitions, there are now employed about two million people, of whom several hundred thousand are women. It follows that there has been much labor expended in housing munitions workers. Whole villages have been built and we have provided accommodations for 60,000 persons in twelve months.

"People of all classes of society have joined in the manufacture of munitions. There is, for example, on the staff of the Ministry of Munition the daughter of an Earl, who worked for nine months as a lathe hand in a munition factory. Large numbers of the best known families have devoted themselves to work in the canteens and to other work in connection with the factories. There is a department in the Ministry which is solely concerned with the provision of canteens for munition workers and these canteens provide meals for 500,000 persons daily."

Dr. Addison said that a result of the demands upon the Ministry of Munitions the formulate for many chemicals and instruments which formerly had been made by the Germans had been discovered by English scientists and that these things were now being manufactured here.

It is said that the head of the different departments of the Ministry of Munitions are largely directors and managers of great industries who have volunteered their service without remuneration. As one has put it, "the Ministry of Munitions is, in fact, the general staff of British industry, organized for war. To an American who has volunteered his services is given credit for affecting reductions in shell contract prices which saved the Government $2,000,000 a week.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE

An Episode of Shakedown City

By F. A. MITCHEL

The wild and woolly west is now a thing of the past. If gun play, public gambling and horse stealing are in vogue in any part of the United States we hear nothing of them. But the probability is that these things have died out before the advance of civilization and the consequent setting up of the church and the schoolhouse.

Before the dawn of this new condition, when all sorts of persons—good, bad and indifferent—were crowding into a country not yet abandoned by the Indian, when every man was expected to look out for his own interests, it is remarkable, in some instances laughable, what small things men would fight about.

In a settlement west of the Missouri river some forty years ago, where there was but one woman to a dozen men among the inhabitants, Cyrus Atkins was out beyond the borders of the town looking for stray cattle when up the road came a woman driving a rattletrap buggy. Whether she was fair to look upon is not a matter of certainty, for any woman not a fright was beautiful in the eyes of men who were constantly looking on their own sex only. Certain it is that this person driving toward the settlement was beautiful in Cyrus Atkins' eyes.

"How do, ma'am," he said, putting his hand to his sombrero.

"How do," was the laconic reply.

"Air you from the settlement?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Any chance for anybody to make a livin' there?"

"Reckon, but a good lookin' woman like you don't need to make a livin'. All she has to do is to pick out a husband and let him do it for her."

"Suppose the husband can't make a livin' for himself?"

"Then, I reckon, the wife 'ud have to do it for both."

"Jist so."

The woman, who had an independent air about her, whipped up her horse and left Mr. Atkins standing beside the road gaping after her. He was thinking that as soon as she got into the settlement, which was called Shakedown City—all settlements appended the word "city" to their name in that country at that time—she would be surrounded by half the men with offers of marriage. He hesitated whether to go on searching for his cattle or go back at once and put in his application. At that moment he spied one of his lost animals in the distance. This decided him, and he concluded to lose an hour or so in putting in his application for the sake of getting his cattle.

When the woman reached the borders of Shakedown City she encountered Enoch Dolittle.

"Ary tavern in the town?" she asked him.

"Yes, ma'am," was the reply. "Tain't much of a place for a good lookin' woman like you to stop at, seein' there's nothin' but men around."

"Well, I reckon I got to stop there, seein' I don't know nobody in the town."

"There's a few married women in Shakedown. I know one of 'em that I reckon'll take you in."

"Where does she live?"

"I'll show you."

Mr. Dolittle walked along beside the buggy to a house where a frowsy woman was washing dishes, and the stranger said she would like accommodations. Since the reply was favorable, the applicant decided to put up there. She said her stay would be short; but, although she was asked the cause of her coming and other questions, she proved close mouthed and gave no satisfactory answers. An hour later Mr. Dolittle was walking down a road leading to some property he had preempted when he met Cyrus Atkins driving his cattle home.

"Seen anything," asked Cyrus, "of a good lookin' woman drivin' into town in a buggy?"

"Yes."

"Where did she put up?"

"She was goin' to put up at the tavern, but I tuk her to Mrs. Green's."

"What had you to do with where she put up?"

"What's that to you?"

"A good deal. I'm the first man to see her comin' into town, and if she's goin' to settle yere I've got the fust claim on her."

"You don't reckon she'd have sich a red headed, slab sided feller as you, do you?"

"I don't propose to give way to a freckled, bowlegged chap like you."

Both men put their hands to their hips, but at the moment Antonie Thibadeaux, who had come from Louisiana, passed by and inquired the cause of the dispute. When duly informed that a new and comely woman had come to town and each of the men proposed to claim her in marriage, Thibadeaux said to them:

"This town ought to be above gunplay in the streets by this time. Yo' so'the'n men are mighty uncivilized in such affai's anyhow. If you two men want to fight about a lady, why don't you do it in a fashion that would do honor to her instead o' mixin' her up in a common shootin' match?"

In ½, 1 and 2 pound cans. Whole—ground—pulverized—also Fine Ground for Percolators. 173

The rivals were evidently impressed with this view of the case and asked how "them gentlemanly fights" were conducted. Thibadeaux said that he had participated in several, both as principal and second. If they desired it he would be happy to manage a meeting for them.

"Yo' see," he added, "if the lady hears that you have had a street fight about her she'll turn you both down. But if she hears that you have fought for her in a gentlemanly way she'll be much flattered, and the man that wins will have a tol'able good show."

This settled the matter. Mr. Thibadeaux took charge of the affair entirely, making all necessary arrangements, providing a second for each principal and sending to a neighboring town for a "sawbones." The time appointed was the next morning at 7 o'clock, the place to be where Cy Atkins had met the subject of the dispute. Mr. Thibadeaux said that in Louisiana, where he had picked up his knowledge of the code, it was considered bad taste to talk about such affairs, and they were usually kept secret. In this way a vulgar crowd was avoided, and if the fight was about a lady it was deemed more respectful to her.

A bit of gunplay in the street would not have necessarily called together a crowd, but such a novelty as a duel was sure to do so. It did not get out in Shakedown City that an affair according to the code, arranged by a prominent Louisiana duelist, was to take place, until late the night before the meeting. Consequently the lady who was to be fought for went to bed oblivious to the fact that two men were to meet the next morning at 7 o'clock in mortal combat to decide which should give way to the other in an effort to obtain her favor. Indeed, having looked over Shakedown City and not being pleased with it, she had determined to make an early start the next morning for the place from which she had come.

The secret of the duel was divulged by one of the seconds at the Golden Eagle saloon about midnight, and most of those present organized a small game to last till morning with the intention of adjourning from the sitting to the dueling ground to witness a real high toned shooting match as practiced in the state of Louisiana. Such an affair had never been known in Shakedown, and, though the citizens had heard of the code duello, their knowledge of it was very hazy.

About half past 6 each principal in the coming affair, attended by his second, left his residence and proceeded to the ground. The master of ceremonies was accompanied by the surgeon, a recent medical graduate, who had gone west to establish a practice, but had never seen a gunshot wound in his life. At the same time a crowd emerged from the Golden Eagle saloon and tramped down the road. Arrived at the appointed spot, Mr. Thibadeaux marked off the ground, taking care that neither of the disputants was placed so that the sun would shine in his eyes. He made the distance thirty paces, which, he said, was usual in such affairs. Each man was handed a revolver that had passed inspection by both seconds and stood ready for the signal to fire. Mr. Thibadeux said that dropping a handkerchief was the most approved method. But there were very few handkerchiefs in the party and they so soiled as not to be surely distinguished by the principals. Therefore it was decided to drop a hat.

Meanwhile a horse and buggy was seen emerging from the town, and just as the seconds handed the principals their weapons the vehicle drew up in the road beside the battleground.

"What's goin' on?" asked a woman who was driving.

Mr. Thibadeaux, lifting his sombrero, advanced to her and explained that a duel was about to be fought about a woman.

"What woman?"

"One that came to town yesterday, ma'm."

"Well, what has she got to do with it?"

The matter was briefly explained to her.

During the conversation the principals stood looking at the lady, recognizing her as the person about whom they had quarreled. The crowd, too, turned their faces from the disputants and gaped at her.

"See here, you galoots over there!" she called. "You don't want to fight about me. I got a husband and three children. And if I was single I wouldn't marry either of you. My husband's sick, and Hilton, where we live, is run down. I come over yere to see if there was a better chance to make a livin'. I wouldn't live in the town if you'd give it to me, and I wouldn't marry any man in it if I was single. So there! Git up, Sal."

And, giving her horse the whip, she passed on down the road.

The duel was called off, all adjourning to the Gold Eagle saloon, where the principals shook hands and called on all present to nominate their pizen. Then Mr. Thibadeaux, calling the crowd's attention by an abem! said:

"Genls, I move that a committee be appointed to go to Hilton and represent to the lady the advantages of this place, which she has turned down, and assure her that if she will remove here with her family she will be taken care of. Since the committee must be provided with funds, I propose a collection."

The proposition resulted in the removal of the family named to Shakedown City, where they were provided for till the husband recovered his health and in time became a prominent citizen of the town.

The presence in Shakedown City of the lady, her husband and her children was a subject for ridicule of her two admirers, and they left the town.

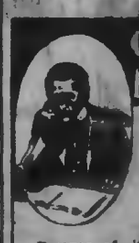
BOYS WANTED TO SEE TRAIN WRECK

ROCKLAND, Ont., August 31.—A search for train wreckers, after the six o'clock passenger train had come to a stop within a few feet of obstructions placed across the rails of the Grand Trunk Railway within a short distance of town on Friday evening, resulted in the arrest of five young boys who wanted to see a train wreck, and to satisfy their wishes, placed a tie across the tracks and then hid themselves behind a hill to watch the smash-up.

The engineer of the train, H. McCulloch, saw the obstruction in time and succeeded in bringing his train to a stop within a few feet of the tie which was near the round house and only a few hundred yards from the station here.

Detectives, who were aboard the train, found the five boys crouching behind the hill and as a result of their escapade the five will appear in court on Thursday. One of them confessed that they had committed the deed and said, 'he would do it again' as he wanted to see a wreck.



Constant Headaches

When the nervous system gets run down one of the most persistent symptoms is headache. Nervous headache has been described as the cry of the starved brain for more blood.

Because of its remarkable blood-forming and blood-enriching qualities, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food ranks first as a means of overcoming nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, headache, indigestion, sleeplessness, irritability and all the annoying symptoms of nervous breakdown.

It is not a mere relief, but thorough cure; for it rebuilds and reconstructs the wasted and depleted nerve cells.

GLEAN SCIENCE IN EUROPE.

Dr. Welch and Dr. Hale Praise England's Industrial Discoveries.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—Dr. William H. Welch of Johns Hopkins Medical School and President of the National Academy of Sciences, and Dr. George Ellery Hale, Director of Mount Wilson Observatory, who are here representing the National Research Council established by the National Academy of Sciences at President Wilson's request, will start for the Continent next week. They are investigating the effect of the war in stimulating scientific research and developing industrial progress. In an interview Dr. Hale spoke highly of the work of England's scientific men in seeking to render the country independent of the sources of supply cut off by the war.

"We are here in an entirely neutral capacity," said Dr. Hale. "Our aim in this investigation is to learn the best means of advancing science and developing industry under conditions which have demonstrated the national importance of science as never before. Germany has enjoyed great advantages because of long years of research in pure science and the development of her industries by scientific methods. Other countries must follow her example. In England almost all the optical glass for binoculars and other instruments and chemical glassware for laboratory use, were derived from Germany. Professor Jackson and other scientific men have succeeded by extensive research in overcoming this difficulty. Much progress also is being made in producing dye stuffs and other chemicals formerly obtained from Germany. Similarly in the advancement of steel, mining, and other industries the scientific genius of England is building up a tremendous force to attain the the end in view. Sir Robert Hadfield, head of the great Sheffield steel works, lays special stress on the importance of research in pure science as underlying all industrial advance. The United States faces precisely similar problems, and the National Research Council will endeavour to find means of solving them."

After a visit to the Continent Dr. Welch and Dr. Hale will return to America to attend the first meeting of the National Research Council.

A TRUE ZEPP STORY.

An octogenarian, who is in frail health, and somewhat deaf, was in bed, when a bomb burst not very far from his house. A son approached him, finding him wide awake, fearing he would be unduly alarmed, and asked: "Did you hear a noise?" The old man looked up with wide eyes. "I should think that I did!" he exclaimed, with irritation. "What a time of night to be taking in coal!"

Women are naturally of a clinging nature, but they are not in it with a stingy man when it comes to clinging to a dollar.

Roumania's Men Hardy and Healthy

Country Has Fully Prepared for the Stroke She Has Made

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—"Rumania is ready and she is backed by a two years accumulation of ammunition and other supplies," said L. R. McCollum of the Lucey Manufacturing Corporations, one of the largest oil land owing companies in Rumania, who was in this city yesterday. Mr. McCollum was in Rumania during the first eighteen months of the present war and is shortly to return to that country.

"I was in Rumania when the present European war broke out," he continued, "and I know that at that time Rumania would not have lasted much more than four weeks had she gone into the conflict. She was short of equipment, and also of ammunition and the Central Powers would have made quick work of any resistance she might have put up. But today it is all different. For more than a year and a half every factory, every mill, every plant that could be used in the turning out of munitions has been working day and night, and the result is that Rumania is ready.

"All of these plants and factories were commandeered by the Government, and the one object in view has been to create a reserve of supplies that would stand any test to which Rumania might be put. In addition, Rumania has also been getting large consignments of supplies from England, France, the United States, and other countries, most of it via, the trans-Siberian route. Before Bulgaria declared war on Serbia the Rumanians were able to lay in other large stores via the Salonika route.

"The Rumanian army is one of the best officered armies in the world. I say this without qualification. As regards the soldiers I know of none except perhaps those of Japan, who are so hardy and healthy. In the oil fields we employ thousands of these big peasants, and it is a common thing for a workman to walk twelve miles through the snow to his work, work eleven hours, and then walk back home at night. The principal food of the Rumanian army is a dish they call 'marmeliga' which is nothing but boiled corn meal. With this they have dried meats, cascaral, which is cheese made from goat's milk, and dried fish, with a little tea or coffee on the side. These things are plentiful in Rumania, and the 'menu' is itself the best proof of the simple problem that confronts Rumania when it comes to the subsistence of her fighting men.

"The equipment of the army is up to date in every particular. They received just before the war broke out 350,000 modern German rifles, and to show how tricky the Germans are when it comes to arming the other fellow, I need only mention that the extractor used to withdraw the shells were missing in every gun. But the Rumanias got busy and months ago had remedied the deficiency. I might mention that without the extracting mechanism the rifles were entirely useless. The artillery equipment is good, and the Rumanians have some fine field pieces of the larger calibres. Their mountain artillery is particularly efficient and well equipped.

"I am not a soldier, but I have an idea that Rumania will make her principal attack on Hungary through the pass in the Carpathians near the little city of Sinya, a beautiful resort where the King has his Summer palace. It is in the Prohova Valley, perhaps the richest region in all Rumania, and in which are the famous Rumanian oil fields. Up to the present time the Central Powers have depended mainly on these fields for their supply of gasoline and lubricating oils. Now that they are closed to them they will have to depend on the Galician fields, which are producing a minimum of oil owing to the fact that the wells and well equipment have been more or less destroyed as a result of the heavy fighting that has occurred and is still going on in that part of the eastern war zone.

"Rumania was also one of the countries upon which the Central Powers depended for their grain supply. Last spring the Rumanian Government contracted to deliver 250,000 carloads of grain to those Powers, but it is certain that only a part of the contract has been filled."

Mr. McCollum was asked what in his opinion would be the result of Rumania's entrance into the war so far as Bulgaria was concerned.

"Speaking as a plain, ordinary civilian observer, who has spent much time in Rumania and in Bulgaria," he replied "I should say it means Bulgaria's finish."

BRITISH AND TURKS CHASED BY FLOODS

And Advances Made Impossible on Both Sides—Heat and Lack of Water Other Factors.

The influence of floods on the British campaign in Mesopotamia was recently made the subject of an interesting article written by a British officer serving in the Near East. The article was sent to the British Intelligence Office in London. The article is as follows:

"The important part played by the Tigris and the Euphrates in the military campaign in Mesopotamia is hardly realized by the general public. The country in which the Garden of Eden is supposed to have been situated, has a climate which alone would be totally destructive to any garden. The average rainfall does not exceed seven inches a year, and for four months, from June to September, not a drop of rain falls, while the temperature reaches 100 degrees on the majority of days. Such climatic conditions could only produce desert, and the large waterless deserts, which bulk so largely in the minds of most people when they think of Mesopotamia, do in reality exist; nevertheless, the campaign is not being fought on the desert, but on rivers which supply a superabundance of drinking water and flow for part of their courses through well cultivated fields and groves of date palms.

"The names Tigris and Euphrates are familiar to every child, but about the rivers themselves little is known, even among well-informed people. These rivers collect the abundant water which falls on the hills and mountains of Asia Minor and convey it hundreds of miles to the thirsty soil of Mesopotamia, where large tracts of country, which would otherwise be desert, are cultivated and made to yield sustenance to a large population. But the rivers, to which both cultivators and soldiers owe so much, are trencherous friends, and their moods have to be studied with great and constant care if they are not to become sources of peril and disaster.

"There are other deserts in the world through which rivers as big as the Euphrates and Tigris run without any alleviation of the arid conditions resulting. Practically every part of the country through which the Euphrates and Tigris run is below the flood-level of the rivers, and to precent an annual inundation of the whole country the Arabs have raised the banks of the rivers by almost continuous "bunds" (or dams) which run along each bank of the river from the headwaters to the sea.

"These 'bunds' are composed of loose earth, just heaped up at the edge of the river, and they are generally less than six feet broad and only three or four feet high. When one goes up the river during the flood with the surface of the water on which the steamer floats a foot or two above the level of the surrounding country, the importance of the 'bund' and its apparent unsuitability for its work strikes one with great force.

"In peace time the 'bunds' are a constant source of anxiety to the Arabs, for a broken 'bund,' probably not noticed until the river has already pierced it, must be repaired at once if miles of land are not to be put under water with consequent damage to crops and property. In war time the 'bunds' are of even vital importance. For two months the water in the river is above the surrounding grounds on which the military camps are pitched and operations take place, and failure to achieve complete success has more than once been due to the Turks breaching the 'bunds' and flooding trenches already taken by the British. The use of this expedient is, however, by no means confined to one side, and whole tracts of country held by the Turks have been rendered untenable by us through the judicious cutting of the river 'bund.'

"When one considers the length of the 'bunds' and the imperfect way in which they are constructed, it is not surprising that the confinement of the water, is far from perfect and that there are many square miles of marsh and shallow lake. It is an interesting fact, not yet fully explained, that the chief lakes and marshes are generally one or two miles away from the rivers, the land in between being dry or only marshy during prolonged bad weather. It is on this narrow strip of land between the river and the marsh that military operation usually take place. Manoeuvring under such conditions would be difficult at any time, but there are factors which add still greater difficulties. For example, the extent of the lakes and marshes varies very considerably from time to time, and land which is passable one month is quite impassable the next, without any very apparent cause.

"Also the conditions at any season are different from year to year, so that it is quite impossible to be certain that a road, which was suitable for considerable traffic one year, will be available the next. There is further a more sudden danger to be feared. The actual positions of the lakes are greatly affected by the direction and force of the wind. Certain of these lakes have been observed to extend on one side and contract on the other for as much as one or two miles, when a strong northerly wind has succeeded a strong southerly wind. These changes do not take place slowly; in one case the edge of a lake was seen to approach a camp at twelve to fifteen yards a minute, which necessitated a rapid change of site.

"All these difficulties are at their maximum during the period of high flood which extends throughout the greater part of March, April and May. During these months the movement of troops along the rivers, although not entirely impossible, is fraught with the greatest danger. Troops may encamp one night on good dry ground with little or no water in sight and yet find the next morning that a broken bund, a shifting lake, or water which has appeared without any obvious cause, has made it impossible to stir from a camp which itself may then be under water.

"The period of the year at which the river is in flood is unfavourable, both for purposes of peace and war. The floods are caused by the melting of the winter snows in the Caucasus and the hills of Asia Minor, and, therefore, the river commences to rise early in February and reaches its highest level at the end of March. April and May are the chief flood months.

"As to the effect on cultivation during peace times Sir William Willcocks points out that whereas the Nile is in flood from August to October, thus permitting of winter cultivation without further irrigation, the floods in Mesopotamia are followed by the burning and rainless months of June, July and August, which destroy any effect of the previous flooding of the land. This makes it impossible to use the flood water in the simple way that is practised in Europe. For war, the flood also occurs at an inconvenient time. If there had been no flood during March to May this would have been by far the best time for military operations. The weather is then better than at an other time during the year, there being little rain and a reasonable temperature. These favourable climatic conditions are entirely nullified by the danger due to the high river, which leads to the consequences detailed above.

"The campaign in Mesopotamia has truly been beset by many natural obstacles. Far away from the rivers want of water makes operations impossible, while near to them the excess of water is nearly as great a difficulty. For twenty long months our soldiers have fought indomitably against these odds, and it is only necessary for the position to be understood for every one to wonder at the great things achieved rather than at the apparent want of success.

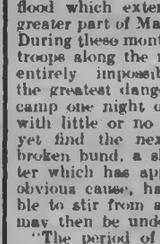
"That success will finally be won no one can doubt, but patience will be necessary. Meanwhile our soldiers are continuing their struggle against conditions which are unique in the whole wide extent of this war."

THE JOY OF MOTHERHOOD

Words of Encouragement to Childless Women.

Motherhood is woman's natural destiny, but many women are denied the happiness of children simply because of some curable derangement.

Among the many triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is its marvelous power to overcome such derangements, as evidenced by the following letter:—



Worcester, Mass.—"I suffered from female ills, and was advised to have an operation, but a friend who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and who has six children, told me to try it. It has helped me so much that I am now well and have a baby boy who is the picture of health, and I thank the Vegetable Compound for my restoration to health." —Mrs. BERT GARVEY, 20 Hecker St., Worcester, Mass.

In many other homes, once childless, there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong.

Features of Carso Plateau

With Monte San Michele occupied by the Italians and their infantry advancing from Sdraussina in the north and from Monfalcone in the south, General Cadorna was able to close in upon the Doberdo Plateau, which lies between, and press the Austrians eastward as though squeezed out from a pair of pincers. Due east of Gorizia the new Italian line extends beyond a little place called Boschini, possibly to the suburbs of Dorinbergo.

These two lines, Monfalcone-Gorizia and Gorizia-Moschini, form the jaws of a new pair of pincers which threatens the Carso Plateau in the same manner that they closed over Doberdo.

The Carso Plateau is a quadrilateral elevation dying along the Gulf of Trieste; its northern and eastern sides are bounded by the railway which goes to Trieste via San Daniele; its western and southern side (the gulf side) by the railway which goes from Gorizia to Trieste via Monfalcone. Gorizia and Trieste are thus at opposite angles of the quadrilateral, which incloses an area of about 162 square miles.

The Carso, which the Austrians call Karst, has a few stone hamlets and is crossed by a few highways. Before Italy entered the war and during last summer it had been turned into an in trenched camp to protect Trieste. What its defenses are at present is not known, but it is not believed that the Austrians have sufficient men to maintain them according to their original plans.

From a military point of view, with sufficient men well intrenched and munitioned, it would be capable of observing a stout resistance were it not for the fact that warships from the gulf could be used to enfilade its works. A visitor to the plateau before these works were built thus described the terrain:

"A more barren, forbidding, inhospitable tract of country than the Carso I never saw. As far as the eye can reach northward and eastword, yes, and much further than one could walk or even drive in a long summer's day, there is nothing but a tireless lifeless waterless wilderness of rough ground, strewn all over with rugged limestone boulders of all sizes.

"Everywhere, too, there are what are called 'dolenin' — large funnel-shaped holes, some fifty feet in diameter, some a few hundred. Their sides are perfectly formed, and slope gradually downward. They are all of moderate depth, from 50 to 100 feet. Their sides are generally grown over with grass, and sometimes there are clumps of shrubs and dwarf trees. Occasionally their bottoms are flattened and cultivated.

"But if there is nothing of beauty on the surface of the Carso there is a wealth of it underneath. The surface is only a crust, covering the most elaborate and beautiful subterranean chabbers and galleries in the whole world. Here there is plenty of water, small lakes and pools, with eyeless fish in them, and streams and revulets working their way to the light."

SELECT MEDICINE CAREFULLY

Purgatives are dangerous. They gripe, cause burning pains and make the constipated condition worse. Physicians say the most ideal laxative is Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Buchu Nut; they are exceedingly mild composed only of health-giving vegetable extracts. Dr. Hamilton's Pills restore activity to the bowels, strengthen the stomach and purify the blood. For constipation, sick headache, biliousness, and disordered digestion, no medicine on earth makes such remarkable cures as Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Try a 25c box yourself.

When you gather a head of cabbage from the garden pull it up by the root, cut out the head and give the loose leaves to the chickens. Plant another cabbage plant in its place, and you will have cabbage with economy of space.

Many Serbian Youths To Study in England

LONDON, Aug. —The scanty ranks of the Oxford and Cambridge under-graduates, who have been left by the war, are likely to be swelled next October by a certain number of Serbian students. But they will not properly be Oxford and Cambridge men, but will be members of the University of Belgrade, which will carry on part of its work in the famous English seat of learning.

All the students will be refugees. When the Teutonic and Bulgarian armies over-ran Serbia most of the women and children remained behind and their fate is to-day unknown. But several thousand accompanied the army in its heroic retreat across the mountains, and it is from the ranks of the boys and youths who thus escaped into safety that the educational work for Serbians started in England has obtained its pupils.

The refugees were conveyed to Corfu and from there to Marseilles. For some weeks they were kept in strict quarantine to make sure they were free from typhus and other war diseases, and then the relief committees of their allies took up the problem of their future. France provided for many and to England several hundred of the children and, particularly the boys and youths, were conveyed.

It was decided to start schools for them at Oxford and Cambridge, because there it was possible to obtain accommodation in the colleges, which the war has emptied. At Cambridge, for example, at two theological colleges, Westminster and Cheshunt, which should rightfully be training ministers for the Presbyterian and Congregational churches. But young men are fighting, not preaching, in these days, and it was easy to take over the colleges for the Serbian refugees.

At Westminster College about eighty lads are accommodated. The college is the most recently erected, and with its two projecting wings, its formal border of bright-coloured flowers and its sundial, it looks for all the world like an old-fashioned English manor house. Yet its grounds ring with the shouts of Serbian children, and notices in the unfamiliar Russian characters hang from its screens.

For although the lads are taught in England, no attempt is being made to turn them into Englishmen. Several Serbian schoolmasters have come with them and carry on their regular studies in Serbian. An orthodox priest trains them in the tenets of the Greek Church. They keep the Serbian holidays, fly the Serbian flag, and sing the traditional Serbian songs.

They are, indeed, taught English by volunteer teachers from Cambridge. The daughter of one of the regular university professors will come regularly and though she knows no Serbian, will succeed by infinite pains in teaching the children the rudiments of English by the conversational method. They are keen enough to learn and with two fingers raised shook out their hands to let the teacher know they can tell her in her strange tongue what she has done with the chalk and whether she has placed it on her chair or in the drawer.

Few of the pupils know whether or not they are orphans or not. The storm of war overtook them and they fled. They were brought to England after many trials and they know nothing of the fate of their families. Their fathers, they know, of course, are in the army, if they have survived, but if their mothers and sisters are still alive they may be in the interior of Serbia, subject to all the horrors of alien rule, or may have got away to one of the refugee camps.

But all their education is directed to fit them for a return to their homes and the rebuilding of their native land. They are to remain Serbians in spite of their sojourn in foreign lands. So it has been agreed that if it is practicable to set up in Oxford-Cambridge classes in more advanced subjects the Serbia method shall be maintained.

Some of the older youths are to study medicine, agriculture, and engineering and may use the facilities of the English universities for these. After all, anatomy and mechanics know no national bounds and need of technical training must be the same the world over. But as few as possible Serbian professors will be invited to look after the Serbian students and they will be merely the guests of English colleges.

CAME FROM THE RANKS.

Rivals in Strike Crisis Fought Their Way to Top.

Washington, Aug. 29.— The great railroad conference here has brought together men who offer a fine example of the law of the "survival of the fittest" as applied to American business life.

"There are more brains in Washington than ever before," is a common expression about the Capital these days.

There are brains on both sides. The representatives of capital respect the brains of labour and vice versa. Generally speaking, all of the big men here "came from the ranks." You could count the college graduates of the one hundred or more railroad rulers on the fingers of your two hands, and the brotherhood leaders have all fought their way to the top. Take four leaders of the brotherhoods who now have the representatives of $20,000,000,000 worth of American railroads at bay. First there is the tall and soldierly A. B. Garretson, head of the conductors. Garretson used to be a conductor down in Texas and took his first lessons in diplomacy by throwing "bad" Mexicans off his train. He rose step by step in the organised labour movement, until he was named as a member of the Industrial Relations Commission, at the death of which he was again made head of the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors.

Then there is W. S. Carter, the conservative head of the firemen, who doesn't have much to say, studies most of the time, writes pieces for the magazines, and edits a couple of labour papers on the side.

Third on the list is W. G. Lee, the portly head of the trainmen. He is a master of statistics relating to railroad workers, and can prove to his own satisfaction in a minute that a trainman is treated unfairly when he gets less than a carpenter.

To make cottage cheese of fine texture have the water with which you scald the clabber merely hot. If it is boiling the curd will be very hard and lumpy.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S DRESS

By Anabel Worthington

This easily will be conceded a very practical design in a one-piece dress. It is so easily constructed that any one can undertake to make it without hesitation. There is no problem of cost either, for at almost all counters now one can find an astonishing array of pretty printed fabrics that are offered at very low prices. The light colored materials will be more satisfactory than dark—they always look so fresh and cool after laundering.

The width of the lower edge of the garment illustrated is 2¼ yards in size 36. A tuck in each front at the shoulder edge shapes the waist; style is given with trimming bands in solid color contrasting goods, cut bias. The square neck is effectively finished with this "trim" and the closing down centre front more clearly marked with the banding; the roll cuff on a short sleeve and the belt are of the same family.

The four-gore skirt shows a stitched seam down the centre. For a house dress figured percale, lawn, chambray, madras and such fabrics will be desirable, but for general utility wear linen, cotton gabardine and such will give a very worthy garment.

The pattern of No. 7,986 is cut in sizes 36 to 46 bust measure. To make in size 36 will require 5 yards of 36 inch material and ¾ yard 36 inch contrasting goods to trim.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

RUSSIANS CAPTURE 289 OFFICERS and 15,501 MEN

GERMAN COUNTER-ATTACKS IN THE WEST FAIL

Russians Resume Offensive; Bulgars Are In Retreat

Petrograd Announces Signal Success in Resumption of Fighting on Eastern Front---Bulgarian Army is Leaving Greece According to Reports From Athens---Heavy German Attacks on the Somme Front Were Repulsed With Big Losses to Enemy.

MOBILIZATION IN GREEK ARMY REPORTED

PETROGRAD, September 1.—Russian troops captured 289 officers and 15,501 men in a resumption of the fighting on the eastern front yesterday, it was officially announced to-day. The captured booty included six cannon and fifty-five machine guns.

Fierce fighting has broken out in the region of Lakachi, Clegsinetz and Halits, the War Office reported, after a fortnight of comparative inactivity on these sectors of the Russian front. In the Carpathians, in the region of Tomnatic, the Russians have captured a whole series of heights from the Austro-Germans.

Bulgarian Army is in Retreat

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

ATHENS, September 1.—The Bulgarian retreat from Greece appears to have begu. Serbian cavalry has arrived at the entrance of Sorovicevo. Bulgar detachments farther south at Elevis and Tsartsilar have been forced to evacuate their positions. Pateli, the last Bulgarian position on the Serbian left flank, was evacuated yesterday. The Bulgarians in the hilly country around Banitza tried, aided by artillery, to retake Garnicevo, but they were driven back with heavy losses. The Allies' artillery dominates the Bulgarian guns northeast of Banitza. Bulgarian forces are already reported marching northwards to Krusgrad, five miles north of Banitza, on the way to Brod, Negocani and Monastir.

Heavy German Attacks Fail

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, September 1.—The Germans delivered their heaviest counter attack against the British lines last night since the Somme offensive began, making an onslaught on a front of nearly two miles, General Haig reported this afternoon. Five separate attacks were launched against the British positions on a 3,000 yard front in the region of Ginchy and High Wood, after a terrific bombardment. Large German forces were employed but four attacks were repulsed with heavy loss.

The fifth German onslaught carried the Teutons into an advanced British trench at two points on a small frontage. British gunners successfully engaged several hostile batteries east of Beaurains, causing a big explosion. A British gas attack in the Ypres salient had satisfactory results.

Many Rumors About Situation In Greece

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, September 1.—A Reuters' despatch from Saloniks to-day said an unconfirmed report has ben received from Athens that King Constantine has abdicated the throne and that the Crown Prince has been appointed regent. The general mobilization of the Greek army has been ordered, the report said, and ex-Premier Venizelos, leader of the pro-Ally war party is supporting the Zaimis Ministry.

The report if true, apparently foreshadows Greece's entrance into the war on the side of the Allies. The Greek army was demobilized several months ago at the demand of the Allies, after being in arms for many months. Prince George, who is 26 years old, is the heir apparent to the Greek throne. The official British press report at Salonika cabled a report yesterday that King Constantine had fled from Athens. An Athens despatch recived in London yesterday said that Zaimis has resigned. This is contradicted by to-day's report from Salonika indicating that Zaimis is still at the head of the Ministry, and will have the support of Venizelos.

French Troops Clear Up a German Trench

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, September 1.—French troops cleaned up a German trench at Neuvron front, between Oise and Aisne, last night, taking some prisoners. On the Somme front the French artillery was very active in the regions of Estrees ad Soycourt. In Apremont Forest, southeast of Verdun, a weak German attack failed. French curtain fire stopped another German attack in Le Petre Woods. Several German aeroplanes were brought down in yesterday's fighting in the Somme district, two in Champagne and one in the Oise region. The cannonade in the Balkans is continuing, but no new infantry engagements have occurred.

REVOLUTION HAS BROKEN OUT IN GREEK CITIES

Garrison in Saloniki Surrounded by Revolutionists and French Forces Intervene Disarming the Greek Soldiers and Taking Possession.

GREEK SOLDIERS JOIN IN

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

SALONIKI, Sept. 1, (Bulletin). — A revolution has broken out in several Greek cities. The revolutionists surrounded the Greek garrison at Lessi Karaburnu, which surrendered, and a revolutionary committee is now administering this part of Macedonia. Greek gendarmes joined the force of volunteers and surrounded the garrison in Saloniki. The besieged troops fired from the barracks, when ordered to surrender, killing three of the besiegers and wounding two. Three regiments of Greek troops at Vodena have joined the revolutionists. The troops in the Saloniki barracks refused to surrender to the revolutionists. Gen. Sarrail, commander of the Anglo-French finally intervened, and with the approval of the revolutionists, agreed to disarm and intern the troops. They were taken to a suburb at Zitunlik, the officers being allowed to retain their swords. The barracks is now in the possession of French soldiers.

LIEUT. STEVENS IS RECOVERING

Peterboro Birdman Was Badly Hurt in Accident Some Time Ago

The many friends of Flight Lieut. Leslie Stevens of the Royal Naval Air Service and son of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Stevens of this city, will be glad to know that he is recovering from the effects of the severe accident he sustained some time ago, although he is still confined to the Naval Hospital at Chatham, Eng. Flight Lieut. Stevens, who has been in the flying corps in connection with the British Navy, for over a year, graduating from the aviation school at Toronto, was the victim of an unusual accident One of the men in his command had been out on a cross country flight and in alighting made a bad landing on the top of a hedge. Flight Lieut. Stevens went to inspect the machine, and while he was examining the under body of the aeroplane it shifted and the Peterborough boy was severely crushed. He has been in hospital for some time, but has so far recovered as to be in condition to be wheeled around the grounds.

WAGON STRUCK BY A TRAIN.

A wagon belonging to the Peterboro Fuel and Transfer Company was struck by a G.T.R. train this afternoon while crossing the tracks on Lake street. The driver was thrown off and badly bruised. The horses escaped.

FLIGHT LIEUTENANT STEVENS — Peterborough boy with the Royal Naval Air Service, who is recovering from the effects of an accident.

PARCELS AND LETTERS FOR CANADIANS WHO ARE PRISONERS OF WAR

Government Issues Revised Instructions for the Benefit of Relatives---More Canadian Troops Land in England ---Mr. Fred Cressman Going Overseas as a Birdman--- To-day's General Military News.

OTTAWA, Aug. 31.—Owing to difficulties experienced in sending letters and parcels to Canadian prisoners of war in Germany the Post Office Department has issued revised instructions regarding the despatching of mail to Germany. Postage need not be paid on either letters or parcels.

Regarding rules as to letters, the department reiterates that letters must be left open and should not exceed in length two sides of a sheet of notepaper, and on no account must the writing be crossed. Postcards are preferred to letters, and if the former are sent they must not contain views of warships, camps, docks, bird's-eye views and any conspicuous landmarks. Communications should be confined to family news, and no references to the naval, military, or political conditions are allowed.

Parcels must not contain letters, but outside of that there is no restrictions as to contents of parcels so long as they are intended for the benefit of the addressees. No parcels should exceed 11 pounds. Strong cardboard boxes, tin boxes, strong wooden boxes and several folds of strong packing paper are recommended as coverings. The address should be as follows: Rank, initials, name, regiment or other unit, British, Canadian, French or Belgian, etc., prisoner-of-war, place of internment, Germany. Money may be sent on information from the post office officials.

CAMP BORDEN, Aug. 31.—Bombers engaged in a mimic raid upon a series of trenches furnished an interesting spectacle here to-night. The demonstration of this feature of the soldiers' work at the front was staged really in preparation for the display to be given at the Canadian National Exhibition by picked men from the camp. Fifteen men with faces blackened according to custom, including bayonetmen, throwers and carriers bearing the projectiles, formed up to await the signal to advance. An explosion indicated that scouts had blown up the enemy's wire entanglements, and the party went forward, crouching to avoid detection. Sticks painted black on one side and white on the other were planted to guide the raiders to the gap in the wire. Reaching this breach the party divided to attack different sections of the entrenchments. The throwers hurled bombs, which described bright arcs in the air before bursting in firing and communicating trenches. A score of men representing hostile soldiers in the support trenches maintained a fire with rifles, and sent up rocket signals for aid from artillery and bright lights. Finally a loud explosion indicated that the party, headed by its bayonetmen, had cleared the trenches of enemies and blown up machine-gun emplacements. The demonstration, which was conducted by Captain N. P. Kelley and the staff of the Bombing School, gave the onlookers in some measure a conception of the nocturnal activities in the firing line.

OTTAWA, Aug. 31.—It is officially announced that the following troops have arrived safely in England:

127th Battalion, Camp Borden; 129th Battalion, Camp Borden; 136th Battalion, Camp Borden; 137th Battalion, Calgary; 138th Battalion, Edmonton; No. 10 Stationary Hospital, London; drafts and details.

His many friends will be glad to hear that Sergt. D. J. More, a Peterborough boy who went overseas as a non-com. in the 21st Canadian Battalion, enlisting here with the 57th detachment to the 21st, has been granted a commission, and is now Lieutenant D. J. More. He has a host of friends in the city who will be glad to learn of his well-merited promotion.

The organization of the 247th Battalion is proving that there is no scarcity of officers or of men who desire to take commissions. Lieut.-Col. Johnston has received scores of applications from all parts of the country from men who want commissions. Every mail adds to the number, and if the recruits for the ranks had applied in any such number during the past few days, the 247th would have established a recruiting record. In fact the commanding officer of the 247th could form a platoon from among the men who want officers' jobs. He is, however, moving slowly with the recommendation of officers. Recruiting for the ranks is slow at present, but is expected to pick up in the next few weeks, when a recruiting campaign will be launched.

OTTAWA, Aug 31.—In the course of a few days the Government will make a definite announcement in regard to recruiting throughout the Dominion under the new recruiting scheme, under which all people would be classified with the idea of ascertaining their fitness either for military services or for duties at home. Certain recommendations drafted by the officials of the Militia Department are now being considered by the Cabinet. Meanwhile an effort will be made to get the best men possible in each district to act as directors of recruiting, so that the new plan can be worked out with the least possible friction.

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 31.—A cablegram received here to-day stated that members of the 21st Battalion, composed almost entirely of eastern Ontario men, would be taken from the firing line for a much-needed rest.

ROUMANIANS HAVE CROSSED THE DANUBE

LIEUT. D. J. MOORE, a Peterborough boy who went overseas as a sergeant in the 21st Battalion and who has been given a commission.

New Allies Are Striking at Bulgaria Now as Well as at Austria—Invaders are Being Acclaimed in Transylvania.

OCCUPY MANY TOWNS

LONDON, Aug. 31.—With their armies over-running Transylvania, a large part of which, including rich industrial sections, is to be abandoned by Austria, the Roumanians to-night are reported to have struck at Bulgaria, Balkan ally of the Central Empires.

Crossing the Danube behind a curtain of artilery fire, Roumanian troops have occupied the large Bulgarian city of Rustchuk, according to news reaching Paris. Meanwhile great numbers of Russian troops are massing in the Roumanian Dobrudja to strike at Bulgaria from the north. Transports under protection of the Russian Black Sea fleet are landing troops at Constanza, the great Roumanian port, to aid in this blow. The commander of the Russian armies in Roumania arrived at Bucharest to-day, accompanied by his staff. He will be received in audience by King Ferdinand to-morrow, a despatch from the Roumanian capital states.

Nine Towns Occupied.

Already nine Transylvania towns and villages have been occupied by the Roumanians. All the passes of the Transylvanian mountains have been given up by the Austrians. Kronstadt, chief commercial city of the rich province, is semi-officially admitted to be in Roumanian hands, together with four other towns whose populations are more than 8,000. Kronstadt is a city of 40,000 inhabitants. Among other towns seized by the invaders are Hosszufalu, 9,000 inhabitants; Petroseny, 8,500; Bodza, Csukas, Csilianes, Gylufava and Lavazeny.

Heading for the Maros.

The Bucharest correspondent of the Daily News wires:

"Continuing their record of swift onslaughts, the Roumanians have advanced 20 miles beyond the Olt valley railway, and are now heading for the most important mid-Transylvanian river, the Maros, the valley of which is the historic road of invasion to the Hungarian plain to the westward.

"The Roumanian columns, after rushing the mountain passes and capturing the town of Harmanstadt, Fogaros, Kronstadt (Brasso), and Kezdi-Vasarheli, are linking together, making a front which extends from the Bukowinaan Carpathians, where it joins the Russians, to the Iron Gates of the Danube.

"The most difficult and steepest region of the Carpathians and Alps is now behind the victorious invaders, who are traversing a hilly region. Here the retreating Hungarians are in danger of being surounded if they resist.

"Everywhere in the Transylvania Roumanians acclaim the invaders as come to deliver them from a thousand years af Magyar oppression and guide the Roumanian vanguard."

The Roumanian invasion is described as an "avalanche" by correspondents at the front. Attacks are being delivered along a 400-mile front from Arzova at the "iron gates" of the Danube to the frontier of Bukowina. In order to shorten this extended line Austria is reported ready to abandon the entire corner of Hungary which lies below a line roughly drawn between Dorna, Vatra, and Orzova.

Such a withdrawal would throw open to invasion a stretch of more than 15,000 square miles of Hungarian territory, an area larger than the whole of Belgium. It is pointed out in inspired statements from Vienna, however, that it also would mean a shortening of the Austrian front of almost 200 miles, and would relieve vast numbers of troops for use in an offensive movement. The present front from Dorna Vatra to Orzova, which is on the Berbian border, is approximately 400 miles in length, due to the convolutions of the frontier line. The proposed straight front would give the Austrians a line of about only 200 miles to defend.

Beset on two sides and wit hone of her leading cities already reported in the hands of the Roumanians, a declaration of war from Bulgaria is momentarily expected. It was reported to-night from Berlin that simultaneous declarations would be made by Bulgaria and Turkey, but the date was not yet known. The Turkish Council of Ministers already has decided to strike, it is stated, the decision having been reached on August 29. The situation in Sofia, however, is said to be serious. The Weekly Press prints a despatch to the effect that Bulgaria has notified the Central Empires 200,000 Turks must be sent to her aid if she is to declare war on Roumania.

Falling off in the Number of Births, Marriages and Deaths—Indifference to Vital Statistics.

BUILDING PERMITS

The vital statistics for the month of August show a falling off in the number of births, marriages and deaths. The number of births and marriages decreased by three in each while the number of deaths decreased by six. The figures are as follows:

	Aug., 1915	Aug., 1916
Births	42	39
Marriages	17	14
Deaths	27	21

Building Permits.

The number of building permits issued during the month was double that of a corresponding period last year, while the valuation also shows a substantial increase. During the month, twelve permits were issued representing a total valuation of $12,035, while for a similar period last year, six permits were issued representing a valuation of $1,545.

Indifference to Vital Statistics.

People who would be extremely particular in seeing that valuable live stock is registered, are totally indifferent to the registration of their children. This statement is made in the Public Service Bulletin, published by the Ontario government, and which, among other things, describes the work of the registrar-general. Confirmation is found in this report of the statement frequently made by The Monetary Times, that the Canadian people and, to some extent, the authorities, show serious neglect in the matter of vital statistics. These records are of great importance but in this country they lack completeness and uniformity to a surprising extent. "Notwithstanding the fact that there are certain laws and penalties (in Ontario) regarding this very important matter, as well as free forms supplied by the department to facilitate such registration, it is remarkable that a fairly large number of people neglect the matter until threatened with the law," says the report.

Physicians are required by law to notify births which they attend. It is stated that the physician fails to do this "many times." The registrar-general's department then interferes and, as the report says, many a physician has recently been taught by legal conviction that this duty must be carried out. Our governments should not hesitate to exercise to the fullest the laws governing the registration of vital statistics.

WHY THE OPPOSITION?

After a good deal of hesitation the Ontario Government passed an order-in-council, authorizing the change of name of Berlin, Ont., to Kitchener The Postmaster-General excused his refusal to change the name in the postal list till the Ontario Government had acted. Now that this miracle has come to pass the Postmaster-General, it is said, has promised a pro-German deputation that so far as the Postoffice Department is concerned, the change in name will not go into effect. If this is so, in face of the vote of the people of Berlin in favour of change of name, we have not government of the people by the people, but government of the people by the Kaiser, through a little clique of pro-Germans who can get the ear of the Postmaster-General. It would be a nice thing to know why the Ontario Government and the Dominion Government are playing into the hands of the pro-German element in this country by "monkeying" with the proposal endorsed by the people of Berlin, to substitute for a name typical of all that humanity and civilization abhor and virtually despise a name that is typical of all high qualities of ability and energy, and a standing reproof to the qualities of hesitation and helplessness that both governments show in this matter.

A GOOD SIGN.

Von Hindenburg, the new Chief of Staff of the German armies, is the idol of the people of Germany. Earlier in the war he got the better of the Russian armies — little more in the matter of equipment and munitions, than an advance guard, and was virtually deified by the deluded German people. All over Germany wooden statues of the new Napoleon were erected, and his individual admirers covered them by each driving in one or more iron nails. Von Hindenburg has got a little harder task now, and has to face harder conditions; with a virtually beaten army; with an immensely strengthened enemy — strengthened by preparation, like a giant refreshed with new wine. The prospects are brilliant for a new experience for the popular idol of the Germans. Instead of nails going into his wooden effigy, Hindenburg will feel "the iron enter his soul." He is the leader of a forlorn hope. He may make some change, but he has been called in too late. There has happened nothing more encouraging to us, and, more indicative of the fact of German fortunes going wrong, than the Kaiser's change in his general staff, and the wholesale cashiering of German generals. If one of our big industries should, some morning, "fire" its whole staff, we should conclude that something was desperately wrong.

A FAIR TRIAL.

Ontario need not exalt itself over the patriotism of its prohibition measure. Russia set the example, and now Rumania, only four days in the war, has forbidden the sale and consumption of strong drink in all establishments in the country. But there is a little difference. Rumania has doubtless decreed prohibition as a war measure, but in Ontario the element of patriotism was not so strong a factor. The Government refused to act till public sentiment forced its hand, and, the two parties uniting, the law was passed. Constitutionally, this action represented the wishes of the people. It was the almost unanimous expression of the opinion of their representatives. Whether or not the people as a whole favour prohibition remains to be seen. If the prohibition act is given a fair chance, if it is honestly enforced, the plebiscite in 1920 will provide the test of public opinion and decide the fate of the law. It is probable the popular vote, under such conditions, will be in favour of making the prohibition measure permanent. But the fact will not furnish a fair test of the value of prohibition unless the law, imperfect as it is in some ways, is tried out to the extent of its capacity by rigid enforcement. For a time at least there will be strong attempts made to contravene the law. Habitual drinkers will have their thirst accentuated by the difficulty of satisfying it, and there will be many to encourage and help them to infractions of the law. But if these attempts are frustrated, or made costly, by strict enforcement, even the habitual drinker will become discouraged and accept the prohibition of his own degradation and ruin, as a good, and there will be a universal tendency to accept prohibition as a condition of daily life. If prohibition, fairly enforced, prohibits, and justifies itself not only as a benefit to the people in the social relation, as it will be as a patriotic measure, the public favour will be secured. We are fighting and spending immense sums to win the war, and if restriction or abolition of drink is a necessary and effective help in the discharge of this duty, why will it not be equally effective in the strenuous battle of life in times of peace. Even opponents of prohibition should be in favour of giving the law a fair trial. The Government will be ill-advised if it yields to pressure to modify the law so as to make it less effective. Better make the law more effective, give it a fair trial, and then we shall have settled the question as to whether or not prohibition prohibits.

FIRE INSURANCE.

It is asserted by Mr. E. P. Heaton, Provincial Fire Marshall, that there is a combine in fire insurance. It is asserted that rates of fire insurance are not fixed by competing companies, but by the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Associataion. No company can effect insurance, under the rate fixed by the "combine," without incurring severe penalties. Speaking of the "combine," Mr. Heaton says:

"That the association (Canadian Fire Underwriters has entered into an agreement with the only insurance map and plan publishers in Canada to restrict the use of maps and plans to members of the association, thus producing an actually practical monopoly in favour of the tariff companies.

"That in many instances the association has caused to be cancelled policies of insurance from many large insurers, having Dominion-wide business and branches, notwithstanding the willingness of individual members to accept the same, and that the effect of such action on its part has been to require large insurers to seek unlicensed insurance.

"That the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association has admittedly failed to make any serious effort to obtain reliable statistics upon which the adequacy of rates might with some degree of confidence be predicated."

This is a matter that deserves careful attention on the part of the government, one that needs delicate handling. While it is necessary to protect the insuring public against excessive rates it is at the same time necessary to provide conditions that will insure the public that insurance insures, that is, that there is not only reasonable, but absolute assurance that policies which shall become claims, have behind them the ability to meet such claims. Cheap insurance is only cheap where the reliability can be absolutely depended upon. It is the duty of the government to protect the insured, not only against unfair or discriminating rates, but in providing that there is solvent ability behind every policy to meet its terms and insure payment of claims that may arise under it.

DELUDED GERMANS.

The ruin of the German people is their mistaken belief that they are more clever and cunning than any other people. Just now they think they can hang on and make the war a draw, and they think nobody but themselves are clever enough to see that if they can make it a draw they will score a win, because in the war they have looted and wrecked the industries of neighbouring countries while their own industries stand ready to resume work, night and day, in supplying the world's markets. But they cannot always make war on their neighbour's premises, and this time it will be brought home to them. Nor will the whole world trade with them again as if nothing had happened. They have forfeited so much of the good will of the world that they will be a long time in regaining it.—Toronto Star.

FLANGED WHEELS OVER PAVEMENT COST DRIVER $5

The distinction of establishing a court precedent, local at any rate, fell to the lot of Mr. R. C. Hurd in the police court, when he admitted having driven a threshing machine with flanged wheels over the highway without a special permit. Mr. Rush stated that the maximum fine was $100, but in view of the fact that it was a first offence, as Mr. Bert McAvoy pointed out, he applied a fine of five dollars.

ARE MR. HEARST AND COLLEAGUES DISCREDITED?

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, Aug. 30.—Much has been and and written about the cause and effect of the defeat of the government candidate recently in the Tory stronghold of South West Toronto.

Whilst the Government's unsympathetic attitude in regard to the important question of Hydro development and nickel conservation doubtless contributed to the defeat of their candidate, the weakness shown by Premier Hearst in descending from the lofty platform he mounted at the time of the passing of the Ontario Temperance Act, in order to endorse a "wine and beer" nominee (combined with the gutter talk and low tactics of members of his cabinet during the election campaign), is probably more responsible than anything else for the utter rout of the government's forces in this momentous bye-election.

From the election returns it seems pretty evident that thousands of Conservatives stayed from the polls rather than support the wobbling attitude of Mr. Hearst in connection with an Act upon which he had staked his political existence. In moving the second reading of The Ontario Temperance Act in the House, he said: "I would rather, ten thousand times go down to political oblivion and have my name blotted from the pages of the history of this Province, than fail in what I believe to be my duty at the present time." In the North Perth contest the Premier reiterated his determination to stand by the Act and yet, no sooner were there signs of ship-wreck amid the stormy (liquid) elements of South West Toronto, than he commenced to waver and vacillate, instead of boldly defending his action and continuing his course without fear or favour

The extraordinary statements of the Hon. I. B. Lucas (the Attorney-General), in connection with the government's prohibition measure, which he was largely instrumental in drafting, namely, that there are "absurdities" in the Act, together with his notorious "ear-to-the-ground" expression in connection with possible amendments to the Act and, further, the insolent, abusive, and ungentlemanly personalities hurled by Hon. G. Howard Ferguson (the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines), at Mr. Dewart, in answer to the latter's arraignment of the government on their nickel policy the back-down of the Attorney-General on the Hydro question, and Mr. Hearst's surprising endorsation of Norris have discredited the government more than anything else could possibly have done.

Mr. Ferguson is severely criticized by political friends and opponents, alike, on the astounding indiscretions he committed in his discussion of the bilingual situation. He referred to the French Roman Catholic priests as "imported hybrids," who had been driven out of France and wished to build up a new France on this side of the ocean. He said the priests forbade their people to speak English, or to send their children to English schools and from their pulpits they denounged all French-Canadians who enlisted in the army of the Empire. That the French population is incensed more than ever over the Minister's unseemly utterances is palpable from a perusal of the French-Canadian press.

The effect of the attitude adopted by the Provincial Cabinet towards its own legislation and the methods employed by them to retain the sweets of office, has been to alienate the sympathies of erstwhile staunch supporters and the only result can be an expression of their resentment on every possible occasion until a general election presents the opportunity to throw the offensive hedgers out neck and crop.

INTERESTING FEATURES AT TORONTO EXHIBITION

One of the most popular resorts on the ground is the Independent Order of Foresters headquarters, where they have erected a magnificent tent, beautifully furnished and decorated ith palms and flowers, and where every comfort is offered to the many Foresters, friends and visitors whom they will receive during the two weeks of the Fair. This will be a much sought-after spot, as there are so very few places of rest.

When visiting the tent you will be received by G. A. Mitchell, A.S.C.R., assisted by the two able Deputy Supreme Chief Rangers, Brothers Fellman and Harvey Lloyd. A most attractive calendar has been prepared for distribution, and several other novelties will be given to all visitors. It will be well worth while for the many admirers of this great Order to make a call at this tent and learn more about the great Fraternal work the I.O.F. are doing, and to listen to the stories they tell with reference to caring for the orphans—the little children who have lost their mothers and fathers, and also the great work they are doing in their sanatoriums in treating their members who are afflicted with tuberculosis.

NEWCOMBE PIANOS.

Standing out among the piano exhibits of the Exhibition of 1916 are those of the Newcombe Piano Company, Ltd., in the Manufacturers' Building. This firm supplied a piano to the late Queen Victoria, but still more indicative of their standing in the trade is the fact that they hold medals won in open competition in New Orleans in 1884 and 1885, in London, Eng., in 1886, in Chicago in 1893, in Paris in 1900, and in Jamestown, Va., 1907. Their claim to consideration is that they put the same work manship and finish into the run of the pianos as in the prize-winners. They have the only piano in Canada equipped with the patent tension rods at the back, and are also showing the latest Player-piano known to the trade.

Anyone unable to visit the Exhibition should write to Head Office of the Newcombe Piano Co., at 359 Yonge street, Toronto, for illustrated catalogues of pianos and players, or call upon the nearest representative of this old established company.

OWNERSHIP OF LAND

Puts a man upon a business and financial footing which nothing else can do. Such being the case, should not every wage earner be ambitious enough to buy one or more of my Western Ave. lots near May's school and all south end factories, right in the way of the city's most rapid growth; certain to increase in value as the city grows south and west, which all know it is doing. My lots are priced under value, $150 to $225 for inside lots, average size 30 x 125 ft. Perfect lots and perfect title. No taxes this year and no interest until March, 1917.

Terms, $10 down and $5 monthly, with assistance to build when $100 is paid. This makes it easy for a man to own his home. When the war is over, thousands will come here, and rents will be very high. A wise man will accept my offer and do so now.

Big discount for all cash paid.

"THE FIRM WITH A REPUTATION"

Cause of The A.O.U.W. Trouble

Professor Explains It —Low Rates of Insurance Force the Living Members to Pay for the Claims of the Dead

Professor Mackenzie of the University of Toronto, who was the actuary appointed to revalue the policies of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, gave an explanation as to why several hundred of the older members should be informed that their policies in the Order are valueless on the new basis of insurance. Professor Mackenzie said:

"The Ancient Order of United Workmen has paid $21,000,000 in death claims to members who have paid a bare $5,000,000 into the fund. The order has no other sources of income except its members. Since 11,000 men who have died have received $21,000,000 in return for assessments amounting to $5,000,000 the shortage must be made up from among the members who have survived.

"Had all the members, both those who have survived and those who have died, paid adequate rates from the beginning, there would have been no shortage. It is impossible to collect from the dead."

A few years ago, in an attempt to place the order on a sound financial basis, the supreme council offered the older members paid-up policies for an amount slightly is excess of what they had actually paid in, and it is these policies which are now declared to be worthless, and on which a test case to the courts will be made by some of the members.

INADEQUATE RATES

F. G. Inwood, Grand Recorder, says:

"The order has been operating on inadequate rates for many years. The Grand Lodge, in March of the present year, by a vote, gave a mandate to ask for a special act from the Ontario Legislature to have the certificates of all the members, 26,000 in number, revalued and placed on a sound actuarial basis.

"The Legislature unanimously approved the act after hearing both sides for and against. Prof. Mackenzie made a valuation of all these certificates and reduced them to their actual value. The act is entirely in harmony with the mandate from the Grand Lodge, and the actuary is entirely in accordance with the act obtained."

Mr. Inwood pointed out further that the A.O.U.W. was a fraternal order, and the rates were fixed by the members themselves, not by the board, as would be the case with an insurance company. The very men who were protesting against the action of the actuary under the act had repeatedly voted against an increase in the assessment.

OHIO SALOON KEEPERS WOULD REDUCE SIZE OF BEER GLASSES

AKRON, O., Sept. 1.—Beer glasses in Akron will probably be smaller soon. Brewers have announced that an increase of 72 cents a barrel will be made in the wholesale price because of higher prices for ingredients. The saloon men won't raise prices. They favour decreasing the size of the glasses.

OFFERS $100 REWARD FOR PERSON WHO PUT DRUGS INTO PUNCH

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 1.—The Junior Hop club, New Albany, voted to offer a reward of $100 for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who drugged punch served at the club's dance at Glenwood park, causing acute suffering for a dozen or more young men and girls.

The physicians believe that croton oil, ipecac or lobelin was the drug the joker dropped into the punch after it had been delivered at the park pavilion. It is certain that the symptoms of the sufferers, such as burning at the mouth and in the throat, extreme nausea and acute pains in the stomach, indicated the use of a powerful irritant.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Sept. 3rd, 1916.

Paul's Sorrows and Comforts. II. Cor.. 11:21; 12:10.

Golden Text, My grace is sufficient for thee; for my power is made perfect in weakness. II Cor. 12-9.

1. Verses 21, 22. When a truly good man is called upon to defend himself from attack or to advance Christ's cause, why should he not be as free to tell of his own work for the cause, as if he were speaking of the work of another?

2. If a man calls himself a weak man when he knows himself to be strong, or speaks of the little he has done, when he knows that he has done much, or in any way speaks of himself below what he knows himself to be, why is he not a falsifier just as if he had testified contrary to the facts in the case of another?

3. Why should it be considered any lack of modesty or good taste in Paul or in any other man, to give a full account of his qualifications and of his sufferings in connection with the cause of Christ?

4. Verses 21, 22. What are the advantages or disadvantages of being born of good stock.

5. What was there for Paul to boast of from the fact that he was a Hebrew, an Israelite, and of the seed of Abraham

6. What are the advantages, or disadvantages of a man to-day who can claim the same ancestry as Paul did?

7. Verse 23. Why was it necessary for Paul in those days to endure the tortures he did in order to propagate a gospel of "peace on earth and good will toward men"?

8. Verse 23. If Paul were alive to-day and preached the Gospel as he did in that day how would he treated by the present Christian church?

9. The average preacher of to-day is well treated—to what do you attribute the fact?

10. On the theory that God calls every man to the work in which he should engage, what do you consider the highest calling and why?

11. Verses 24-27. What is the best word picture you can draw of this hero, who bore such unparalleled suffering in order to serve others?

12. Verses 24-27. How many of these cruel sufferings, to which Paul here refers, are mentioned elsewhere in the New Testament? (See Acts 9:24, 25; 14:19; 16:22, et seq.)

13. Verses 28-33. Is Paul an exception or is it the duty of all Christians to be as self denying and earnest as he was, and if we were, what would be the result as to our personal suffering or otherwise? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by the members of the club.)

14. Which and why, is the greatest man in the estimation of God, the one who who excels in education, in science, in oratory, in statesmanship, in war, or the one who excels in love, and in self denying effort for others?

15. Chap. 12: 1-6. What is the logical or scientific value of Paul's experience of heaven?

16. In the last generation it was customary for preachers to bring into their sermons a lot of personal experience; in this generation it is conspicuous for its absence. Which is the better, and why?

17. What is the real proof to an individual of immortality, and of the wisdom of the spiritual life?

18. Chap. 12:16. Why would you say or not that it is probable or possible that a Christian to-day may have a similar experience of the unseen world as Paul had?

19. Verses 7-10. What was Paul's thorn in the flesh?

20. What is the chief "thorn" that robust Christian men have to-day?

Lesson for Sunday, Sept. 10, 1916. The Arrest of Paul. Acts 21:17-40.

THE 4TH DIVISION IN REVIEW

CANADA'S MIGHT—BY CANADIAN OVERSEAS

On the morning of August the 7th all roads led to Hankley Commons near Bramshott. The narrow English lanes with their high hedges and over hanging trees, meant only for the pony trap and the pedestrians, hugged and smoked with a double line of motors each panting and groaning to more a head.

As one emerged from the dark overhanging road a wonderful panorama came in right. The scene of the review was a great heatly, sandy valley rimmed level-edged hills. A drab morning left the hills and valley a soft purple here. The khaki of all those phalanxes of men, waiting silent and immovable blended so well with the yellow purple amphitheatre that when the minister of war first stood out at the soluting base he faced—save for the vivid Red Crosses on the Ambulance waggons—an apparently still and empty valley.

Suddenly the bugle, and a flash of steel appeared the length of the valley. Thus was the salute given by 30,000 men and the pagent of might was about to commence.

The empty valley came to life and was packed with thousands of warriors, with horses and mules, with transports and pontoons, ammunition waggons and moving field kitchens (all rushing and savary) with machine gun sections and cyclist and motor cyclist detachments.

Brigade after brigade, battalion after battalion in half companies, a pageant of might and valour, the Canadians marched past the war minister and their general. As they passed the saluting base the lines beyond on the hills were marching into place—a solid moving mass. It was a thrilling and glorious spectacle—it thrills Mr. Lloyd George to a most excellent and impassioned speech. It thrilled every spectator with a sense or power and strength, but when one thought of the object of it all, this was changed to a feeling of dread and helplessness. The beholder felt in a new sense, looking at only this section of what Canada has done, this minute section of what the Empire has done, the sublimity, the unparalled effort of the British Empire is raising within two years an army finer than Germany has raised in 40 years.

Magnificient in physique, hardtrained to the last, all those thousands of determined faces, were alight with enthusiasm, they turned to salute. The average tallness of the men was remarkable; their fire came forth in the swing of their march; they moved as freemen joyously giving up all for humanity's freedom. Amongst them were thousands who had given up much, indeed given up all when the bugle of the Empire blew round the world—lawyers, doctors, engineers, architects, farmers, business men. In wave after wave came the valours of Canada. The divisional bands played warrior tunes; the bagpipes cried their strangely stirring music as kilted Canadians Highlander regiments swung past. The brigades marched complete—man, horse, waggon, and smoking funnelled field-kitchen.

And then Canada in England was silent, immovable, as the officers of the division closed in and the war minister addressed them.

"It is indeed a wonderful thing," he said, that after two years of war when our foes are beginning to be exhausted, we should be preparing to put into the field such troops as we have seen to-day. Our expeditionary force was 120,000 and it was our conviction that that was our contribution. Canada has already sent 120,000 and has more. That gives hope and confidence in the ultimate victory. Canada is determined to stand by the Old Country in her difficulties. If it had been as the Germans say, a war brought about because we were envious of them, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India would not have poured out their best blood on her behalf.

Men came from the rolling prairies, from the great isles of the Southern Seas, from Africa's sunny fountains, and from India's coral strands; they came to help Britain in her greatest struggle, and well have they helped us.

I am here as a Britain to thank Canada or her contribution. Sir Max Aitkin's brilliant description of the second battle of Ypres, when you saved Calais, will be read for many a long day in Canada. Just as the Rocky Mountains hurl back the storms of the West, so did you hurl back the hurricane of Germanic fury and in the poisonous fumes of Gehinna held high the honour of Canada and saved the British army. We are federating this great Empire for greater enterprises even, in the future. It will never be again as it was before the war. It will be one great coherent unit, doing more to direct the destiny of the world, than it has ever done in the past. From the bottom of my heart I congratulate you, General Hughes, who helped to raise this fine body of men and (turning to Brigadier-General Watson), you General Watson who will command them. In the struggle that is before you, may the Lord of Hosts be with you."

Well might Mr. Lloyd George, thank Canada, and well might Gen. Sir Sam Hughes say that "it goes without question" that the men before him would do as much in the cause of human liberty as those who had gone before. Canadian grenadiers, Canadian Highlanders, with pipers, infantry battalions in full marching order—ready to go to-morrow if need be—these were the men we saw to-day.—J.E.H. (Canadian Overseas).

LOSES FAMILY WHEN HE STEPS OFF TRAIN

Alexander Tish of Galeton, Pa., arrived in Buffalo last night en route to Cleveland from Galeton and reported the loss of his entire family to the police. Mr. Tish told Patrolman Martin the first officer he saw after alighting from a train at the station, that he left Galeton yesterday to go to Cleveland. The train on which they travelled stopped at Wellsville to change engines. There was a stop of two hours and there being no lunch counter in the station, Mr. Tish started up town to get sandwiches for his wife and three children who waited for him in the train. In returning to the station Mr. Tish lost his way and when he finally arrved the train was gone. He took the next train and arrived in Buffalo last night.

When Tish arrived at police headquarters he had only 25 cents and a ticket in his pocket. So Inspector Girvin took up a collection and started Tish off for Cleveland with money enough to buy food en route. Tish is hopeful of finding his family in Cleveland.

Leave Settlement To Russians Not To Soft-Hearted British

New York, August 31. — Russia must go to Berlin," said Mrs. Gertrude Atherton, the novelist, who was a passenger on board of the R chambeau, "and there dictate terms to Germany that will make her pay in full for the devastation she has caused. The settlement of terms should not be left to the softer hearted English and French."

Mrs. Atherton said that during her visit to the war zone she had been allowed to approach to within a few miles of the front, although never actually under fire, and she remained for some time in the village of Nancy, where she had an opportunity to study the destruction caused by the Prussians.

"The destruction was unnecessary," she said. "There was nothing but wanton lust of slaughter behind the minds that directed the sacking and the burning of villages from which they had to retire. No military advantages were gained.

"The Prussians are over-developed. They have cultivated militarism to such an extent that it over balances everything else with them.

"The atrocities of the Prussians are such that they cannot be described, nor photographed. They are beyond the power of the human mind to grasp. The Prussian idea of kultur is to destroy everything that is not Prussian in order to create a world Germany."

Mrs. Atherton said the wives of the German officers are among the worst plunderers.

"When the German army had hewed a path from Strassbourg the women followed in its wake, helping themselves to the booty they could loot from the villages," she said.

"In France there is not an idle woman. Those who are not running the street cars and performing the work of men are doing hospital and relief work. A wave of democracy is now spreading over the country. Although the bourgeoisie and the aristocracy could mix no more than oil and water, there is a spirit of co-operation.

"France is not in need. There is nothing resembling bread tickets in France. The only danger of shortage lies in the coal supply. Last winter even the rich suffered because of lack of coal."

DENTIST KILLED, PHYSICIAN HURT IN MOTOR CRASH

BEACON, N.Y., Sept. 1.—Dr. Julius W. Rivinius, dentist, of New York city, was killed, and Dr. Henry S. Bartholomew, physician, was injured, probably fatally, when an automobile in which they were riding was wrecked, eight miles north of this city.

They were on their way to Dr. Bartholomew's summer home, at White Hall, when the accident happened. It is believed something about the automobile broke causing it to plunge from the road and go down an embankment, turning upside down at the bottom, and burying both men under it.

It was some time before aid arrived When men lifted the automobile they found Dr. Rivinius dead, his neck broken. Dr. Bartholomew, who had been driving, was unconscious. He was sent to the hospital at Highland, where it was said that in addition to severe bruises and cuts his skull probably was fractured, and that he may die.

It had been the custom of Dr. Rivinius and Dr. Bartholomew to pass a few days each week this summer at the Bartholomew place at White Hall. Dr. Bartholomew always drove his friend up in his automobile. They arrived there last Friday evening and decided to remain throughout this week. They were on a pleasure ride when the accident happened. Dr. Rivinius, who was fifty-eight years old, has a sister, Miss Augusta Rivinius, living at No. 83 Pinkney street, Boston.

SINGER'S HUSBAND SEEKS DIVORCE

Boylington Skelton Declares He Spent Fortune on Voice of Wife Who Deserted Him.

Denver, Col., Sept. 1.—After waiting vainly for ten years for her return to him, Boylington Skelton, seventy years old, a wealthy contractor, began an action for divorce here against his wife, Mrs. Marguerite Starello Skelton, formerly a singer at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York city. Mrs. Skelton, who is now in Paris, has not yet been served with papers in the action.

Mr. Skelton alleged desertion as a cause for the divorce, and asserted in his complaint that his young wife left him after he had spent a fortune in the training of her voice. The romance had its inception nearly twenty years ago, when Mrs. Skelton came from Sweden to Denver and obtained a position as maid in the Skelton family. Discovery of her voice aroused Mr. Skelton's interest in the maid, and they were married in August, 1897.

Alderman Offers To Pay Half Cost Of Prosecuting Guilty

Alderman E. Lariviere, of Montreal, Shocked at Probe Disclosures, Offers to Contribute Half Expenses to Bring Those Found Guilty to Justice—Says Value of Probe Lost if Those Condemned Are Not Prosecuted in Public Courts.

MONTREAL, Sept. 1.— Alderman Emery Lariviere, the leader of the council, announced at the City Hall that as a result of what he termed "the scandalous disclosures" in connection with the Drolet street purchase before Mr. Justice Panneton he stood prepared to contribute one-half of any sum of money necessary, to bring action, criminal, or otherwise, against all those who may be condemned in the judgment of the court. Mr. Lariviere, who expressed himself very keenly on the subject of the probe declared that it would be disastrous if after what had been made public no action was taken to bring any parties found guilty of conspiracy to the bar of justice.

"It is, I suppose, a little premature for me to make known any intentions," Ald. Lariviere said, "but I feel that the matter is altogether too serious to be allowed to drop. I do not know what the contents of Judge Panneton's report will be but I do know that if there are any members of the council or of the Board of Control past or present or any civic officials held to blame in connection with what has happened in connection with the Drolet street deal I stand prepared to constribute one-half the cost of taking proceedings to restrain all officials concerned from exercising the functions of their various offices until their cases have been heard in the coutrs."

"I am quite in earnest in my intention," Mr. Lariviere said, "but of course, it must be understood that some public-spirited citizens or group of citizens comes forward with the other half of the money required."

Mr. Lariviere characterized certain of the evidence in the investigation as shocking and he repeated that it would be disastrous if after the conclusion of the probe any parties condemned for their share in the Drolet street deal were allowed to go unpunished.

Two members of the Board of Control, Messrs. Villeneuve, who started the probe, and Ross, have been of the opinion since the Drolet street probe started that the matter should not end with the presentation of the judge's report if there were any parties found guilty.

As a matter of fact it is only yesterday that Controller Ross stated that if the report of Mr. Justice Panneton made such a course necessary he would ask the Board of Control to send a report to the council asking that body to vote funds to allow of further action being taken.

WOMAN SHOOTS HER HUSBAND BELIEVING HIM TO BE THIEF

ATLANTIC CITY, Sept. 1.—Mrs. May Blind, 27 years old, who conducts a lodging house at 42 North Maryland Avenue, coming here from Philadelphia, is under arrest for shooting her husband, George Blind, of 2143 Woodstock street, Philadelphia.

The story Mrs. Blind related to the police is that she had been legally separated from her husband for nearly two years. About daylight this morning he appeared and entered the front door, which was unlocked. Hearing footsteps in the hall she opened the dining room door and saw the form of a man in the semi-darkness. Securing a revolver from the sideboard she called out to the man, who did not answer. She then fired.

He dropped to the floor instantly. In a few minutes the household was aroused and on examination the supposed burglar proved to be her husband.

DIES AT AGE OF 114 SAW NAPOLEON IN 1812

When Napoleon retreated from Moscow in 1812 the late Israel Webber, who died in Toronto on Friday last, was ten years old, and he saw the falling back of Bonaparte, as many ten-year-old Russians are witnessing the retreat of the Kaiser's legions to-day. Few of those young Russians will outlast a century of time like Israel Webber, who was 114 years old when he died. He was born in a little town in Witna, Russia, where he lived till fifteen years ago, coming to Canada to live with his sons. He was married four times; his last wife, who is over seventy, survives him. His eldest son died about eight years ago at the ripe age of seventy years.

The old man retained his faculties up to about four years ago, when he met with an accident which impaired his sight and hearing. Strange to say his sight suddenly returned to him about four months ago, and he could easily recognize people and tell the time of the clock. For the last few years he resided with his son-in-law, L. Kroll, at 84 William street. One son, William, lives at 219 Huron street; a daughter is Mrs. Cohen, 247 Markham street. One daughter lives in Russia, and another son is in London, England. The late centenarian was buried in the University Synagogue Cemetery on Sunday last.

SEVEN SCHOOL FAIRS FOR PETERBORO' COUNTY

Splendid List of Prizes Prepared by the Department of Agriculture

The rural school fair movement for the encouragement of the study of agriculture has assumed large proportions in Peterborough County. This year the District Representatives, Messrs. McRae and McDowell, are arranging for seven fairs. Although the fairs will not be held for a few weeks yet, a great deal of work in preparation has already been done, including the visiting and judging of the scholars' plots at their homes.

The places at which the fairs will be held and the dates set are as follows:

Belmont Township, at Havelock, on Sept. 19th.

Asphodel Township, at Westwood, on Sept. 20th.

Otonabee Township, at Zion, on Sept. 21st.

Douro Township, at Douro, on September 22nd.

Dummer Township, at Warsaw, on Oct. 3rd.

Smith Township, at Bridgenorth, on October 4th.

Ennismore Township, at Ennismore, on October 6th.

The scholars of each Township have their own fair board, with a president and other officers.

Cash prizes are given for the following classes: Oats, Mangels, Corn, Potatoes, Carrots, Flowers, Poultry, Live Stock, Weeds, Weed Seeds, Insects, Domestic Science, Art, Apples.

Interesting special prizes are also being offered by the Campbell Flour Mills Co. for bread made with 'Cream of the West' flour.

Some of the numbers on the day's programme for each fair are: a public speaking contest, stock-judging contest, tug-of-war contest, and a school parade.

Altogether an enjoyable as well as profitable time is planned for the scholars. The event is one which makes school life more attractive and pleasant, and should have the co-operation of all, especially the parents. A successful series of rural school fairs in Peterborough County is looked forward to this Fall.

IMPORTANT MUNICIPAL LEGISLATION DISCUSSED AT A MEETING OF THE ONTARIO MUNICIPAL ASSOCIATION

Dr. McCullough, Head of the Provincial Board of Health Addressed the Association on Water Supplies—Chlorine Will Not Hurt—Would Give the City the Right to Collect Rental for the Use of Telephone Poles

A VOICE FROM HASTINGS

Without discussing the Ontario Municipal Association, which met in Toronto yesterday referred to the executive, with power to act, the resolution of A. M. Chapman, County Clerk of Hastings asking that public utilities, where publicly owned, should not be exempted from taxation.

Resolutions were also adopted, calling for legislation providing that arrears of taxes may be entered on the current year's tax roll and tax bills, and giving municipalities the right to collect rental for the use of telephone poles, on streets or other public property. Legislation will also be sought allowing any city or town to levy an annual fee for the use of a portion of highway or boulevard during building operations, and for any building wholly or partially erected on a highway. A committee of three will be named by the president to confer with the Premier and the Provincial Secretary in reference to the establishment of a Provincial Municipal Department.

WILL CONSIDER HEADLIGHTS

The question of amendment of the Motor Vehicle Act to regulate the use of headlights was referred back to the executive, as also was a proposition to give municipalities the power to collect business and income taxes in the year of the assessment upon which they are levied.

The executive was instructed to consider efforts to secure an amendment of the Railway Act so as to provide for a city's full control of its street railway franchise.

The province will be asked to take over trunk telephone lines in the province, and to make provision for county or district systems where necessary to consolidate local lines. This is proposed to prevent the further complication of the telephone systems of Ontario.

The association approved the removal of duty, excepting war tax, from imported pairng brick.

AMENDING ESTIMATES.

The clipping of the wings of subordinate municipal bodies was approved in a resolution moved by Mr. S. Baker, of London, that city councils should have power to amend all estimates submitted to them by Boards of Education, Utility Commissions, Police Boards, Library Boards and other boards.

No action was taken on a proposition to extend from ten to twenty years the terms of the debentures for patriotic grants.

Major J. S. McCullough addressed the association on water supplies in towns and cities, with special attention to the need for protecting the source of supply. His department had prepared analysis of the water in all wells from Niagara to Toronto by way of Hamilton.

FEW UNPOLLUTED.

"The wells without pollution," he declared, "could be counted on the fingers of one hand."

Ald. Ryding questioned Dr. McCullough, who is the head of the Provincial Board of Health, as to whether chlorine in the water of Toronto was a danger to health.

"None of us get sufficient chlorine to do us any harm," returned Dr. McCullough, "and after September 16th none of us will increase our consumption of water to an extent to do us any harm."

TOWN PLANNING.

Of the forty or fifty Ontario municipalities that have taken up the work of town planning, Hamilton was the most active, declared Thos. Adams, conservation commission expert, talking on proposed town planning legislation.

Town planning, he said, had been taken up by the commission from the standpoint of public health. In Canada the British rather than the German system was being followed, and power was given to local authorities to develop their own schemes along the lines suggested by their own experience. Of the 150 schemes at present under way in England, 130 were the work of the local engineer and clerk without the help of any outside expert. In spite of the war, such work was given great attention in England; where there were only three schemes in 1910 there were this year forty-five such schemes.

VENDORS LIABLE FOR IMPURE PRODUCTS

It is Not Necessary for the Customer to Ask for Pure Lard or Pure Pepper, etc.

The Department of Inland Revenue has informed dealers in food products that in all cases where any article is found to be adulterated, the vendor will in the the public interest be prosecuted. The vendor is advised, however, that under Section 33 of the Adulteration Act, he may protect himself from being unjustly dealt with by requiring a warranty as to genuineness and purity from the manufacturer or furnisher when procuring his stock.

The act does not forbid the sale of mixtures or compounds, if these are properly designated on the label of the package containing the article. It is not necessary when offering such articles for sale that they are compounds, or mixtures, and if then accepted by him the transaction is legal.

It is not necessary that the customer should ask for pure lard or pure pepper, etc., in order that she should be offered the pure article named, as the request for such article, under its general name, viz., lard, pepper, etc., requires that pure goods only should be offered. If a compound or mixed article is sold to the customer without stating its character as such the vendor is liable to prosecution under the Act.

RATHER SLIM SEASON

Two Series in the O.A.L.A. Have Yet To Be Decided.

Although this season has been rather a slim one for the Ontario Amateur Lacrosse Association there have been some interesting games in the various series. In the senior of course the Young Torontos have already won the title. Orangeville and Campbellford have qualified for the intermediate final. They have not arranged dates for the home-and-home games. The junior series was not in operation this season.

In the juvenile series the most games have been played, there being five groups. Hastings, Aurora, St. Marys, Tara and the winners of the Toronto League are left in the semi-finals. Tara and St. Marys have been drawn together while Hastings and Aurora have also arranged home-and-home games. The winner of the Hastings-Aurora games will meet the winner of the Toronto League, either Maitlands or Beaches, in the semi-finals. The winner of that will then meet the winner of the Tara-St. Marys series in the final.

Corner Stone Laid To-day

His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught Performed the Ceremony To-day

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, Sept. 1.—Under dull skies which threatened rain, his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, in the presence of distinguished assemblage, laid the corner stone of the new Parliament Buildings at noon today. The old corner stone of the former legislative halls was utilised and his Royal Highness in impressive tones declared it "Well and truly laid." This constitutes the last important act of Canada's Royal Governor-General prior to his departure back to the Home Land after a sojourn of five years in the Dominion.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Connaught, the Princess Patricia and a large party from Rideau Hall graced the Royal pavilion erected on the site of the old buildings, together with an assembly of dignitaries, including the Prime Minister, Cabinet members, four Lieutenant-Governors, including Sir John Hendrie from Toronto, several judges of the Supreme Court and a large number of citizens.

PTE. MULLIGAN WILL SPEAK AT OPEN AIR MEETING SUNDAY EVE

Mr. George Vincent Mulligan, son of Mr. G. W. Mulligan will speak in Central Park on Sunday evening. Having concluded a two year's course at the Moody Bible College, Chicago, he recently enlisted in London, Ont. with the Army Medical Corps. Like his father, he is gifted with a good voice and will likely sing at the Central Park open air meeting.

Lost Cheese Discovered in House Cellar

Some time ago the owner of the North Harvey cheese factory in checking up his cheese previous to shipment discovered that he was one cheese short and after an investigation came to the conclusion that someone familiar with the operations of the factory had purloined it.

The matter was reported to the county officials, and as a result information was laid against Joseph Finlay, who lives in the neighborhood, and when County Constable Archie Moore went there the cheese was discovered in the cellar of Finlay's house.

PENSIONS BOARD CHAIRMAN.

OTTAWA, Aug. 31.—Although no official announcement has been made, it can be definitely stated that J. K. L. Ross, of Montreal, will be the chairman of the permanent Pensions Board.

It is not yet known who the other two members of the commission will be, but one of them is certain to be a western man. The board will take over the work now being done by the Militia Department re pensions, and create a permanent department for the administration of pensions.

Mr. Ross is a millionaire, well known in financial, yachting and sporting circles.

Oak Lodge Camp News

Beautiful Camping Grounds on Rice Lake Has Many Visitors

This beautiful camping grounds is situated about 2 miles from Keene by water via the celebrated Indian River.

It is a part of the main land jutting out into the famous Rice Lake water, noted for its wild black rice, and ideal shooting and fishing grounds. The tents and cottages are pitched upon a high terrace, like bank, looking down upon the Lake below. Numerous stately oak trees are all over the grounds, under which the campers in the heat of the day, retire and watch the splendeur of the great expanse of water and islands in the distance. At present there are about 30 people camping here at this beautiful spot. Some have their lady cooks and others revert to the "old bachelor style". The campers rise in the morning any time between 5 and 10 a.m.; breakfast about 8.30; and dinner about 1.30 to 2.00. The beautiful scenery and bracing air does much to give all a tasteful appetite and to more than to do justice to the dainties that are each time put on the tables, everyone thinking that the last meal was better than the previous. There is also an ideal swimming beach, where everybody drift back to their school days, when they use to frolic in the water. Each day is a perfect day in Camp and the hours pass along so quickly that it seems as are the sun is risen in the East, than it sets in the West, but this is not all. When the sun is set and the birds are gone to rest, we all gather around the blazing camp fire and our jokes of the day of which there are many, sing songs, pop corn, and have selections on the violin, bango, and mandolin, this is always kept up until about 11 p.m., when we all retire to our tents very tired, but refreshed by the thoughts of the past day. Numerous visitors visit the camp in the week and especially Sundays. Last Sunday was a beautiful day and about sixty people, grasped at the opportunity to come to Oak Lodge Camp, motor boats and small sailing craft are in abundance and through the kindness of the people at the camp are always sure of getting a sail on the well known Rice Lake. Too much cannot be said of the kindness of Mr. Ashburn, whom the grounds belongs to for the liberties of which he gives to the people camping at this point. Following are the names of some of the Sunday visitors:—

Miss Newton, Mrs. Simpson, Miss Kempt, Mrs. Kempt, Messrs. Roy and D. Kempt, Mr. and Mrs. A. Rennie, Mr. and Mrs. Cruickshanks, Toronto, Mrs. Boyle, Hastings, Mrs. Ashburn, Mrs. Robertson, Miss Bryce, Mr. A. Bryce, Mrs. Dr. V. H. McWilliams, Toronto, Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery and family, Villiers, Mr. W. Robertson, Mr. and Mrs. W. Bryce and family, Toronto, Mr. and Mrs. J. McFarlane and family, Miss Telymann, Peterboro', Messrs. James and Michael McCarthy, Mr. Wilfrid Fletcher, Mr. and Mrs. White and family, St. Catharines, Miss Dugan, Peterborough, Miss Wilson Peterborough, Miss Lottie Wedlock, Mrs. Wm. Wedlock.

ALBANIANS AT SALONIKA.

Contingent Arrives There to Participate in Campaign.

Salonika, Aug. 31. — An Albanian contingent is ready to join the combatants of the five allied nations in Macedonia. The Albanians already have disembarked here. They will be commanded by Essad Pasha, chief of the Albanian Government, who has arrived at Salonika.

A DONATION TO RED CROSS SOCIETY

The Stoney Lake Branch Recieves a Cheque for $25 From Oddfellows' Regatta

That the second annual Oddfellows' regatta at McCracken's Landing a short while ago was carried to a successful issue financially, as well as otherwise, is evidenced by the fact that the funds of the Stoney Lake Red Cross Society are richer to the extent of $25.00, which they received from the proceeds of the day. Mr. T. C. Elliot, treasurer of the Oddfellows' Regatta Committee, has received from the ladies at Stoney Lake a copy of a resolution passed at their last meeting, heartily thanking the Oddfellows for their kindness and thoughtfulness in contributing to the funds of the Stoney Lake branch.

WM. MATHESON IS REEVE OF HAVELOCK

HAVELOCK, Sept. 1.— The reeveship of the municipality of Havelock for the remainder of the year will be represented by William Matheson, whose election by acclamation was recorded yesterday when Frank Coon and W. T. Curtis, two nominees for the position, signified their intention of dropping out of the running by declining to comply with the formality of signing the statutory declaration. The vacancy was caused by the resignation of Edward Fennell.

CAN'T KILL PARTRIDGE.

No partridge may be killed in Ontario until October, 1918, according to the Game and Fishery Laws which have just been issued. Another interesting feature in the new laws is that no lumberman residing in the camp may carry a gun without a special license.

If Boys Will Steal Apples Their Parents Must Pay For The Sport

Small boys who rob orchards, and their tribes seems to be rapidly increasing, need not look for leniency if they are hailed before Magistrate Dumble or Acting Magistrate Rush.

Two chips of boys appeared before Mr. Rush this morning charged with stealing apples from Mrs. McIntee in the west ward. They pleaded guilty but offered the expected palliative statement that they had taken only two each.

But, this was a case of petty thieving unqualified by the quantity of the theft.

"This must be stopped," remarked Mr. Rush, J. P. with considerable heat, engendered by the recollection of raids on his own pear tree. "Boys boldly went up to the tree and stole fruit, although members of the family were on the lawn. And I had to do away with my grape vines."

The parents of both boys stated that they had given them whippings when they learned of the theft of the apples, and this morning they paid five dollars apiece into court.

Mr. Rush made it plain, in fact gave warning that all cases of this kind would be similarly dealt with.

Chief Thompson stated that reports had come from a north end orchard that boys had literally carried off bushels of fruit.

COUNCIL WILL MEET THIS EVENING

The regular monthly meeting of the City Council will be held this evening instead of Monday evening, owing to the fact that Monday is a holiday. A fair-sized budget will be dealt with this evening, including a by-law to authorise the construction of a railroad siding into the property owned by James Bogue, on the north side of Dublin Street.

Nine Year Old Boys "Hit The Weed" On West End Corners

Two Smith street grocers in the west end appeared in police court this morning on several charges of having sold tobacco and cigarette papers to minors. Reports had come to Chief Thompson that boys as young as nine years had been seen smoking around that particular corner. One proprietor admitted a sale of cigarette papers to a boy, offering as an explanation that they were intended for "kazoos," these tin instruments the youngsters hum through. However, it is contrary to the criminal code to sell even cigarette papers to boys, and a five dollar fine was imposed.

A boy swore that he had purchased Old Chum from the other store and had shared it with a companion. Their stores were not exactly coincident as to the date of the alleged sale, and the proprietor flatly denied it. She recalled a sale to a boy a year ago, but it was given when a note was presented. Chief Thompson pointed out that the present law nullifying any effect of a note was passed in 1908.

The proprietor insisted that he was not fully aware of this law until about six months ago, and stated that he was careful about the sales of tobacco.

"This is not the first, nor the second, nor the third, complaint I've had from your store," commented Chief Thompson, who was acting as prosecutor, "so I'd advise you to be considerably more careful."

The case was dismissed, and the proprietor's wife remarked as a finale that if she ever found the boy in her store, out he'd go by the boot route. From her remarks this youth is far from angelic in his regard for grocers, and this one in particular. He has torn down the sign, lit bonfires in the yard, and by various other means, has pestered the grocer and his wife to the limit of exasperation.

SALVATION ARMY BAND GOING TO FENELON FALLS

The Salvation Army band will spend the week end and Sunday in Fenelon Falls, returning Monday noon. They will then proceed to Chemong Park where a band picnic will be held on Labor Day

The band, by the way, has been engaged to play at Millbrook's fall fair this year, the first time they will appear at the Cavan exhibition.

Commissioner Richards is expected to visit Peterborough early in September for a week end, and while here will likely speak at Brailey's, Brownton and the Temple. This will be the signal for big meetings at all three places.

COPY OF THE ACT THAT FORBIDS FLANGED WHEELS

Applies to Any Highway and Also Restricts Weight of Vehicles That Operate Over it

The minimum fine of five dollars imposed on R. C. Hind this morning for driving an engine with flanged wheels over the highway indicates that this regulation must be observed. To this end, Chief Thompson directs attention to the following clauses:

Sec. 1.—No vehicle shall be operated, and no object shall be moved upon wheels, rollers or otherwise over or upon any highway in any municipality in excess of a total weight of twelve tons, or of four and one-half tons on any one wheel, including the vehicle, object and load, without first obtaining a permit.

Sec. 2.—No vehicle shall be operated or object moved over or upon any such highway which has any flange, rib, clamp, or other device attached to its wheels, or made a part thereof, which will injure the highway; and no vehicle, object or contrivance for moving heavy loads shall be operated or moved upon or over any such highway, the weight of which resting upon the surface of said highway exceed six hundred and fifty pounds upon any inch in width of the tire, roller, wheel or other object without obtaining such permit.

Sec. 3.—The owner, driver, operator or mover of any such vehicle, object or contrivance who has obtained the permit mentioned in section 4 shall nevertheless be responsible for all damages which may be caused to the highway by reason of the driving, operating or moving of any such vehicle, object or contrivance.

Sec. 4.—The municipal corporation or other authority having jurisdiction over the highway may, upon application in writing, grant a permit for the moving of heavy vehicles, loads, objects or structures in excess of a total weight of twelve tons over said highway or for operating or moving over any such highway any vehicle, object or contrivance the weight of which resting upon the surface of said highway exceeds six hundred and fifty pounds upon any inch in width of tire, roller, wheel or other object.

Such permit may be general or may limit the time and the particular highway which may be used, and may contain any special conditions or provisions which may be deemed necessary for the protection of said highway from injury.

The council of any municipality may by by-law provide that such permit may be issued by any officer of the corporation named therein.

The maximum penalty for any contravention of the act is $100.

Photographs of C. G. E. Attract Much Interest

TORONTO, Sept. 1. — There is a strong attraction for women in the munitions exhibit at the Fair now that there is a possibility of a demand for their labour in this work. There one can see the whole process of manufacture from the metal in the rough to the completed shell, loaded with their death dealing shrapnel. The Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company show a large number of exhibits of iron ore, coke, pig iron, etc., and following along from this a shell stock steel ingot is shown with the proper amount of explosives. Then come shells as cast in the rough and the polishing process till further on the highly polished shell is seen. An 18-inch one containing 364 shrapnel bullets, shows how murderous they are. Many other sizes are shown, but this size would seem to be the most generally used.

Around the Canadian General Electric Company and Canadian Allis-Chalmers, the large photographs showing women at work in the munition factory in Peterborough, were found to be of great interest. While there are many women employed in factories in Toronto, there are many who think the work much too heavy for Canadian women. In England the women are employed by the thousands in factories. They are the ones "who pile up the munitions" there. A couple of young women in khaki overalls are seen at work in that splendid exhibit of munition-making prepared by W. H. Banfield in the Process Building. Here one sees the actual work required; the machinery looks most complicated to the novice. Women are registering for this work at the booth of the Women's Emergency Corps, which are also having many fine large photographs of women working in a large Toronto factory. Several interesting pamphlets are being distributed; telling what women can do to help at this time. The Whitehead torpedo draws a large crowd as well as the moving pictures showing munition workers.

PETERBORO WAS REPRESENTED AT THE RADIAL ASSOCIATION MEETING

Ald. John Edgar and Mr. H. O. Fisk, Manager of the Peterboro Utilities Commission Journeyed to Toronto Where Some Correspondence Showing the Delinquencies of the Attorney-General, Was Revealed—Some of the Delegates Were Outspoken

TORONTO, Sept. 1.—The policy of placing an ear to the ground has become fashionable. The Ontario Hydro Railway Association and the Ontario Municipal Electric Association have taken the hint of the Attorney-General for Ontario, with the result that they have heard the recent promises of Hydro freedom and Government support of the Hydro made by the Hon. I. B. Lucas. At a meeting attended by representatives of forty municipalities stretching from Peterborough to Windsor and Collingwood, at the City Hall, a strongly-worded resolution was adopted informing the Government that the municipalities have been listening to the Minister's statements and now formally ask him, as a member of the Government, to make them good.

Several outspoken utterances were made by the speakers, including Mr. J. W. Lyon, of Guelph, and Controller Morris, Acting Mayor of Hamilton. It was plainly stated that the municipal interests are not satisfied with the Government's attitude towards their heavy investments in the Hydro systems. "I object to our matters being tied up by orders in Council and red tape generally," declared Mr. Lyon. "We have been under a cloud lately, but we are now out in the open as a result of recent events. We want everything plain sailing from the powers that be."

Much Dissatisfaction.

"We have been waiting and wondering why the delay in the development of our plans," declared Controller Morris, "and we have experienced considerable dissatisfaction with the Government's handling of this matter." Referring to the recent election in South-West Toronto, he said: "Whether we be Grit or Tory, we are thankful that the storm happened in Toronto, because it showed us which way things were turning." (Applause).

The resolution, which was unanimously adopted, reads, in part, as follows:

"That, having regard to the several recent announcements, explanations and promises of the Hon. the Attorney-General, speaking for the Government both on the platform and in the press, with respect to early assistance for Hydro-Electric power and railways, the Central Executive be instructed to interview the said Government and make the following requests:

Many Requests.

"These requests include a petition that orders in Council be passed providing funds for the purchase of rights of way, 'as suggested by the Attorney-General,' also that enabling legislation be adopted by the Legislature permitting the municipalities interested to immediately take over the Chippawa Creek power development scheme to complete its construction and operate it; that legislation also be enacted divorcing the Hydro-Electric Power Commission from any department, and from the control of any department as set forth in the correspondence, making it incorrect to refer to the said Commission as under the Attorney-General's control, as is now done on page five of the 'catalogue of publications' of said Government."

Letters Made Public.

During the discussion on the motion Secretary Hannigan was requested to read certain letters regarding the Commission's relations with the Government. The publication of this information aroused considerable interest, as it was expected that the general public would be in a position of knowing where the Hydro people stand on the recent controversy. The first letters read to the meeting were between Mr. J. W. Lyon, President of the Association, and Sir Adam Beck, regarding the statement in the Government's catalogue of publications that the Hydro Commission is part and parcel of the Attorney-General's Department, also regarding the discrepancy in the dates named in connection with the preparation and passing of the order in Council sanctioning the purchase of a right-of-way for a transmission line from Toronto to Dundas. Mr. Lyon, in his letter, protested that "the association and the municipalities, who assume all the risk, are not being treated properly. We are entitled to know the facts about these matters, and not depend on receiving information by word of mouth and through the papers, which, contradict each other."

Beck's Reply.

In reply to this letter, Sir Adam Beck wrote, denying that the Hydro Commission had been consulted in any way regarding the alleged placing of the Commission under the control of the Attorney-General. His letter reads, in part, as follows:

"Your esteemed favour of August 22nd received with enclosed clipping from The Toronto Globe of the same date, referring to certain statements in the 'Catalogue of Publications' issued by the Ontario Government.

"The statement in the Catalogue that the Hydro-Eelectric Power Commission is included in the department of the Attorney-General was never authorized by any member of the board nor any officer of the Commission, and appeared in the publication absolutely without our knowledge. I may also state that I was not aware of the contents, or any matter contained in this publication, nor has the same ever been considered by the Commission, or myself as chairman, and therefore could not have received the sanction of the Commission or myself. The statement that 'the system is owned and operated by the Province in trust for the participating municipalities' also appeared without the knowledge or approval of the Commission or any officer, and in this respect the article in The Globe is incorrect."

Following this, the Secretary of the association was asked to read correspondence between Messrs. Hannigan and Pope, and Messrs. Hannigan and Lucas, in which it was pointed out how the Hydro interests, and the Commission had been absolutely ignored in connection with the adoption of the order in Council sanctioning the purchase of the Toronto-Dundas right-of-way."

Mixed in His Dates.

The first letter read was from the Hon. I. B. Lucas to Mr. T. J. Hannigan, secretary, Hydro-Eelectric Railway Association. In this letter Mr. Lucas explains that on June 28th "I signed the necessary recommendation for the order in Council, and so advised the secretary of the Commission, and an order in Council was duly passed on June 20th."

As to the delay in forwarding the order in Council to the Hydro Commission, the Attorney-General explains that "the Clerk of the Executive Council advised me that the formal order was not forwarded to the Secretary of the Hydro until August 14th, owing to the delay in securing the formal signature of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor."

Pope's Date Different.

After reading this letter Mr. Hannigan was asked to read a letter from Mr. Pope of the Hydro-Electric Commission to Mr. Hannigan, in which he reviewed the Commission's side of the affair, and which brought out the information that despite the fact that the order in Council was dated June 20, the Hydro Commission was requested on July 4th by the Attorney-General to forward additional information in connection with the right-of-way between Toronto and Dundas, which was forwarded to Mr. Lucas on July 6. The discrepancy in the dates and the fact that the Commission was kept in the dark caused considerable private discussion among the delegations, and a motion was immediately adopted sanctioning their publication.

Must Wait a Vacancy.

As to the proposal to have a representative of the municipalities interested in the Hydro movement appointed a member of the Government Commission, it was pointed out by Secretary Hannigan, at the request of Mr. D. B. Detweiler, of Kitchener, that Mr. Hearst has promised that when a vacancy occurs on the Commission the association's request will be considered by the Government.

Among the representatives of the municipalities in attendance were Ald. J. Edgar and Mr. H. O. Fisk, manager of the Peterborough Utilities Commission of this city.

Before adjournment a resolution was adopted expressing the association's gratification "at the success attained by the operation of the London and Port Stanley Railway."

The association will attend a big convention to be held in Hamilton today

Military News

The majority of the members of this battalion have been on the firing line continually.

Mr. F. C. Cressman of The Cressman Co., Ltd., is in Ottawa to-day, completing arrangements to go overseas, in connection with the aerial service. He has just finished his four months' course at Newport News and Buffalo, and has received notification from The Aero Club of America, who control the various schools for aviators, that he passed his final examination successfully. He expect to go across just as soon as arrangements at Ottawa will enable him to do so.

No information has been received at headquarters in connection with the change in the system of recruiting as stated in the press over two weeks ago, and all the camp and district officers know about the scheme is what they have seen in the columns of the daily papers. According to press despatches the new system of recruiting and registering the eligible vote, passed the council at Ottawa, and was to be placed in force immediately. Preparatory to the inauguration of the new scheme of recruiting Lt.-Col. McInnes was made District-General of recruiting, but no district recruiting directors were appointed. It was the intention of the military authorities to provide a proper button for the use of such as were engaged in necessary occupations, another for the physically unfit, and a button for munition workers. So far no movement has been made to provide these buttons, beyond asking for suggestions regarding buttons and cards. Lt.-Col. Wilson, D.A.A., Q.M.G., of the Third Military District has secured a number of sample buttons, and these are being sent to Ottawa with recommendations and suggestions. It is the intention of Lt.-Col. Wilson to secure for the use of the Third District, although it is felt that the Government should produce one kind of button for the use of the entire Dominion.

BARRIEFIELD WAR CAMP, Aug. 31. — A few weeks ago Lieut. W. Bailey, assistant adjutant of the 156th Battalion, left for overseas, leaving his family in the city. Lieut. Bailey was formerly chief clerk at headquarters, where he had served in a clerical capacity for over eighteen years. Lieut. Bailey was a member of the R.C.H.A. and was detailed as a clerk in the Divisional Office under the late Colonel Montizambert, and served under every officer commanding for eighteen faithful years. Soon after the organization of the 156th he was made assistant adjutant, and became popular among his fellow officers. When regulations eliminated the position of assistant adjutant, Lieut. Bailey was selected among the first eighteen subalterns asked for by the Imperial War Office. He is a native of Wales, an active member of the K. of C., and for a number of years a member of the choir of St. Mary's Cathedral.

Lieut. Bailey acted as assistant adjutant for the 93rd Battalion for some time early last winter, and made many friends while in the city.

Boy Fired The Dry Grass On Armour's Hill To See Blaze

A slight strain of Nero's incendiary propensity is apparently manifest in the character of the 14-year old boy who made a torch of Armour's hill yesterday afternoon. He wanted to see a fire, and from all accounts it was not his first, although the most serious. He selected the long, dry grass that covered the eastern hill, dropped a match or two it is reported and when the breeze fanned the blaze into considerable proportions ran away to get water or assistance to put it out. When he had returned it was in full flame and swept over eight acres, before the Fire Department subdued it. In its trail was a wide expanse of blackened and burned turf in striking contrast with the adjacent brown of the unburned section. From this display of his fancy and other reported minor fires the youngster appears to be something of a reincarnated fire-worshipper. Mr. Rush, in police court, remanded him for a week, and in the meantime the Children's Aid Society has taken charge of him.

OMDURMAN DAY SATURDAY, SEPT. 2ND

Sanitary Inspector Cooper pursued his usual round of duties to-day, and to-morrow Sergeant Cooper will celebrate the 18th anniversary of the battle of Omdurman. It was on the second day of September, 1898, that Kitchener completed his thirteen years of work in Egypt; Omdurman was the finishing touch. Sergeant Cooper was then with 21st Empress of India Lancers. In six minutes his regiment of 320 men lost seventy-nine killed and eighty-five mortally wounded when they charged in 2,000 dervishes. That was Kitchener's day, and as one of the participants in that campaign Sergeant Cooper always commemorates it, in memory of the victory and the leader under whom it was gained. He dons his uniform with his Egyptian medals, and only really important work claims his attention.

MOLLY McINTYRE COMING TO THE GRAND

An All-British Company Here on Tuesday, September 12th

The opening of the Grand Opera House, Toronto, for this season, was made with the appearance of Molly McIntyre, an all British company, playing 'Silent Sue,' a comedy in three acts by Eugenie Magnus. The Toronto papers speak enthusiastically about Miss McIntyre and her company, and Peterborough theatre-goers will be pleased to learn of their appearance here on Sept. 12th.

FULL MEASURE TO OPERATE

No Step That Liquor Interests Can Take to Stop It

TORONTO, Sept. 1. — No action which the brewers or the hotelmen can now take can stop the Prohibition Act going into force on its full provisions being operated," said an official of the Liquor License Department of the Ontario Government. The liquor men have decided to contest the act on Section 139. The whole measure revolves on this section, which is copied from the Manitoba Act. The liquor interests claim—and their view is supported by some license officials, that they can deliver direct from their plants to consumers without the necessity of first shipping the liquor out of the province. This Section 139 reads:

"While this act is intended to prohibit and shall prohibit transactions in liquor which take place wholly within the Province of Ontario, except under license or as otherwise specially provided by this act, and to restrict the consumption of liquor within the limits of the Province of Ontario, it shall not affect, and is not intended to affect, bona fide transactions in liquor between a person in the Province of Ontario and a person in a foreign country, and the provisions of this act shall be construed accordingly."

The courts will have to decide the point, but until such a decision is given the act will operate, and if the breweries sell directly to the consumer they, of course, lay themselves open to prosecution. There is no possibility, however, of the breweries getting the right to establish depots or distributing houses unless by act of Legislature.

Postoffice Changes Name to "Kitchener"

OTTAWA, Sept. 1.—The Postoffice Department has officially gazetted the new city of Kitchener, Ont. Notice was sent out to all postmasters, advising them that, since the city heretofore known as Berlin, Ont., has by proclamation of the Lieut.-Governor of Ontario, been renamed Kitchener, the name of the postoffice is therefore automatically changed from Berlin to Kitchener. Letters addressed to Berlin, Ont., will be forwarded, of course, for some time yet, but the public is asked to adopt the new name from now on.

COAL IS UP TEN CENTS A TON

Peterboro Need Fear Nothing Regarding The Theatrical Railway Strike— Supply is Ample

Ten cents a ton has been added to the price of coal in this city. The new prices are eight dollars and ten cents a ton for furnace coal and eight dollars and thirty-five cents a ton for stove coal. A further increase is not looked for.

The increased price of coal at the mine mouth is not the only reason for the increase; cost of labour is rising, and freight rates advance on the 15th of September.

Local coal dealers think that so far as hard coal is concerned Peterborough need fear nothing regarding the threatened railroad strike in the United States. Storage facilities are ample, though they state it would be as well for coal consumers to lay in a supply immediately. Soft coal users will suffer, most firms depending on more frequent deliveries.

According to the coal dealers, shipments of hard coal over the railroads are about normal.

The Allied Armies Continue To Advance On All Fronts

Greek Troops Surrender To The French Commander

British Aviators Surpass Enemy In Daring Feats

Flying Men, Ringed by White Puff Clouds of Exploding Shells, Direct Deadly Artillery Fire Upon the Foe —One Pilot Dives Upon Five Hostile Aeroplanes and Puts Them to Flight — Many Musicians Among them.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Mr. Philip Gibbs, a correspondent with the British armies in the field, contributes an interesting article dealing with the British supremacy in the air and its vital relation to the operations on the Somme. He writes:

"All through the battle of Picardy most of us have kept glancing up into the sky across the enemy's lines from day to day and looking for a Prussian aeroplane. It is a rare bird.

"Now and again when our flying men are not out because the clouds are lying low and it is a 'dud day,' as they call it, a hostile machine sneaks through the mist and drops a few bombs and goes full speed back again; and more often, but not very often, a flight of Prussians will come in a gang through a clear sky and attack one or more of our scouts if they can be sure of having all the odds in their favour. Behind their own lines they are more bold (and there is nothing wrong with their courage as individual fighters), and lie in wait in the crossroads of the air like modern Black Knights (with the Iron Cross as their badge) to defend their territory from all intruders—not, however, with any great success—and so provide exciting combats for our own knights errant. But across our lines they venture rarely.

"During the first week of the battle, which began on July 1, the hostile machines were invisible, and yet during all this time of fighting we cannot go up to the lines without seeing our own aeroplanes flying above the shell fire in Prussian territory.

RINGED BY WHITE PUFF CLOUDS.

"The 'Archies' are firing at them, ringing them with white puff clouds, which burst very close, so close that one holds one's breath or speaks a whisper—'They've got him!'—until a second later one can see the aeroplane skimming onward steadily and quite careless of these explosions which follow on the trail of his wings. Below these flying men of ours shells are crashing and smoke is vomiting up, and villages are burning, and there is all the tumult of battle, but they circle round as aloof as the winged gods themselves, it seems, from all this earthly strife—yet not aloof, because they help to direct the thunderbolts, as some of the old gods did.

"So far from prowling on our side of the lines, these pilots and observers make a daily habit of going for far journeys into the enemy's zone, often as far as Bapaume, which is a dozen miles beyond our own trenches, and to places like Martinpuich and Courcelette and Flers. A few days ago they set Martinpuich on fire, and it was still burning when they flew over it again next day.

"On July 28 four of our aeroplanes paid a surprise call on Mons, the scene of our earliest fighting two years ago, and reminded the enemy of our 'contemptible little army' of those days by flying low and dropping bombs on the rolling stock in the railway station and upon sheds full of munitions. They were leisurely in their circling, and stayed until fires had exploded at four different points and much ammunition had been blown up. Then they came home to dinner.

"Every day and all day long they are out and about, across the Prussian lines, observing for our artillery and directing the fire of our guns upon the enemy's batteries and other targets which they have seen below with their hawk's eyes. This work, so audaciously and skilfully done, has given us an undoubted mastery of observation, which the enemy no longer holds. The Prussian gunners now have to shoot, mostly, by the map, and although they are very wise in science, it is not the same thing as being able to direct their fire by direct observation of results. Our airmen have been of vast service in the daily battle of guns, and it is largely due to their flights that our artillery has been able to destroy many of the enemy's batteries.

SEVEN BATTERIES SILENCED.

"One day seven batteries reported active by one machine were all silenced in ten minutes and direct hits were made on five or more batteries.

"On July 28 one of our air squadrons controlled nine direct hits on the enemy's batteries.

"Those things tell. The knocking out of an opposing battery means less loss of life to our infantry and a greater certainty of progress. It is the hardest blow that can be given, for this is a battle of guns, and every battery destroyed is better than the taking of a trench, or at least the easiest way to take it.

"A machine of ours ranged howitzers on a battery of two 5.9 howitzers, which were destroyed, and another machine directed guns on another battery, destroying one emplacement and causing explosions which lasted an hour.

"So the record runs from day to day, and the enemy is getting frightened for his guns and withdrawing some of them at least to safer places.

"The fearlessness of our men is not a virtue with them. It is a natural instinct. They attack unequal odds with the gusto of schoolboys who fling themselves into a football scrimmage.

"Literally, the enemy is put to flight by these modern men of ours, as when the other day one of our pilots dived at five hostile machines attacking one of our scouts and drove them off; and as when, a day or two ago, two others attacked four Fokkers—'the deadly Fokker,' as it used to be called—and drove them down into their own lines.

"They are a new type of men, these pilots and observers of the Royal flying Corps. It is difficult to place them or to account for them. They seem to have been born to fly. For the most part they are very young men—boys of nineteen or twenty—though older men, twice their age and more, are found here and there, flaving come out of professions like the law and the Civil Service and taken to the air like ducks to water, but surprised with themselves. The younger men are clean cut, fine and delicately made fellows, as far as I know them, rather highly strung and nervous in temperament.

"FLIGHT THE MUSIC OF LIFE."

"It is quite curious that many of them are men of great musical talent. In one squadron I know there are nearly twenty men who are all very full of musical talent. One of them, a stripling, came out of the trenches to volunteer as an airman, with long screeds of music which he had written down 'out of his head,' as children say, without hearing a note of it played until he came back. At night, when dusk creeps through the sky, and one by one the homing birds fly down (there is always an anxious question about the squadron commander, who is the best beloved), the flying men settle round the piano in the aerodrome, and one of them brings out his violin and plays it with a master touch, and another sings in a bass voice that may be heard one day at Covent Garden, and through the evening the men take turns at the piano, to play what comes into their heads and out of their hearts.

"The link between music and flight may be a coincidence in the case of one squadron (though I have heard of it elsewhere), but it may be that flight is the new music of life, and that the imagination of the younger generation is soaring upon real wings, inspired by flight to the deep chords of emotion that in earlier days went into sound and color. The pity is that just now they are instruments of death.

"They have amazing adventures up there in the sky and learn strange things. They learn the look of the great country below, so that every landmark is familiar to them, and any strange flash or shape is detected at once, and those things they must learn in three different scales of light, morning, afternoon and evening, because at each of those times the landscape and the shape and shadows of it are quite different.

"They fly above the bursting shells and the tumult of war, but hear nothing of it unless they come down very low, for the humming of their engine is a great song in their ears.

"But they hear the 'Archies,' which make the puff clouds above them, and sometimes, but not often, the scream of great shells going by them. A friend of mine had a queer and frightful case of this not long ago.

"He was flying fairly low when he saw coming straight for him three-quarters of a ton of metal, in the shape of a shell, and heard its whining note and was tossed as though in a rough sea by the rush of the wind it made. It was a shell from one of our 15-inch Grannies, and this pilot who met it on its way within one hundred yards was annoyed for the moment with the gunners below, who had not worried about the bird in the sky, which was my friend.

"They are humourous, keen, sensitive men, these air pilots of ours, and though some of them are very musical they do not disdain other joys of life, like a dinner in some good dining place behind the lines when a 'dud day' makes flying 'off.' And for some of us not of the air it is better than a banquet to see these flying men and to hear them building castles in the air and telling tales more wonderful than those of fairy lore."

Several Positions Have Been Captured By The Roumanians

Allied Armies Plan to Attack the Teutonic Forces in Northern Serbia — Tarlunge Valley Has Also Been Occupied — Roumanian Troops Suffer But Light Losses—German Plans Were Upset.

EXTENDING INVASION

BUCHAREST, September 2.—The Roumanians continue to advance on all fronts. Several positions have been captured together with a number of prisoners and a quantity of supplies. With Roumanian and Russian troops attacking both the Austro-Hungarians and the Bulgarians, it was reported that the Roumanian General Staff is planning to throw an army across the Danube to attack the Teutonic forces in northern Serbia.

The steady advance of the Roumanian armies continues in the Transylvanian Alps. The War Office reports:

"On our northern and northwestern fronts our advance continues with success in all directions. Our armies occupied Tarlunge Valley, near Brasso (Kronstadt), and the important industrial centre of Petroseny. Our losses were very slight.

"On our southern front Hungarian monitors bombarded Turnu, Magurelli and Zimnitza, on the Danube."

CENTRE OF COAL FIELD.

Petroseny lies six miles inside of the Hungarian frontier. It is 48 miles southwest of Hermannstadt. It is the centre of a rich coal field near the southern frontier of Transylvania, lying just north of the Vulcan Pass through the Transylvanian Alps. The occupation of Tarlunge Valley indicates the Roumanians are extending their invasion of the extreme eastern portion of Transylvania.

ROUMANIAN LOSSES LIGHT.

The Roumanian losses have been very light. Their sudden stroke against the Austro-Hungarians was made with such vigor that they met with little resistance.

The Russian forces that crossed eastern Roumania have now arrived on the Bulgarian frontier, where violent fighting is developing along the Danube.

There is also severe fighting in the extreme southern ranges of the Carpathians where Roumanian troops joined the Russians, and southwest of Kimpolung. Further north a battle is raging around Kukul Pass, near Zabie, but only Russians are engaged.

UPSET GERMAN PLANS.

LONDON, Sept. 2. — The Central News correspondent at Petrograd sends a despatch, saying: "Roumania's action has entirely upset the plans of the German staff. The projected blow at Brusiloff's flank is rendered impossible. It is reliably reported that a strong movement has been started against Czar Ferdinand and that Bulgaria's defeat will be the signal for a revolution.

"The relations between Austria and Hungary are critical, as the latter is clamouring for the concentration of the entire Hungarian forces on their own frontiers. There is a possibility of Hungary fighting Austria for her own preservation."

PALE, WEAK GIRLS

GROW INTO WEAK DESPONDENT WOMEN—HOW TO OVERCOME THE TROUBLE.

Healthy Girlhood is the only path to healthy womanhood. The passing from girlhood to womanhood lays a new tax upon the blood. It is the overtaxing of the blood that makes growing girls suffer from headaches and backaches, from paleness and weakness and weariness, from languor, despondency and constant ill-health. Unhealthy girlhood is bound to lead to unhealthy womanhood and a life of misery. Nothing but the blood building qualities of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can save a girl when she undertakes the trials and the tasks of womanhood. That is the time when nature makes new demands upon the blood supply. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new, rich blood to meet these new demands. In this simple, scientific way Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give growing girls new health and makes their dawning womanhood bright and attractive. Miss A. Sternberg, Haileybury Road, New Liskeard, Ont., says: "I have much reason to be grateful to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, as they restored me to health, if, indeed, they did not save my life. In 1914 I began to feel run down and the doctor who was called in said that mine was a bad case of anaemia. I lost flesh, always felt tired and I got so nervous that I could scarcely hold a cup to take a drink. My heart would flutter alarmingly. The doctor did not seem to be able to help me and my family and friends all thought I was in a decline and could not recover. I was in bed for some weeks when an aunt came to see me and urged that I try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My father got a supply and by the time that I had taken three boxes there was a noticeable improvement, and from that on I steadily progressed toward recovery. I continued using the pills for some time longer and they restored me to my old time health and strength. I shall never cease to praise this medicine, and to urge all weak run down girls to give it a fair trial, as I have proved in my own case their great merit."

You can get these pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CATTLE MARKET.

Union Stock Yards, Toronto—Total receipts for the week: 504 cars, with 5,420 cattle, 897 calves, 8,994 hogs, 5,778 sheep and lambs, and 1,539 horses.

City Cattle Market—70 cars, with 982 cattle, 1,200 sheep and lambs, 1,600 hogs, 42 calves, and 36 horses.

Cattle closed the week steady, with little change in prices from a week ago. Though the general demand for all grades was not very big, the market was fairly well cleaned out at the end of the week.

Light butcher cattle were in good demand, but the heavies were slow.

Spring lambs were easier during the week, selling a cent under last week, but firmed up towards the close.

Hogs were in fair demand, after the drop in price on Monday, firming up considerably and closing steady.

WHITE HOUSE DOG BEGINS VACATION

Davy Is First of President's Household to Start for Summer Capital at Shadow Lawn.

Washington, Sept. 1. — The first member of the White House household to go to the summer capital at Shadow Lawn left Washington to-day on a pile of straw and with a chain about his neck.

Davy, the White House dog, did not object to the trip apparently, but he stood on the manner of his going. Judging from the commotion he raised when the White House attendant tried to lift him into a delivery wagon to take him to the station, he would have preferred to walk.

Davy is an Airedale and is the property of Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, the President's cousin. He is known to nearly every policeman in the city of Washington, it being his habit periodically to disappear from the White House and to make the Police Department look him up.

Take Iron For Your Blood

Makes You 100% Stronger in 10 Days

Phosphorous For Your Nerve

Doctors are now finding thousands of people who are going through life in misery with kidney trouble, liver complaint, nervous prostration, headaches, nervous indigestion, rheumatism, constipation and numerous other complaints, all due to lack of Iron in the blood and Phosphorus in the nerves.

Just as soon as the blood becomes thin, and nerves weakened you are unable to digest the little food you eat and at once your system becomes poisoned, causing liver trouble, kidney pains, headaches, rheumatism, indigestion, heart trouble, and you soon are a living thin, run-down, nervous wreck, and life to you then is a burden. The first thing you should do is to go and get weighed; then go to the nearest drug store, and get some Ironized phosphorus with Iron tablets and take one or two after each good meal and you will find that in ten days you are 100 per cent. stronger. The Iron will give you good rich thick blood and the phosphorus will strengthen your nerves and the food you eat will give you 100 per cent. more nourishment than before; you will begin to get fat, your nerves will be strong and you will feel like you used to when you were 16 years old. You know as well as ever, doctor, that there is nothing like good old Iron to give you strength and build you up, while phosphorus acts wonders on the nervous system.

The Iron recommended here is an entirely new form of Iron which will not blacken the teeth or upset your stomach.

Life is short but you can lengthen it 25 years if you take Ironized Phosphorus with Iron, which gives you double strength, and the food you eat will mean nourishment to you instead of poison in your system, causing so many complaints which you know bring you to an early grave. Ironized Phosphorus with Iron does not contain an atom of arsenic, strychnine or any poison which has been proved harmful in almost every tonic. It is easy to take and is taken up by the system almost immediately, making you 100 per cent. stronger in 14 days. It is dispensed in this city by P. O. Wood & Co. stores at 50c a box.

SLIMNESS TO BE STYLE THIS YEAR, PARIS BUYERS FIND

New York, August 31.—Women's clothing will turn to the slim silhouette, according to buyers of this city, who returned on board the Rochambeau of the French line yesterday. Paris has eliminated the waist line, they say, and has gone in for tunic effects, with heavy embroidery. Skirts are to be narrower, and perhaps a bit longer. Slimness will be the effect looked for and everything will be sacrificed for that.

Mme. Georgette, of J. M. Gidding & Co., wondered what was to become come of the dancing habit.

"Nothing of the evening gowns that I have seen," she said, "is intended for dancing. They all have trains. On the other hand they are very short in front. Yes, just below the knees, some of them. Then are they running very much to narrow draped evening frocks. The skirts are nil to be barrel shaped, and some are wearing short coats with them. The three-piece suits are all the rage.

COMMEND NEW CALLOT HOUSE

Mme. Georgette expressed her approval of the new house that Callot has opened.

"It is magnificent," she said. "You know they are going in for interior decorations, as well as dressmaking, and have a beautiful place."

Another who had inspected Callot's new place was Owen Hitchins, who also was most enthusiastic.

"It is said that 5,000,000f. were spent on that place of Callot's," he said. "It was begun before the war, and has just been completed. It is on a magnificent scale throughout."

Miss Josephine Dowling, of the Lichtenstein Millinery Company, said she believed that the final development of the movement toward the Renaissance period in fashions, had been reached. "It has come, and they are wearing embroidered figures not flower designs," she said. "And they are going in for brilliant colors."

Otto B. Shulhof, of Woolf & Shulhof, said that he had never seen such splendid openings.

"The French women are dressing up and the styles are more flamboyant," he said.

MR. KURZMAN'S COMMENT.

Charles Kurzman, who also was a passenger on board of the Rochambeau, was emphatic in his announcement that the silhouette had come to stay.

"Not only narrow skirts, but hats are following," he said. "The object is to look as tall and as slim as possible. Wraps and hats are embroidered. Everything is embroidered, for that matter."

Mr. Kurzman believes that the war will end in the early spring, but Mme Georgette does not think that it will end so soon. May is the month set by her as the earliest time.

While Mr. Kurzman would not say just how many models he was bringing here nor the value of the shipment, it was understood that it was one of the heaviest ever made by the firm.

All the buyers seemed to have the firm conviction that the end of the war was in sight, with the resumption of big business immediately. They all brought large assortments of model gowns with them.

URIC ACID SUFFERING.

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it formed stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

GERMANY'S FOOD SUPPLY.

BERLIN, Aug. 31.—The outlook for the food supply and the general economic situation in Germany are highly satisfactory at the present, and there are no indications that these considerations will assume at any time an aspect which will influence the military plans and operations of the empire, says Dr. Karl Helfferich, Secretary of the Interior.

GOOD WORK FOR SICK WOMEN

The Woman's Medicine Has Proved Its Worth.

When Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies were first introduced, their curative powers were doubted and had to be proved. But the proof came, and gradually the use of them spread over the whole country. Now that hundreds of thousands of women have experienced the most beneficial effects from the use of these medicines, their value has become generally recognized, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the standard medicine for women.

The following letter is only one of the thousands on file in the Pinkham office, at Lynn, Mass., proving that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an article of great merit as shown by the results it produces.

Anamosa, Iowa.—"When I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I suffered with a displacement, and my system was in a general run-down condition. I would have the headache for a week and my back would ache so bad when I would bend down I could hardly straighten up. My sister was sick in bed for two months and doctored, but did not get any relief. She saw an advertisement of your medicine and tried it and got better. She told me what it had done for her, and when I had taken only two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my head began to feel better. I continued its use and now I don't have any of those troubles."—Mrs. L. J. HANNAN, R.F.D. 1, Anamosa, Iowa.

GERARD ATTACKED AS BRITAIN'S FRIEND

LONDON, Sept. 1.—An American, who is in London after several months' stay in Berlin, told correspondent that the German newspapers had been printing attacks on Ambassador Gerard within the last ten days on account of a proposed trip they say he is about to make in England.

According to the informant the German newspapers began printing sly allusions to the Ambassador, saying he was going on a mysterious journey to England and that after a short visit he was going to return to Berlin. After a day or two of this the papers came out, said the informant, with editorial attacks upon the Ambassador, reading something like this:

"Ambassador Gerard is going to take a trip to the country he favours so much—England"; and, "Gerard is going to the country where he has so many friends—England." Some editorials, the informant said, were particularly bitter in insinuating that Mr. Gerard was not of much use in Germany and that the might as well be in England, one newspaper intimating that it would be wise for Mr. Gerard to stay in England permanently. These attacks on Mr. Gerard, said the informant, seemed to spread to nearly all the newspapers he read while there. In every criticism of the German newspapers, he said, accused him of being the friend of England, intimating also that he was the enemy of Germany."

Traced to Censorship.

"The attacks on Mr. Gerard began soon after his stand in refusing to urge upon the Government at Washington that the British censor be rebuked for not allowing the uncensored reports of Berlin correspondents for American newspapers to pass through England,' he said. "The newspapers accused Mr. Gerard of being unfriendly to Germany at that time, particularly resenting his charge that the German censor had declined to allow American correspondents to send matter printed in the German newspapers criticising the American Government. Since then the attacks became more bitter until they culminated in the reports of the supposed trip to England. I understand the German censor has declined to allow these newspaper attacks on Mr. Gerard's intended trip to be cabled out."

At the American Embassy here the correspondent was informed that no word had been received as to Mr. Gerard's intention of coming to England, nor had it been heard that he was contemplating a trip to America at this time. One official explained that if Mr. Gerard proposed a trip here he certainly would inform the Embassy. As to the German newspaper attacks on Mr. Gerard, the Embassy had no word.

The informant, speaking of the food situation in Berlin, said:

"All any one can get to eat as a steady diet is bread, soup and vegetable, which become not only monotonous but unsatisfactory as a perpetual diet. Only a quarter of a pound of meat a week is allowed to any one individual whether at a hotel or elsewhere, and to the ordinary man with a lively appetite that makes about one big bite a week. Everything is way up in price, but worst of it is that whether one has money enough to buy it or not, he can only obtain a limited quantity, the limit fixed by the Government. While prices may be much higher in England than before the war, still there is plenty of everything, and the average man has more money than before the war. So England is really not much worse off than before the war, for the average citizen, while Germany is badly off for every one in the matter of food, whether poor or rich.

Beefsteak a Luxury.

"Since I have been in London I have been eating beefsteak three times a day and have not got enough yet. It is a real luxury to find that you can get all you want of it.

"The German Government, by keeping a sharp eye on what the newspapers publish, has convinced the people Germany is going to win the war, but one notices that there is no more talk of a great decisive smash of the allied enemy. One hears talk everywhere in Berlin and elsewhere in Germany that the Fatherland has all the ammunition, guns, and men it needs, and that whatever advance the Allies have been able to make lately was only a temporary thing. The Government in its official reports turns nearly everything into a German success, and, fortunately for the Government, the people believe everything it says officially. That is what is keeping the German spirit up. Once the truth begins to leak into the minds of the German people as one finds it after getting out of Germany, there will be a different feeling there."

ATHLETIC HONOUR ROLL.

List of British Athletes Killed in Action is a Large One.

New York, Aug. 28. — A London cable to the Herald to-day, says: The casaulties among the leading British sportsmen who have been killed and wounded in action on the western front have now reached alarming proportions, the latest list containing the names of stars in every branch of sport.

Cricket has suffered a severe loss by the death in action of Percy Jeeves, a Warwickshire County professional and one of the coming English players. He represented England in the International matches against the South Africans and Australians in 1912.

The Rev. F. H. Tuke, chaplain to the forces, killed instantaneously while carrying water to the trenches, was a Cambridge University man, and in his Varsity days was captain of the first Trinity Boat Club.

Lieut. K. R. Cook, who died of wounds, was a member of the London Scottish Rugby Football Club, a fine swimmer, and with his younger brother went under training as a middle distance runner for the Olympic games in 1912.

A well known South End harrier, Sergeant W. J. Thorogood, also has fallen. He was one of the original members of the famous club, and ran in every cross-country team race in which the club competed up to the outbreak of the war. He won the Essex championship in 1908.

Lieut. David N. Gaussend, killed in action, was well known in University athletic circles as a long distance runner, having competed in the Oxford and Cambridge sports in 1913 and 1914.

Captain T. G. Brocklebank, an old Etonian, who died of wounds, rowed bow for Oxford in the university boat race of 1904.

The Footballers' Battalion has done some fine work in the attack on Delville Wood. Captain Bell, the old Southamptoh soccer player, has been wounded, while Wm. Jonas, of the Clapton Orient Club, has been killed. The name of E. T. Hanney, a Manchester City and Reading footballer, who was one of the English team in the last Olympic games, appears among the wounded.

MONTREAL JUDGE KILLED.

Heber Mixed Marriage Case.

Montreal, Sept. 1.—Justice Napoleon Charbonneau of the Superior Court of Montreal district, was killed yesterday morning at Three Rivers.

The judge was on a fishing trip and staying at a summer cottage. His death resulted from a fall on his yacht.

Judge Charbonneau's most famous case was the appeal from a lower court judgment annulling the marriage of the Heberts, two Roman Catholics married by a Methodist minister, whom the church authorities divorced when the husband invoked the ne temere decree. Judge Charbonneau held the Roman Catholic decree had no civil effect and quashed the annulment.

Napoleon Charbonneau was born at Cote de Neiges, Montreal, in 1853. He was educated at Montreal College, sat as a member of Parliament for Jacques Cartier in 1895, and was made a judge in 1903.

"Do you know of any good investment I can make on the instalment plan, Dad? I am earning more than I am spending and I would like to place the surplus where it will grow."

"How much life insurance are you carrying, Son?"

"Oh, I've lots of insurance. If I die Dorothy will get $2000, besides there's our home and my other real estate."

"I didn't mean insurance just as protection. Though even at that $2000 won't yield Dorothy a very big income, if safely invested, out of which you know she will have to pay interest on the mortgage, etc."

"Listen, Son. Last week my first policy in The Manufacturers Life matured. It was a twenty year endowment for $5000. I never missed the money once I got accustomed to paying the premiums and now your mother and I have a nice little nest egg. Besides the good returns, I have had the satisfaction of knowing that your mother and you had $5000 protection during all those twenty years."

"I never thought of insurance in that way, Dad."

WORK IN KITCHENS FOR "BILLY" SUNDAY.

Ocean Grove, N.J., August 31. — Evidence that "Billy" Sunday has succeeded in instilling a spirit of self-sacrifice in the hearts of many summer residents at the local hotels and boarding houses was seen to-night when they took the places of employees in hotel kitchens that the latter might have an opportunity to hear the evangelist. Three thousand of the employees took advantage of the unusual night off.

When several hundred arrived late, others in the audience who already had heard Mr. Sunday gave up their seats. It was the largest audience that Mr. Sunday has faced here, and he gave one of his most effective sermons.

"You can sneer at me as a preacher did down the street here to-day, and call me a fraud and a hypocrite," he shouted, "but at that I'll have the best of it. I settled this question for myself one dark, stormy night twenty-nine years ago."

DANGEROUS HABITS: There are many people, otherwise clean and always neat in appearance, that have the disgusting habit of biting their finger nails. Others have a habit, practiced in all sorts of public places, even at the dining table, of pecking their nose with their fingers. This habit is so terribly disgusting that one is hardly able to discuss it in polite terms, and yet the vast majority of those addicted to it are utterly unconscious of the habit and some are even what we might call "health cranks."

This morning as I passed a grocery and market store the proprietor's brothers, who are in appearance unusually neat and clean, were standing in the doorway. Each of them was pecking his nose, and a handkerchief was not used. They went into the store and at once began to wait upon customers, handling bread, meat, vegetables, cookies, cakes, candies and other foodstuffs, much of which must be eaten just as it comes from the store.

I am inclined to think that the danger of infantile paralysis infection would be greatly lessened if all of the people that raise, prepare or manufacture or in any way handle or sell eatables of any kind were first given thorough and careful instructions in all kinds of sanitary laws and lessons in habits of personal cleanliness, and were then forced to observe those laws if they were at any time found to be disregarding them.

Typhoid fever is quite frequently spread by people that are known to the medical profession as typhoid carriers, through the very viscious habit of going to stool or voiding the urine without afterwards washing the hands.

It seems like a shame and an outrage upon the decencies of life that anyone that teaches the laws of health as I have done for a quarter of a century should find it necessary to speak of things like this, that are so obvious that it is almost incredible to think of finding educated and otherwise enlightened people who fail to take such simple and necessary means of protecting not only themselves but those they love, against the dangers of infection through such dangerous habits. One of the first lessons that parents should teach to the little ones is the use of the handkerchief, and the second personal cleanliness after the use of the toilet.

If you observe the actions of almost any child between the age of one to six years you will find the fingers frequently in its mouth, no matter what those busy little fingers were doing the previous moment, playing with its feet, the cat, anything it may pick up in the yard or street and from that to the mouth. Only by reason of the fact that an Alwise Creator has supplied the little mouth with a fluid that is to a large extent antiseptic is the little lives sound and humanity preserved.

There are many other dangerous habits that are not confined to children or ignorant people, and they all help to keep the doctors riding in automobiles. How many of you put coins and paper money into your mouths? Stop and imagine the filthy pockets that some money has been in. How many stick the borrowed lead pencil into their mouth before using it?

I once saw a well-dressed delivery man, young and good looking, walk into a free dispensory in order to receive treatment for the vilest blood disease known to the human family. He was dressed in the showy uniform of his employees and carried a pencil for the use of the people that must sign for packages. Did you put that pencil into your mouth? Yes, I know it hurts to tell these things, but the only safe road is the road of knowledge. Teach your children.

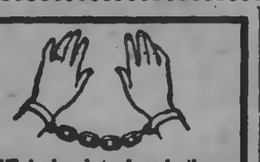
Dear Doctor: Our little boy is improving just as fast as he possibly can. He can sit up in his high chair now, and holds his head up as well as anyone can, rolls all over the floor and is trying to creep. His weakness seems to be from the small of his back, down. When I pick him up he seems to drop from there down. He can use his feet pretty well, that is, draw them up to his face, etc., but when I try to stand him on them he cries. I have done so just to find if his legs are getting any strength. I have been rubbing the cords or the legs on each side of the cords leading from the heel to see if it will strengthen and lighten them. I have not been able to rub very much because it hurts him. Do you think it is all right for me to do this. The cords at the back of his foot and lez seem to be shorter than in the front. He is gaining in weight, has a good, healthy colour and is as bright and full of play as he can be.

Mrs. T. B.

(Answer)—I am glad to know that the little boy is improving, but would advise you to continue the rubbing and massaging. Besides giving the treatment to his leg and foot you should extend it at least least halfway up his back. If you place him in a hot fomentation from thirty to forty-five minutes a couple of times per week, having him to lie upon the hot cloths, then afterward very thoroughly rub the spine, but especially the back of the leg and ankle, for 15 or or 20 minutes you would make still further and more rapid progress.



IT is hard to break the chains of habit. It took one man six months to stop saying "Gee Whiz."

It is astonishing how habit will keep a person asking for "the same as usual" too long after she has intended to try Red Rose Tea. Why let habit prevent you enjoying this richly flavored Indian-Ceylon blend? Order a sealed package to-day.

More Women For Camps

Asked for by British Military Authorities.

LONDIN, Aug. 31.—The secretary of the military cookery section of the Women's Legion announces that there is once again an urgent demand for waitresses and cooks for military camps, officers' messes, N.C.O.'s messes, etc. There are at the present time vacancies for 100 waitresses and 100 plain cooks. The waitresses especially are required as soon as possible, so only those free to start work during the next fortnight should reply.

These women are employed as Government workers, and will receive a wage of £20 a year, also free board and lodging, and sixpence wekely towards their laundry expenses. The selected applicants are required to serve for one month on probation, at the end of which time, if their work is satisfactory, they will be asked to sign an agreement to serve for one year or the duration of the war should it end sooner.

The women wear the regulation uniform of the Women's Legion, which is supplied free on the signing of the agreement. The work is simple, and is quickly learned, under the direction of the superintendents in charge of the messes and kitchens, but good health and physique are very necessary for those who wish to take up employment of this kind.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

THERE are two great obstacles to preventive medicine which is the real medicine, and these are poverty and ignorance. The greatest cause of poverty—that is, real downright need—is sickness. Sickness causes at least one-third of the world's poverty. Several other things, including alcohol, account for the other two-thirds. Money in the form of higher wages helps in a large measure to obviate poverty and the sickness which oftentimes lies at its door. Perhaps the most noted health man in America at the present time is Colonel (Dr.) Gorgas, the man whose energies succeeded in making the Panama Zone inhabitable by white people. Colonel Gorgas asserts that two diseases carried by the mosquito—Malaria and Yellow Fever—drove the white man from the easy living tropics to the inclement north. His enterprise is allowing him to return there. He asserts further (for, like all public health men, his assertions are marked by personal modesty) that the Panama Canal project was made feasible by the fact that the workingmen there were paid the highest wages of any place in America. Money may be an evil. It sometimes is; but it has its good uses. The other great foe of public health advancement is ignorance; that is, want of knowledge of what is good for one's health. This column is out against ignorance of this character.

PREVENTION OF DISEASE

The writer hopes that everyone who sees this paper will read this column. Especially is it desired that the children shall become interested in it, for they, after all, are the portion of the population who are most susceptible to education. The older ones, more set in their ways, will not perhaps take all that is set down here as gospel—although it more nearly approaches gospel than anything else found outside the Good Book—but the children will perhaps gain some good from it. By the way, there is some good public health advice, none better, found in the Old Testament: read Exodus and Leviticus.

DISINFECTION

Following an outbreak of communicable disease in a home the room occupied by the sick person should be thoroughly cleaned. The floors should be scrubbed with soap and hot water and the walls wiped with a solution of 1 in 2,000 bichloride of mercury, carbolic acid, or cresol 1 in 20. Unless the circumstances seem to the Medical Officer of Health to demand it the room need not be fumigated by means of formaldehyde or sulphur.

DIPHTHERIA CARRIERS

It is well known that outbreaks of diphtheria and other diseases, including scarlet fever, cerebro-spinal meningitis and typhoid fever, are influenced by carriers," persons who are quite well and have not recently suffered from the diseases, but who convey disease to others. This is very often the reason of the obscure origin of serious epidemics. Numerous investigators have found diphtheria bacilli in the throat and nose of from one to four per cent. of healthy persons. Among the scarlet fever patients in the Willard Parker Hospital, New York, 4.5 per cent. of diphtheria carriers were found, and in one-half of these the bacteria were virulent, as shown by reaction in guinea pigs. No local treatment is entirely satisfactory in exterminating the germs of the disease. Some of the persistent cases were those with deep pockets in the tonsils, and the complete removal of these tonsils usually give satisfactory results. Carriers of diphtheria bacilli do not themselves contract diphtheria, but they are a common source of trouble to others.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

QUESTIONS.

A.B.: Q.—How shall I get rid of vermin in a child's head?

A.—The hair should be washed with soap and warm water, dried, and then soaked in gasoline or coal oil with a towel tied about the head overnight. Next morning the hair should be carefully combed with a fine-tooth comb dipped in acetic acid or vinegar to remove the nits. One, or at most two treatments like this will usually clean the matter up.

A.—The quantity of Diphtheria Antitoxin required for any case depends upon the severity of the case. There is practically no danger from any quantity from 5,000 to 30,000 units. Don't hesitate to use plenty of it it is supplied free by the Provincial Board of Health.

The HOME CIRCLE COLVMN

It is claimed that all the presidents of the U. S. and Premiers of Canada had good mothers. It is said that John Q. Adams until the day of his death said the prayer his mother had taught him. Lincoln said, "All that I am I owe to my mother." Garfield kissed the wrinkled face of his mother on the day of his inauguration and said, "You brought me to this." Grover Cleveland said "Worldly honours or worldly perplexities will never cause me to forget the lessons my mother taught me." As the shadows lengthen, the memory of a mother's love becomes intensified. The vision grown dim with age becomes clear and pictures of childhood days rise before us in their perfection. It is well so few instances are on record where a mother has failed to impress her children with the value and purity of a mother's love.

You get "down in the mouth" too easily, my friend. Cheer up; walk on the sunny side of the street; live where you can catch the south winds. Sunshine always warms and cheers, get more of it and give it out, you have lived in the frigid zone too long already. We would like to send a gulf stream of joy into your life. Give us a chance. Read the Home Circle Department and you will always wear a smile. It is the best known tonic for the "blues."

Speaking a good word is like kissing a pretty girl. You want to do it again.

When all other blandishments fail, you can usually keep your husband in leash by taking in washing for his support.

A taste for music, poetry, pictures, etc., tends to destroy the attraction for the vulgar. A home of beauty, of taste and refinement always tends to elevate and enoble the mind, and cultivate the spirit of contentment. Beauty fills the world, as well as heaven, if we have eyes to se it. It is open to all. The rose is as fragrant, the lily as white, and the hyacinth as delicately blue, when cultivated by the poor, as by the jeweled fingers of the wealthy.

It is the mothers who hold the world in place. They are the balance wheels of the universe. They hold the scepter of power by controlling the affections of men. "The hand that rocks the cradle" has controlled armies. Marie Theresa quelled the tumult of a mighty army in Austria by raising her fair hand, and we are told that all was hushed to silence, as in clear, sweet tones, she spoke: "The bravest battles that ever were fought by the mothers of men."

To make a boy into a pure man, a mother must do more than pray. She must live with him in the sense of comrade and closest friend. She must stand by him in time of temptation as the pilot sticks to the wheel when rapids are around. She must never desert him to go off to superintend outside duties any more than the engineer deserts his post and goes into a baggage car to read up engineering when his train is pounding across the country at forty miles an hour.

The will to do invariably sees that it is done.

Only a smile! But ah! how it cheered the broken heart, engendered a ray o fhope, and cast a halo of light around the unhappy present; made the bed-ridden one forget its present agony for a moment as it dwelt in sunshine of joy and lived in the warmth of that smile. Let us all increase our giving of smiles. They cost nothing and are of untold value, especially in the Home Circle.

Be as careful to keep the weeds out of the minds of your children as you are to keep them out of your garden. But remember something will grow there. If you don't plant them with good grain, the tares will take root in spite of you. Keep a library of good clean books, and by all means keep your home paper before them.

What a happy world this world would be if the innocency of childhood's tender years could be carried through age. So while we are training them in the way they should walk, let us watch our own footsteps, and not cut off their harmless mirth to suit our tastes tha have grown sombre wih age and care.

Carrying a rabbit's foot in your pocket may bring you good luck, but perseverance and hard work gets you the mon.

A good front is a good thing in business, but the back must also keep the pace.

Let method be your servant and not your amster.

You never have to speak twice to start a knocker to going.

FASHION FORECASTS FOR COLD WEATHER

Fall and Winter Suits Will be Marked by A Great Many New Features

The suits for the coming fall season will be of three varieties: the plain, tailored type, the outing or sport type, and the fancier, more dressy variety, each having its appropriate place and usefulness.

The plain, tailored style will be either single or double-breasted, with some flare to the skirt of the coat, with coat collars, revers and coat sleeves, the body of the jacket ranging from finger-tip to a length slightly longer.

The outing or sports suits will be varied by pleats and shirrings at the waist-line, held in by belts and half belts, with high collars and simple sleeves, the suit coats ranging in length from finger-tip length to a point halfway between finger-tip and knee lengths.

New Features.

The dressier suits will contain a great many new features, such as large collars which approximate shoulder-cape effects when opened and laid back, high cuffs and fancy cuffs of the bell variety. Some will have vest fronts, and partial belts will be features in other models.

The bodies of the jackets will be more shaped than they have been for several seasons, with the skirts of the coats containing considerable fullness of flare at the sides and back.

The length of the suit coat (finger-tip and longer) conforms to the lines of the skirt, carrying out the harmony of design so necessary to a truly pleasing effect.

Trimmings will be diversified—fur edgings, fur collars, velvets, tailor-braids and embroidery—these embellishments to conform to the design, having in mind appropriateness, which in itself is that which makes true style.

The Short Skirts.

The short skirt will continue. Its smartness and youthful appearance makes its popularity unversal.

There will be three different shapes in coats this fall.

First, the loose coat with its sweeping fulness, its generous sized sleeves, its large collar and large cuffs. This coat may be cut from a little below the knee to a point naughtly above the bottom of the skirt.

Second, the belted coat, some hanging full and loose in the back, with belted fronts or sides, others belted all around. This type also will be distinguished by large collars, large cuffs and generous lines.

Third, the shaped coat, hanging straight and loose from the shoulders in the back, giving a long line from the waist to the bottom of the coat This type exemplifies the new silhouette.

The important features in coats are fulness of the cut, large sleeves of various kinds, large collars, large cuffs and large pockets.

Wide Draped Girdle.

The Botticelli grade, or wide, draped girdle, placed slightly above the normal waist, giving a straight line at the sides, will, it is thought, be extensively used for the coming season on house gowns and tailored suits. The Botticelli idea was used in costumes several years ago, at the time when flowing, draped robes were in vogue. In these models the fullness was massed at the front, giving to therefore the style, as used at that the figure an ungainly shape, and time, did not prove successful.

A strong influence toward the peasant costumes of all countries is also noted. It is illustrated chiefly, however, in the use of the full, straight, gathered skirt.

This peasant costume style lends itself readily to the use of bordered materials, new lines of which are being shown by the manufacturers. The new silks include satins, striped lengthwise of the goods with velvet, chenille or metal. Stripes, it is predicted are to be the dominant notes in silks for the Winter.

CARE OF SKIN AND HAIR.

The best way to keep roughness, tan and freckles from spoiling the effect of the winter dancing frock is to prevent these blemishes from an attack, for once seated the trouble may be hard to get rid of. A jar of cold cream will be indispensable in camp. Its use on hands, face and arms every night will keep the skin from toughening from exposure, and will aid the healing of bramble scratches and insect bites. Peroxide will also be valuable. A solution of two parts witch hazel and one part alcohol will, if applied every night, keep sunburn from biting into the skin and becoming an obatinate tan.

Camp is just the place to give the hair a chance to rest and recuperate. In the early morning allow it to flow free, tossing it about in the open air; at night brush it with even, firm strokes, not less than 50 times. During the day part it, thrust in a couple of side combs to hold it in soft, becoming woves about the face, and braid the ends in one or two long braids, according to its thickness.

Clean to handle. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and General Stores.

The Safe Food for Your Baby

The healthy adult has developed powers of resisting disease germs in his food—Baby has not! Milk which grown-ups can take safely may be dangerous for Baby, especially in the summer.

If he cannot have mother's milk, fresh and pure, be sure his "bottle" food is germ-free and safe!

The dangers always present in cow's milk—which usually, and particularly in hot weather, swarms with bacteria—can easily be avoided by giving Baby

The Pure Progressive Dietary

Milk Food No. 1	Milk Food No. 2	Malted Food No. 3
From birth to three months.	From three to six months.	From six months onward.

The Allenburys' Milk Foods are prepared from clean, fresh cow's milk, enriched with cream and milk-sugar, and freed from the excess of curd-forming material, so that it is practically the same in composition as mother's milk. This modified milk is evaporated by a process that produces a dry and absolutely germ-free product, which is sealed in air-tight tins to protect its purity.

The Allenburys' Milk Foods Nos. 1 and 2 will carry Baby safely through the critical first six months, and by that time he will be ready for Allenburys' Malted Food No. 3, which will keep him growing steadily until he can take solid food.

Removing Stains.

Should you accidentally spill shoe-blacking on a wooden floor, put a handful of corn-meal on the spot immediately and rub in briskly. Sweep off; not even a sign of the strain will be seen.

This will also answer for fruit juices or almost any liquid that leaves a stain. It will also greatly aid in taking up kerosene oil and other grease spots.

You will like this Salt!

It will please you just as it did me with its wonderful whiteness, its strength, its purity, and free-running properties.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SHIRTWAIST

By Anabel Worthington

The waist in the picture is a good design for striped material, but it will be pretty in a plain ground also. It is the plain tailored style distinguished by its lovely lines and dainty finishing details.

An interesting feature is the collar, which is in line with the revers that roll back to give the open neck front that has such vogue all season. Contrasting color goods is used and the collar and revers outlined with a narrow strip of material cut bias. This gives snap and makes much of a plain waist. The short sleeves have deep roll cuffs which have the same finish as the collar and a pocket in the left front is also favored with this trimming. A three button front closing adds further to the comfort giving qualities of the model.

This is a very satisfactory type of blouse for striped galatea, striped linen, striped gabardine, madras, gingham and the like, combined with plain.

The pattern of No. 7904 is cut in sizes 36-44 bust measure. To make in size 36 will require 1¾ yards of 36 inch material

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE WAR AS REFLECTED FROM MANY SOURCES

Schopenhauer's Philosophy Read in Teuton Trenches

A Pessimist Who Recognizes Things as They Are and a Pacifist Who Believes the Right of Might Continues to Count in the Political World.

By IRVING R. BACON.

What is that wonderful book which so many of the Kaiser's soldiers carry in their pockets and read with such avidity during the lull between attacks in the trenches? What is that amazing philosophy, which, according to the Schopenhauer League's Year Book, recently published at Kiel, rates sanctity, sympathy, charity and benignity as the only possible means of salvation, yet fires the breasts of its votaries with an unflinching valor and converts them into the most reckless fighters the world ever has seen?

That "The World as Will and Phenomenon," Schopenhauer's chief work, should have taken the place of the New Testament in the pockets of the Prussian soldiers will no doubt remain an incomprehensible mystery to Americans until they take the trouble to inform themselves concerning the nature of that work. The current American as well as English conception of Schopenhauer is that he is a glum pessimist and woman hater, and that his philosophy is principally valuable as a preface to suicide.

He is a pessimist, surely enough. But do you know what pessimism means? Not what you have been accustomed to regard it; not a gloomy view of all that is beautiful in life; not a spurning of every well meant kindness; not a trampling upon roses; not a denial that the silver lining of the cloud is more to be sought than the black storm raging in its middle. Pessimism is merely the recognition of things as they are, of the world as it is. It simply indicates what is not wholesome in life. It does for all what Asmodeus did for the hero in Le Sage's novel of "The Devil on Stilts"—it tears away the surface covering and shows us the inner workings, the falseness, the badness, the deceit, the selfishness, the malignity and, worst of all, perhaps, the stupidity which so often lurk beneath a charming exterior and which is but the reflex of the universal conflict at the core of everything in nature. Schopenhauer does not bid you close your eyes to the beautiful landscape which spreads before your gaze. What he does is to show you the mechanism which is at work to produce all that splendid vista. And, truly, you do not believe that because you have been taught to know the function of the various wheels and cogs of a watch you will prize the watch less highly! Or does the electrician, because he knows the deadly nature of electricity, think more meanly of the current which works such marvels? Pessimism does not rob us of our pleasure in illusions: it contents itself with making us understand their nature and thereby puts us on our guard against being surprised and overwhelmed by the hidden forces to which they owe their existence.

Slanderous to Women.

In one of his essays Schopenhauer makes slanderous remarks about women. He must have been in a most unphilosophic rage when he wrote it. His description of that paragon of the world is so manifestly unjust and untrue that there is scant wonder that only a few women ever have forgiven him, and still fewer can be brought to read his works. But this aversion to him is no less unphilosophical than was the spirit which dictated the unfortunate essay in question.

In "The World as Will and Phenomenon," which was the result of a strictly calm contemplation of the world, and almost every line of which bears the stamp of an inspiration of genius fully as true and great as that of Shakespeare in "Hamlet," Schopenhauer pays to woman the highest compliment that can be bestowed upon a mortal. He attributes to her the heritage of intellect which mankind possesses. And upon the intellect, according to his teaching, depends the ultimate redemption of the world.

As for the charge that Schopenhauer encourages suicide, nothing could be more unjust and false. True, he does say that when one's troubles or agony have become so intense that even the instinctive love of life cannot stay the hand from self-destruction, it is preposterous for the law to punish the failure to consummate the act. But, on the other hand, he not only denates suicide to be immoral, but shows by a demonstration infinitely more cogent than the commonplaces which are urged in the current religious teachings exactly why it is immoral; and, moreover, why it is inconclusive and altogether the reverse of that which the suicide hopes to attain by his rash act.

The only way out of life and its recurrence, according to Schopenhauer, is by the spirit of resignation which results from saintly living. This is the sole means to give a "quietus" to the will. Only they who have ceased to "will"—that is, who have merged their own being into the universal weal and make their own desires subservient to the welfare and happiness of others—can hope to attain that state of bliss after death which is called by the Hindoos "Nirvana." Suicide is the strongest possible affirmation of the "will to live." For it is not life that the suicide spurns; it is the conditions of life under which he finds himself that he hopes to escape from. But alas, how futile is the attempt! For even if he succeeds in inflicting a fatal wound he merely ceases to exist in one form to awake in a new one. And the troubles and strife and woes of existence must all be gone over again, everlastingly, until that spirit of resignation born of sanctity comes to his rescue.

The "Will," which is the eternal principle within us; the principle which underlies everything everywhere; which manifests itself in animals as character; in plants and other organic things as their quality, and in inorganic substances as attraction or repulsion, adhesion, resiliency and other forces—that "Will," ac*cording to Schopenhauer*, is transmitted to the offspring from the father; whereas, as already said, the "intellect" is the gift of the mother. The "Will" is that which seeks ever to manifest itself and keeps us forever craving and yearning for we know not what, from cycle to cycle of existence. It is our "motherwit" that finally brings us the realization that, after all, the "play is not worth the candle," and we cease to crave for ourselves and, like the Christs and Buddhas, allow our hearts to be pierced by the lance of compassion, and extend a charity worldwide in its circumference.

Opposed to War.

And what of war? Here is what Schopenhauer says of it:—

"History, from beginning to end, tells of nothing but wars. * * * The origin of every war is a thievish avarice; wherefore Voltaire says justly, 'In every war the only question involved is theft.' As soon as one people feels a surplus of power it falls upon its neighbors, so that, instead *of having to live by its own labo*r, it may appropriate the result of the labor of the others. And sometimes, by subjugating the conquered country, the conqueror insures for himself also the future product of the vanquished. That furnishes the material for the history of the world and its deeds of valor. Especially in French dictionaries should there be treated under the caption of 'Gloire' (glory) whatever pertains to artistic and literary glory and, when it comes to treating of military glory, refer the reader to 'Look under "Booty."'

"Two very religious nations, however, the Hindoos and Egyptians, appear not to have expended their surplus force upon robber insursions or heroic ventures, but upon the erection of huge buildings which have bidden defiance to the ages and have kept the memory of those nations in reverence."

In this connection it may not be amiss to see what Schopenhauer had to say in regard to "preparedness." Although there can be no reasonable doubt that he was, in theory, at least, a "violent" pacifist, the following words might have been penned by the most ardent advocate of preparedness in our own country of the present day:—

"If justice reigned on earth it would suffice for one to have built his house; and he would require no other safeguard for its protection than this obvious right of proprietorship. But, because injustice is the order of the day, it is necessary that he who has built the house should also be in a position to protect it. Otherwise his right is 'de facto' incomplete, for the assailant has the 'right of might.' * * *

"In our civic life the latter 'right' has been done away with both in theory as well as in practice; but in the political world, only in theory. In practice it continues to count. Even now we can see the results of the neglect of this rule in China—rebels from within the Europeans from without—and the greatest empire of the world is helpless and must pay the penalty for having cultivated only the arts of peace and not also those of war."

The philosophy of Schopenhauer is based upon the idealism of Kant. It is not a dry reasoning by which the reader is led from one general notion to another by a process of deductions until he reaches an ultimate general notion without ever any picture to relieve the mental eye. Schopenhauer always leads his reader from one natural object to another, until, by a process of syntheals, the complete picture of what he desires to convey stands in all its majestic splendor before the reader's mental eye. In this way, like Dante's Beatrice, he guides one through the profoundest mysteries of the world. And by the time one has read the two volumes of "The World as Will and Phenomenon" there is but little doubt left that one holds the key to the solution of as much of the "riddle of the universe" as the human mind is at all capable of acquiring.

That is why so many thousands of Teuton soldiers are making his work their religion. They find in it much of the solace which is furnished by revealed religion and, what is lacking in the latter, an explanation which satisfies the most critical of philosophic minds.

War Is Certain to End This Year, Asserts Mme. de Thebes

Says Peace Will Be Declared Before 1917, and Stopping of Hostilities Will Come Suddenly and Unexpectedly, Roar of Guns Ceasing Over Night.

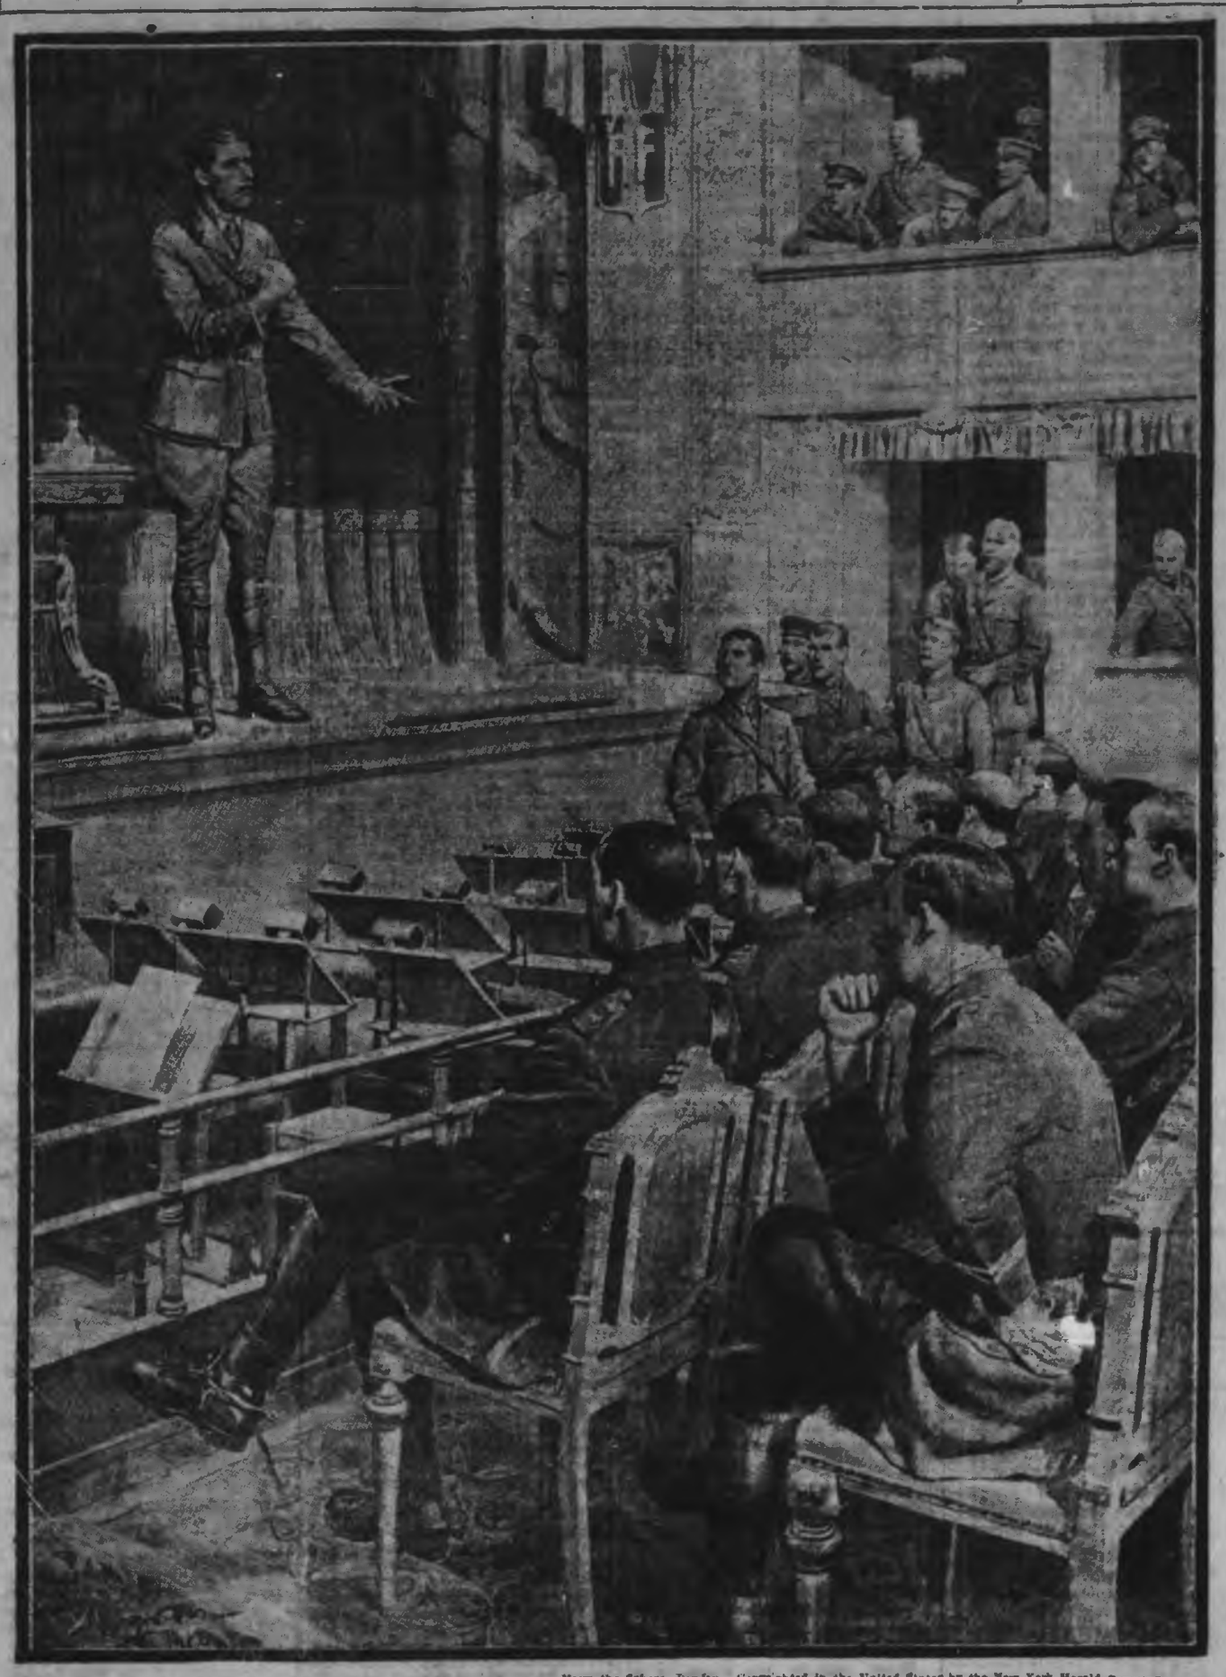
(Special Dispatch)

BERLIN, Saturday.—The Paris correspondent of the Berliner Tidende has interviewed Mme. A. de Thebes, well known French clairvoyant and astrologer, in which she emphatically states that the war will end before the new year. She it was who said in 1913 that the year 1914 would be the year of great heroism, and, despite much shedding of blood and tears, would be a great year for France and place her in the front rank of the nations. The correspondent found Mme. A. de Thebes in her home, in the Avenue de Wagram. She at first declined to be interviewed, referring the correspondent to her manager for this, but finally consented to give him the following message:—

"Germany has opened the eyes of the world and has given us all a great lesson in military efficiency and preparedness. We will always have war. Of course, it is nice to dream of peace, to preach peace and so wish for peace, but as long as there are two men left on the earth conflicts will take place. It is the same with nations. War will never cease between nations, because war belongs to the natural order of things, and the present war will teach even the smallest nations that they must always be prepared for war. The wolf will devour the lamb when he gets the opportunity.

"I have predicted that the war will end this year, and I desire to say now, despite all circumstances and arguments to the contrary, that peace will be declared before the new year. And peace will come suddenly and unexpectedly. The roar of the guns will cease over night, and the soldiers on both fronts will be called home to peaceful pursuits. Fate has so decreed it."

ALL IN THE DAY'S WORK—A LECTURE ON SCOUTING, BY A BRITISH OFFICER



From the Sphere, London. Copyrighted in the United States by the New York Herald Company.

This interesting scene was enacted in a little theatre behind the western firing line. The British officers forming the audience were grouped in the stalls and boxes to hear a lecture by another officer on scouting in war time. The lecture was very well attended, and was listened to with great interest despite the incongruity of the surroundings.

Celebrate Escape from Death at Verdun with Rousing Beer Party

Company of Young German Soldiers Are Entertained by Their Lieutenant in Recognition of Their Bravery and Endurance Under Fire.

(Special Dispatch)

BERLIN, Saturday.

The scene is a little village near the Verdun front. On one side is an orchard, and on the other are fresh green meadows on which horses and cows are peacefully grazing. Now and then aeroplanes fly by, and the only thing to disturb the peaceful scene is the occasional roar of guns on the heights of the Meuse.

Along the meadow are long tables and benches occupied by young German soldiers in their gray-green uniforms. Every one has a large glass of beer in front of him, while nearby are stacked several big kegs, from which the glasses are constantly refilled.

It is a beer party or festival given by First Lieutenant B—— to his company in appreciation of the bravery of the men at Verdun. For months they fought between Thiaumont and Douaumont, and, as some of them express it, "they have gone through hell." But now they are merry, laughing and singing.

While the beer is being tapped the regimental band is playing the favorite songs of the men, most of them from Von Weber's opera "Der Freischutz." "Auf der Heide" and "Ich bin ein Jagersmann" are the favorites.

First Lieutenant B—— rises and calls for order. He is a man of splendid physique, with deep eyes and a prominent nose. He looks over the whole company and says:—

"My dear brave boys, I am glad to see that despite the terrible experiences you have gone through you are still able to enjoy yourselves. We have had our share under fire, but I know that when we again face the enemy you will defy death as before. Let us all drink to our great and beloved Fatherland."

The band strikes up a favorite song, the men rise and drink, after which a hearty cheer is heard.

At the officers' table are several wounded men, now convalescent, wearing the iron cross. They are busy telling their experiences. A captain of another company in the same battalion, who fought at Douaumont, states that he was under fire for hours.

"However," says he, "I got so that I did not mind it after a while. You see, I have no more nerves left, and the French could shoot until they burst, for all I cared."

The party continued until after dark, and when the men had all the beer they wanted it slowly dispersed.

"Dear boys," said the first lieutenant, "we have had a good time. We have had good, cold beer, plenty of beer. To-morrow we go back to duty. Let all of you have a good night's rest, for we rise early. Good night."

It is dead quiet. The tables are deserted, and in small groups the men slowly wend their way to their quarters. Over there on the heights the guns are still roaring.

Serbs Turn to Fortune Tellers for Comfort in War's Distress

German Newspaper Correspondent in Belgrade Interviews Austrian Count, Now Military Governor—Tells How Charlatans Influence People—Politicians Ruined Country.

(Special Dispatch)

BERLIN, Saturday.

"For nearly three-quarters of a year," writes Dr. Leo Lederer, German correspondent in Belgrade for the Staats-Zeitung, "the flag of the Hapsburgs has been flying over the King's palace in Belgrade. The palace is now occupied by Count Johann von Salis Seewis, Military Governor of Serbia, and assisting him are three hundred officers, General Babich and General Kuchinka and First Lieutenant Gellinel, who before the war was Military Attache in Belgrade.

"The Military Governor consented to give me an interview. On my arrival at the palace I was courteously received by General Grebe, who conducted me to the Governor's room.

"The Count is a fine type of the Austrian soldier. He is an officer to his very soul, and his knowledge of Serbian politics and affairs particularly fits him for the difficult position he now holds.

"The bloody wars that Serbia now has behind her," said the Count, "have naturally produced changes, and all these bitter experiences have developed a desire and a hope for peace among the Serbian people.

"Of course, the people still hope to establish an independent government, and every victory of our enemies adds to this hope. Seldom have the fortune tellers and charlatans had such an influence over the people as is now the case. Recently a peasant in Uzice predicted that, as one first occupation of Belgrade lasted just seven days, our second occupation would last no longer than seven months. The seven months have passed, but the fortune telling peasant consoles himself now by saying that he meant seven months in the next year.

"'Of course, we rule with an iron hand, and every law must be strictly obeyed, yet, on the other hand, we seek to be fair to every one, so as to re-establish order and discipline among the people.'

The Count added that the politicians had ruined Serbia. That country with all its resources should long before this have developed into a prosperous and wealthy community, but the reigning party diverted every dollar to its own pockets, leaving the people to starve and shift for themselves. Now all these politicians have been banished and the border is closed to their return.

"Farm machinery has been brought from Austria and Germany, so that the crop this year will be more than enough to feed the country. There has been also a marked increase in cattle."

"Asked who was paying for all this, the Count replied:—

"The largest part of the cost is borne by Austria. We pay for all expenses of the government, look after the hospitals and the poor. In Belgrade we are looking after ten thousand poor persons. Thus far there has been little income from the taxes, but we have a system of taxation in mind which is just and fair, and when established will no doubt bring order out of the chaos that has prevailed."

PEACE MUST BRING END TO HOUSE OF HOHENZOLLERN

Articles by Prominent French Journalist Demand Deposition of Kaiser.

EXTREMISTS URGE HANGING FOR EMPEROR

The Hapsburgs and the Turks, as Accomplices in the War, Are Flayed.

(Special Dispatch)

PARIS, Saturday.

"Peace only when the people and the governments of the allied States, confident of their strength and conscious of their moral and political duty, shall decree that the House of Hohenzollern has ceased to rule and that no treaty will be made with it, because it alone wanted war and all this frightful devastation of the world is its work."

This is the view which diplomatists and writers abroad are beginning to take of the first condition of peace—the deposition of the Kaiser and his dynasty. It is thus expressed by Mr. Joseph Reinach in the Paris Figaro, whose ideas are often inspired by statesmen of France and Britain and in cruder form by various societies and civic bodies in England, some going further and urging that William II. be hanged for his crimes against humanity. It is far beyond Sir Edward Grey's statement that the sword would not be sheathed until Belgium was restored, Alsace and Lorraine again French and all the little nations guaranteed in their rights.

No Time to State Terms.

Naturally the British Foreign Secretary could not go further and say he proposed to hang the German Emperor or to depose the Hohenzollern dynasty because, diplomatically speaking, the Allies have not yet considered the time opportune to state their terms of peace. Those terms, if formulated now, would appear to the ruling caste in Germany like an invitation to them to commit suicide, which in fact it would be. They will therefore continue to fight as long as the subject peoples of the dual empires will allow them.

Nevertheless, Germany is crying for peace and the cry from the Lake of Constance to the Baltic Sea grows ever louder. But the German people cannot escape responsibility for the war. The Emperor was personally responsible, in the view of the allied diplomatists, because he deliberately sought the war, had been preparing for it a long time and, having had the opportunity to prevent it by a word, he precipitated it.

"But the bulk of the German people made themselves the Kaiser's accomplices," says Mr. Reinach, "because they believed in the success of the abominable undertaking to dominate and exploit the world. And for nearly two years, from the violation of Belgian soil to the wholesale assassination of the Lusitania, they applauded all the atrocities and greeted all the crimes as victories.

Kaiser Sees He Cannot Win.

"Now that, one after the other, all the German offensives have been stopped before reaching their object, now that the wind is turning and their stomachs cry out, now that millions of Germans have fallen or been mutilated in vain, Germany, without yet disavowing the war, is seeking its end. She does not offer peace. She merely perceives that she cannot win the conflict.

"If it were a question of beginning over again, as in July, 1914, the German Emperor himself would not begin. With conceited disregard, his own newspapers admit, he misjudged his enemies, considering the French people and Russia corrupt and Great Britain decadent. For a long time the war itself did not open his eyes. The French armies were to be winded in a few days; Russia would not be able to organize any more armies; England would only 'fight to the last Belgian.' Now he must realize that he has once more taken for reality the mirage of his moral desert.

Shuttle No Longer Works.

"Germany is besieged together with Austria. She is attacked on all fronts. Her famous shuttle between one front and the other no longer works. Seven divisions which she sent from France to Russia cannot come back without her eastern front breaking. Her reserves are becoming exhausted. The blockade is becoming tighter. Germany would like a truce. But there will be no truce.

"Peace for the Germany of July, 1914, means only the cessation, the suspension, of the war she unchained in July, 1914. Peace for our allies and for us is quite different. It means the Germanic empires placed forever in the impossibility of renewing the conflict which they have now lost.

"The two Germanic empires, that of the Hapsburgs as well as the Hohenzollerns, together with that of the Turks, are concerned; for before the criminal law in all countries and all ages no distinction ever has been made between the principal and the accomplice and both are equally charged with atrocities and horrors, the Emperor-King of Vienna and the Emperor-King of Berlin, he who struck the blow and he who ordered it. Neither human nor divine law can distinguish between the two.

Empires Alike.

"For the entente between peoples who wish to live independent and free, the Holy Alliance of nations, has been concluded against both empires, and the treaty which the governments signed at London on September 4, to which Italy adhered, is not a 'scrap of paper' but a veritable engagement of honor. Unity of action is not alone the unity of front, but exists also in the unity of chancelleries."

Among other things, Mr. Reinach holds, the Eastern question must be settled for all time as the Eastern question has been the basis of, or has influenced, all the great questions of western Europe. Then limits must be set to both the Central Empires, with such regulations and such guarantees that it will be impossible for them ever to renew the terrible years of the present war. It would be foolishness to admit for one extenuating circumstances from which the other might profit. It would be none the less foolish not to consider in advance how the one may be stopped from carrying out the design it already entertains of taking out on its accomplice the impairments it will have suffered from its conquerors.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Story of a Castaway

By CLARISSA MACKIE

It was a morning of early spring in New York harbor. On the shores of the two rivers that flow east and west of Manhattan Island and the great bay south of it yachts were being overhauled, their engines oiled, their sails repaired, their furniture uncovered. Indeed, everything was being done to prepare them for commission.

From the dock of a yacht club in the East river a party was pulled in a dinghy to a trim auxiliary craft anchored a short distance out in the river. It had already been prepared for a lengthy trip. They were Dr. and Mrs Mortimer and their daughter, Evelyn, a girl of eighteen. Frederic Doerr, engaged to Evelyn, went out with the others to the yacht, but after going down the companionway, ostensibly to inspect the cabin, but really to bid each other a fond goodby, the young couple returned to the deck, and Doerr was pulled ashore. There he lingered while the anchor of the yacht was got up and began to steam down the river Then, with a last wave, which was returned by his young fiancee, he turned away.

Dr. Mortimer and his family were bent on a cruise in southern waters. It was late in the season for a land trip to the south, but not on the ocean, and it was their intention to visit Cuba, the Panama canal and other objects of interest, remaining ashore only a day or two at a time.

They had reached a point off the coast of Florida and were steaming along at midnight in a fog when there came a crash. Those in their berths below arose, dressed hastily and went on deck. Down in the hold the water was coming through a hole. Dr. Mortimer examined it and, believing that the yacht would surely sink, went on deck again and told his wife and daughter that they had better prepare for such a result. Mrs. Mortimer preferred to die aboard the yacht rather than commit herself to the black waters, but Evelyn, remembering her lover and that it was her duty to try to live for him, suffered her father to get together articles for a raft, and when he had bound them together and lashed her to it he launched her upon the deep.

This was unfortunate. The water did not gain in the yacht as rapidly as had been expected, and when dawn came and the fog cleared away there was a steamer on the port bow not a mile away. Assistance was immediately afforded, and the pumps were manned. Before the day ended the yacht was in condition to pursue its journey and arrived safely at a Cuban port.

* * * * * * *

The sun shone down on the stretch of white beach on the fringe of palms bending in the soft south wind.

Blake Worthing at the wheel of his motorboat idled in these pleasant Florida waters, wondering if it was time to return to his cottage on the beach and waiting for his mother's signal that luncheon was ready.

Something strange came bobbing over the waters toward him. In the distance it looked like a gray island. Later it resolved into various articles of a ship with a human being lashed upon it.

As soon as Blake made this discovery he turned the motorboat about and met the approaching raft.

When he had made it fast to his own craft he gently touched the sea soaked bundle of humanity and discovered it to be a girl—a girl so pale and lifeless that he believed her to be dead.

His mother met him at the little pier and took the bundle from his arms. She was a tall, majestic woman, strong and vigorous and young.

"Where did you find her, Blake?" asked Mrs. Worthing.

Blake told her in a few words.

"I'm going over to Barnacle after the doctor—do the best you can for her, mother," said Blake, as he changed his wet clothing and hurried off up the beach.

Mrs. Worthing put the castaway into her little spare room under the cottage roof, and with the help of Mandy, the maid, she endeavored to bring consciousness to the girl.

But in vain. It was not until after the physician had arrived and worked over her for another hour that at last the girl opened a pair of forgetmenot blue eyes and smiled faintly at the anxious face bent above her. Then she went to sleep.

She did not awake until morning, and Mrs. Worthing discovered that while she remembered many things about the dreadful wreck of a vessel bound for South America, she could not piece together her past life or identify herself completely.

"My name," she said slowly, "is Evelyn Ames—my father is Dr. Ames—and we were taking a vacation—father—oh, my poor father!" Then she broke down and cried because she could only guess her father's fate. She could not even remember where she had lived, and although Mrs. Worthing and her son labored patiently to brighten the dulled memory their efforts were in vain.

"Please don't bother about me. I cannot remember," she would cry wearily.

Mrs. Worthing was not ill pleased at this. She had always longed for a daughter, and now she proposed to adopt Evelyn Ames for her own. Blake, who had fallen in love with the beautiful castaway, smiled secretly and thought that if he had his way the stranger would be his mother's daughter, but she would also be his wife.

And in the meantime the Worthings could find no trace of the nameless vessel on which Evelyn had sailed for Rio Janeiro. There had been no vessels lost, and investigation showed that there was no physician by the name of Ames who might be the father of Evelyn. They advertised and wrote letters, and in the end they were no wiser than before.

Then one fair morning, while the sun shone on the summer seas and the wind murmured among the palms, Blake Worthing told Evelyn of his love. Blushingly she gave her heart and hand into his tender keeping. Mrs. Worthing, delighted at the outcome, gathered them both to her heart.

It was when the engagement had been two weeks old that a blow came to Blake Worthing. He was preparing to go to Barnacle, where the offices of his fruit industry were situated, when he heard a sharp scream from the front verandah.

He dashed downstairs and found Evelyn gazing, pale and wide eyed, at the ocean.

"Dearest, what is the matter?" he asked.

She shuddered and hid her face in her hands.

"Oh, Blake, I have remembered!"

"Remembered? That is splendid, dear. Tell me."

"My name is Evelyn Ames Mortimer—my father is Dr. Ames Mortimer of New York—and, oh, Blake, how can I tell you?" Her slender shoulders shook with sobs.

"Tell me," he gently urged.

"I cannot marry you," she breathed.

"Why not?"

"I have remembered"—tragically.

"You have remembered what?"

"That I am already engaged."

"You are engaged? You were engaged when you sailed away? And you had forgotten that?"

She nodded listlessly.

"Then you do not love me," he said, rising and drawing his hands away from her grasp.

But she clung desperately to him.

"Ah, I do—I do love you, Blake! That is the misery of it all. I look back and think of Frederic Doerr, and I wonder how I could have dreamed of marrying him."

"Let me think it over, Evelyn," said Blake as he went away. All day while he dictated letters or interviewed customers Evelyn's pale, frightened face came between. Toward night he sent a telegram to Frederic Doerr's address in New York, and the second day afterward he met him at Barnacle station and took him to the cottage.

Frederic Doerr was a tall, thin, dark man with grave eyes and a preoccupied manner. He appeared to be extremely nervous when speaking of Evelyn, although he talked freely of her father, Dr. Mortimer, who had been saved.

He told Worthing how the Mortimers had sailed on a private yacht, and in the excitement following a collision, with visions of immediately sinking, Evelyn had been lashed to a raft and cast adrift.

The storm tossed yacht had reached a Cuban port, and Dr. Mortimer, although giving his daughter up for lost, had made every effort to find her. It was strange that the threads of inquiry instituted by the Worthings and Evelyn's father had never crossed.

"She has told us of her engagement to you," said Blake in his blunt way. "You will want to see her alone, I suppose."

"If you please. I think you and Mrs. Worthing had better be present," said Doerr nervously.

So when Blake told Evelyn that he had brought her fiance to see her and that her father was still living her joy in the latter news was dampened by the approaching interview with the man she had ceased to love.

"I must keep my promise to Frederic," she assured Mrs. Worthing, as they descended the stairs. "He said once that he did not care to live if I would not marry him."

Mrs. Worthing smiled wisely, but her arm tightened around the shrinking girl's waist as they entered the living room.

"Evelyn!" cried Doerr, starting forward with outstretched hands. "How delighted your father will be! I wired him at once of your safety."

He made no attempt to embrace her, and Evelyn was manifestly relieved.

The Worthings turned to leave, but Frederic Doerr put out a detaining hand.

"Please do not go," he said, with embarrassment. "There is something I must confess, and Evelyn will—her friends around her. I am ashamed to say that"—his voice dropped almost to a whisper—"I have been faithless to Evelyn Mortimer. One of the sweetest girls God ever created! Believing her to be dead, I permitted myself to be attracted by another woman—and, to make a long story short, I am married. I am no longer free."

Frederic Doerr did not expect the demonstration that followed his news. Mrs. Worthing clasped her hands and cried for joy, while Blake opened his arms to receive Evelyn Mortimer.

"Why, nobody seems to care very much," remarked Mr. Doerr, with a whimsical smile.

Then Mrs. Worthing took him outside and explained, and while they were gone Blake and Evelyn sealed their betrothal with a long kiss.

"You belong to me, sweetheart," whispered Blake. "The sea gave you to me—you drifted into my heart."

JAMAICA BANANA CROP RUINED.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Aug. 31.—Information collected from all parts of the island respecting the damage done by the hurricane of the 15th instant indicates that for all practical purposes this year's banana crop has been completely destroyed, and the crop for 1917 reduced by fifty per cent. Bananas represent fully sixty per cent. of the island exports.

LIQUID CATARRH REMEDIES USELESS, ONLY RELIEVE, NEVER CURE

They go direct to the stomach, have very little effect on the lining of the nose and throat, and entirely fail to cure. Only by cleansing the air passages, by relieving the inflammation and killing the germs is cure possible. No combination of antiseptics is so successful as Catarrhozone. In breathing it you send the richest pine balsams right to the seat of the disease. Irritating phlegm is cleared out, hoarseness, coughing and hacking are cured. For a permanent cure for Catarrh, nothing equals Catarrhozone, get it to-day, but beware of dangerous substitutes meant to deceive you for genuine Catarrhozone. All dealers sell Catarrhozone, large size containing two months treatment, costs $1.00; small size 50c; sample size 25c.

CADORNA HAS SHOT BOLTED AND BARRED DOOR ON THE ENEMY

Broke Up Mighty Invading Army Before It Could Reach Plains.

LONDON, Aug. 31.— Lord Northcliffe sends the following to the London Times from the Trentino front:

"The kaiser has sown his dragon's teeth well. All through the beautiful provinces of Venetia are soldiers drilling, soldiers marching, infantry. Alpine cavalry, motor transports, ammunition columns, big guns, and field guns. Women who look as though they had walked out of Titian's pictures are gathering the third harvest. Other men and boys—thousands of them on this part of the front alone—are making and repairing the wonderful roads that lead to victory.

Front Like the Somme.

"Climbing by war new routes to 3,000 feet we came upon a front not unlike that of the Somme, with the difference that the ground was covered by a vast amount of rock and stone, even in the woods where the hostile armies lie facing each other.

"Here the Italians recently repulsed 300,00 Austrians equipped with twenty-six batteries of 12-inch guns. The fighting in this region presents, as it does on every front, its own particular difficulties. Here aeroplane observation is both difficult and dangerous owing to the presence of vast scattered rocks with little landing space.

"The trenches must here as in Cadore and on the Carso, be drilled by machinery and blasted. The Austrians are extremely well provided with pet rol-driven machine drills. With these they also excavate deep caverns for hiding the guns.

"What I may call the prisoner puzzle is accentuated by the fact that the prisoners recently taken here are of remarkably fine physique, unlike those I saw yesterday. They are mostly Austrians, Germans, Poles and Ruthenes.

Cadorna's Big Task.

"I will seek to convey an idea of the problem imposed upon his soldiers by General Cadorna when the great Austrian 12-inch guns suddenly began last May. Against the concentration of Austrian 12-inch guns and masses of infantry the Italians were for the moment powerless. Though holding well on both flanks, in the centre the Italians were overwhelmed and their bases of supplies disorganised. Could the foe be stopped before reaching the plain?

A Wonderful Feat.

"Mark that the problem resolved itself into one of time. A few hours might turn the scale. The full story of the rapid concentration of the Italforces, the organization of fresh bases of supply, including water, of which there was none on the Asiago plateau, and particularly the problem of the conversion of mountain mule tracks over night into splendid motor roads, cannot yet be told. When told it will form one of the most thrilling chapters of the war. It was road versus big guns and the roads won Baffled Austrians.

"In the face of the strengthening of the Italian counter pressure the Austrians hesitated. Pressing forward their heavy batteries with howitzers proved fatal to their plans. The completion of the roads enabled Cadorna to hold them and so baffle them until the Russian offensive prevented the Austrians from moving more their re-were losses, and relieved the pressure on the Italians.

Slamming the Door.

"The only door into Italy was slammed in the enemy's face. Now it is bolted and barred. I saw the bars yesterday. They are the work of an Italian commander who now holds the gate. He does not underestimate his enemies. He is a keen, hard, experienced soldier with a splendid staff. He has no illusions as to the effort required, but he knows the foes will be beaten.

"'We may knock the fragments off the Austrian mass here and there,' he said, 'but we must go on hammering until we and others smash the whole block of Hapsburg concrete to atoms.'"

FRESH AIR NEEDED.

The process of re-breathing air that has already been used, if long continued, leads to asphyxiation and death. Much of the so-called "delicacy," susceptibility to cold, langour, headache and nervous depression are due to the same cause. The secret of good ventilation is to renew the air in a room at least three times each hour, day and night, without creating a draught.

MUDDY, PIMPLY SKIN?

Many people with disfigured complexions never seem to think that they need an occasional cleansing inside as well as outside. Yet neglect of this internal cleanliness shows itself in spotty and sallow complexions, as well as in dreadful headaches and biliousness. It's because the liver becomes sluggish, and waste matter accumulates which Nature cannot remove without assistance. The best

WAR HELPS YUKON MINES.

Stimulates Copper Production—Hon. Dr. Roche's Long Trip.

Ottawa, Aug. 31.—Hon. J. W. Roche, Minister of the Interior, who has been absent from the capital on a visit to the Yukon, British Columbia, and the Peace River country, returned to the capital today. There is still a large production of gold, while the war has had a stimulating effect upon the production of copper. The crops in the Peace River district are good.

While there will be a much smaller wheat crop in the west than last year the high prices will help, and there will be but little distress. Although farm labour is plentiful, other labour is scarce.

CONVICTS SAVED TOWN

Fought Blaze in Virginia Village Then Reported at Prison.

The honour system for penal institutions underwent a good test at a fire at Occuquon, Va., when 80 prisoners from the District of Columbia workhouse there returned to the institution after being relased to fight the blaze which threatened to destroy the little Virginia town.

The men made no effort to take advantage of their liberty in order to escape. But for their efforts, according to Town Sergeant Beach, of Occuquon, the whole community would have been wiped out by the blaze.

PATRIOTISM

Patriotism, like Charity, should begin at home. The man who is willing at any time to protect his country against foreign foes should be willing AT ALL TIMES to protect his Family against such common foes as Poverty, Privation and Suffering.

A Life Insurance Company cannot take the place of a Husband.

BUT—

It can preserve the family from want.
It can lighten their load of care.
It can build a barrier against adversity.
It can strengthen the foundation of the home.
It can certify to a man's affectionate regard for his family.
It can place his widow beyond the need of carrying for support.
It can add to a man's years by freeing him from anxiety.
It can enhance the respect and esteem of the public and of his wife and children for him.

BRITISH AVIATORS ACTIVE IN EGYPT

With Thermometer at 120 in the Shade They Bomb and Scatter the Turks in Darfur

LONDON, Aug 28.—The Daily Chronicle prints the following dispatch from its correspondent at British General Headquarters in Egypt, sent July 18.

"The brilliant work of a flight of the Royal Flying Corps during the operations in Darfur will rank as one of the finest efforts of the British Army airmen in the war. The flight had some serious moments, when transport threatened to fail them, but energy, resource, and the determination to succeed triumphed over all troubles, and the achievements are worthy of the page they will receive in the history of military aviation.

"The airmen had to move south at short notice, travel by sea, rail, and desert track for 2,000 miles before they could reach the barren spot from which they were to operate, to face all the difficulties of flying under tropical conditions with an equipment not designed to meet such special circumstances and to fly in a country absolutely unknown to them and where maps were of little use.

"They were of infinite service to Colonel Kelly from a military point of view, and one may hazard a prophecy that their exploits in the air did not a little to make Ali Dinar's people realise the Sultan's game was up, for, though the natives were not astonished to see machines in the air, they were surprised beyond expression when men alighted from them. One who found speech was heard to say: 'The Government was always great, but now it is greater than ever.'

In Darfur the weather breaks about May 25 with unfailing regularity, so that when it was decided on March 29 that a flight of the Royal Flying Corps should be detached from the Egyptian expeditionary force to take part in the operations there was little time for preparation. On March 31 two officers left Sens for Port Sudan and Khartoum, and they were followed on April 7 by an advance party of a few officers and men with patrol oil, bombs, transport tent sheds, and absolutely essential stores, and on the 20th the main body commenced the days' journey to Rahad, the railroad station south of Khartoum. Transport difficulties proved greater than anticipated. Stores and machines had to be got forward to Gebel-el-Hilla and Abiad Wells, 300 miles west of the railway, and the track to Nahud, half way, was quite unreliable, and lorries were often stuck fast in the sand for days. The lorries had to take their own supplies of petrol and water, thus reducing the loads.

THERMOMETER IS 120 IN THE SHADE.

Intense heat caused aviation petrol tins to burst, and evaporation was so great that a consignment of seven cases supposed to hold fifty-six gallons contained only thirty-seven gallons. Plants with sharp, hard thorns grew on the tracks and punctured tires, and with the thermometer registered 120 degrees in the shade it was desparately hard work to get up stores to be ready for the commencement of aerial flights from Hilla by May 12. Most of the transport was done with camels—for at least 150 miles it was impossible to carry stores except in camel packs—and as the tents for machines each required twenty-eight camels to carry them the labour involved in transport may be imagined.

An officer traveling in advance had selected spots for landing places and had put down directional arrows of long strips of white cloth. These began to disappear, and the new robes of shiek's wives were evidence of the uses to which the pilfered material had been put. It was extremely difficult to find one's way in this country. In the mornings, when the camel transpoft trains were on the move, the airmen could pick up the exact line, but the camels were rested from 9 a.m. till 4 o'clock, and flying was dangerous after mid-day because of heavy storms. You get no warning of the approach of a "haboob".

Extraordinary exertions were made to push forward the stores. Major Groves controlled matters at the railhead, and every officer and man in the flight did more than a full share to see that everything needful was in properly-placed depots on the line of route.

EIGHT HOURS IN THE AIR

Much the longest flight in Africa stands to the credit of this flight of the Royal Flying Corps. On May 17 Colonel Kelly's force was approaching Bir Meleit, an oasis thirty-seven miles north of El Fasher, which was believed to be occupied by the enemy. It was important to know their strength, and also to ascertain whether there was water in the wells ther. At dawn an airman started from Hilla (116 miles away) to reconnoitre. On his first journey he could not find Meleit, and he returned to the aerodrome at Hilla for further information. At 9:45 a.m. he again set out, and was successful. In flying over the place he was fired at and a bullet hit the propeller. Bombs were dropped, and the airman came down low and opened machine gun fire on the enemy, 500 of whom bolted and left Meleit open to our troops. On his return journey the airman dropped a message to Colonel Kelly, telling him that there was water in the wells and that the enemy had fled. The airman reached Hilla at 2:15 p.m. having been flying for eight hours out of a period of nine hours, a feat which the Sirdar warmly praised in a speech of thanks to the Royal Fying Corps for their work.

O some succeeding days there were further reconnaissances. Care was taken to measure the aeroplanes to see that they were standing the strain of unusual weather conditions, and the result was satisfactory. On May 23, as Colonel Kelly was approaching El Fasher, Lieutenant J. C. Slessor flew over the long stretch of country between the aerodrome and Ali Dinar's capital, and arrived at the moment when the force had gained a victory over the Sultan's troops. Lieut. Slessor saw 2,000 enemy cavalry drawn up in reserve outside the town, and attacked them with bombs and machine-gun fire. The horsemen scattered in all directions and took no further part in the fighting. When he began bombing the cavalry the Lieut. saw a group surrounding a banner. He aimed a bomb at the party, and later information points to the Sultan having a narrow escape two of his servants and his own camel being killed by the bomb.

While attacking the cavalry Lieutenant Slessor received a bullet wound in the thigh, and he had to steer with his hand instead of his foot on his way back to Hilla, his difficulties being greatly increased by a storm, which broke suddenly. He brought the first news of the victory, and it was transmitted to the Sirdar from the aerodrome.

Got DIARRHOEA FROM DRINKING BAD WATER

Had To Give Up Work

Mr. H. M. Ryckman, Port Rowan, Ont., writes: "Last year I was out in Saskatchewan. The water was very bad and I was taken with diarrhoea. In a few days I was in such bad shape I had to stop work. I got a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and had only taken a few doses when it was stopped, and I was soon able to go back to work again."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past seventy years, and has had such great success in curing all bowel complaints that many firms have undertaken to provide a substitute for it, even going so far as to use a similar name.

Do not be led into taking a substitute for "Dr. Fowler's" but insist on getting what you ask for.

"Dr. Fowler's" is safe and sure, but by taking some of these rank substitutes you may endanger your life.

EMIGRATION AFTER WAR.

Doubts Expressed That it Will Reach Huge Proportions.

London, Aug. 30.— The Manchester Guardian, discussing Sir Rider Haggard's mission, reminds its readers that just before Haggard's arrival in Australia the acting Premier expressly warned his colleagues against passing rash resolutions in connection therewith. "It is questionable whether the war will indeed lead to emigration on the scale often expected of it," declares the Guardian. Those connected responsibly with the emigration problem hesitate to become enthusiastic upon this subject. A prominent Canadian emigration official invariably demands to be told who is going to pay the passages for the thousands of ex-soldiers whom it is proposed to ship out, and adds that the Royal Colonial Institute might profitably have considered that point at the very first.

"Where can I get some real New England cooking?" "I would recommend that restaurant on the corner," replied the native Bostonian. "It is run by a Syrian, but he does his best."

WERE AFRAID OF CONSCRIPTION

ROCHESTER, Sept. 1.—Many Canadians who have lived on this side of the international boundary line for a varying number of years, and who have been accustomed to attending the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto each year, either as spectators or exhibitors, or who have wanted to go into Canada for other purposes, have been worried by the ogre of conscription, or rather what was called "a half-brother to conscription," which, translated, meant the real thing. These former residents of Canada who desired to go across either for business or pleasure were sore distressed. In fact, if the story were true, it left any former Canadian who is not now a naturalized citizen of the U. S. A., in a rather sorry predicament, if for any reason at all he visited Canada. For it meant that he could be seized the moment he got off American soil and mustered into the Canadian forces for overseas service. Even naturalized citizens of this country who were born in Canada might have found unpleasant situations confronting them until they could prove that they had foreswom allegiance to the English flag.

However, the ogre has vanished through a telegram received here Saturday by a man who has been an exhibitor at the Toronto exposition for some years and who intended to take his dogs over this year. This man, now a naturalized American citizen, was born in Canada. He knew he could not be drafted into the Canadian army, but as his time in Toronto was limited, he did not desire to be tangled up in any unpleasantness, so he wrote to Fred Jacobi, a director of the exposition, who wired him the following assurances:

"There is absolutely no truth in the stories of conscription in Canada. No such step is contemplated on September 1st or any other date. Canadians are enlisting faster than they can be taken overseas under volunteer methods, and no compulsory system will be introduced.'

About fifty Rochester individuals and firms exhibit in the Toronto exposition.

SEEK FREEDOM OF ESCAPED CONVICT

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Although there is an officer on the way from Indiana to take Edward J. Lee to the prison at Michigan City, Ind., a vigorous effort is being made by the National Committee on Prisons, and persons interested in Lee's case to prevent him from being compelled to serve the remaining two years of a sentence for forgery, E. S. Roach, secretary of the National Committee on Prisons, last night telegraphed the Governor of Indiana requesting the exercise of executive clemency. Lee served twelve years and then escaped.

Lee's experience has won for him sympathy from New York police authorities. He was betrayed by another one-time convict, whom he had befriended, and although Lee was leading an honest life apparently endeavoring to live down the past, there was nothing for the New York department to do but to hold him. Extradition in such a case is not necessary, and unless the Governor of Indiana intervenes Lee will go back to prison.

It was with regret that police officials announced they could do nothing for Lee, who was sentenced for from two to fourteen years, the length to be determined by his conduct. From what can be learned the man's conduct was exemplary, yet no move appears to have been made to liberate him. Losing hope at the end of twelve years, when he expected by reason of his behaviour to be set free soon after he had served two years, Lee in desperation devised means of escape, and made his way to New York. That was several months ago, and although his health was impaired by prison life and hardships, he has been able since, by sheer hard work, to earn an honest living.

Inspector Cray told a reporter last night that he had no doubt that should the Governor of Indiana decide to parole or pardon Lee, employment can be found for him here. "Lee might have delayed action by denying his identity," said the inspector, "but he didn't. Of course, all we can do is to hold him and turn him over to the Indiana authorities when their representative arrives. We have absolutely nothing against him."

NEW RECRUITING SCHEME.

Definite Announcement Will be Made From Ottawa Soon.

OTTAWA, Aug. 31.—In the course of a few days the Government will make a definite announcement in regard to recruiting throughout the Dominion under the new recruiting scheme, under which all people would be classified with the idea of ascertaining their fitness either for military services or for duties at home. Certain recommendations drafted by the officials of the Militia Department are now being considered by the Cabinet. Meanwhile an effort will be made to get the best men possible in each district to act as directors of recruiting, so that the new plan can be worked out with the least possible friction.

A flustered woman was seen running wildly about in the corridors of a large railway station. "What are you looking for, madam?" questioned an officer. "I—I am looking for the entrance to the outside!" responded the woman nervously.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I see the paid circulation of the Examiner is over 5,000 copies daily. Now that means likely fully 16,000 readers; in fact everybody appears to read the paper or papers. There are men it appears who have succeeded in gathering together hundreds of thousands of dollars in this short life, perhaps reached the million mark here, but the Bible asks the question (Matt. 6:26). For what is a man profitted if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange, etc. Now in the Homiletic Review there was a case reported of a dying judge who, the day before his departure to be with Christ, said to his pastor, 'Do you know enough about law to understand what is meant by joint tenancy.' 'No, was the reply. I know nothing about law, but I know a little about grace, and that satisfies me.' 'Well,' said the judge, 'if you and I were joint tenants on a farm I could not say to you, that is your hill of corn and this is mine, that is your blade of grass and this is mine, but we would share and share alike in everything on the place. I have just been lying here and thinking with unspeakable joy that Jesus Christ has nothing apart from me; that everything He has is mine and we will share and share alike through all eternity.' See Romans, 8th to 17th, if children then heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, etc. Read 1st Corinthians, 12th chap. and mark verse 27, what is the successful man? And remember every member of our body obeys our head. My hands move by the orders from above, the head. So does every other member, whether for good or bad. 1st Cor. 11th: 3, the head of every man is Christ, etc. And as our members obey our head, if so we should obey our Great Head if joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Oh, the prospect that awaits us—

In the Christians' home in glory
There remains a land of rest,
There my Saviour's gone before me
To fulfill my soul's request.

Pain and sickness ne'er shall enter,
Grief nor woe my lot shall share,
But in that celestial centre
I a crown of life shall share.

He is fitting up my mansion
Which eternally shall stand,
For my stay shall not be transient
In that holy, happy land.

Chorus—
There is rest for the weary.
There is rest for the weary.
There is rest for the weary,
There is rest for you.

Perhaps some of your numerous readers can supply the remaining verses.

To remove scorch spots, wet the scorched place thoroughly with water, then apply to it a thick paste made of ordinary lump starch mixed with just enough water to make it stick well. Use plenty of the paste, and let it dry on the scorched material. Then, when dry, be sure to rinse all the starch out with water, for if you fail to do this the iron may scorch the material again in the same place. If one application does not remove all the scorch, repeat the operation.

HERMANNSTADT EVACUATED BY THE AUSTRIANS

Russians On Offensive On Front Of Eighteen Miles

Berlin Admits Czar's Troops Are Making Progress Toward Halitz---Roumanians in Their Successful Invasion of Transylvania Take 1800 Prisoners and 100 Cars of War Material---Allies in Greece Have Decided to Put an End to Pro-German Intrigues at Athens.

TROOPS WILL MARCH INTO ATHENS

BERLIN, Sept. 2.—Advancing on an eighteen-mile front against the important railway town of Halitz, the Russians have occupied the village of Horozanka, ten miles north-west of Halitz, in a resumption of their Galacian offensive.

More Territory Is Taken By Roumanians

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BUCHAREST, Sept. 2.—Roumanian troops have occupied the Transylvanian towns of Kronstad, Teepanul, Czicznesog, Tzicserada, Mouta and Pedegimva, it was officially announced to-day. Roumanian artillery is now dominating the Orsovo-Temesvar railway, the principal supply route for the Austrians, near the Serbian frontier. The Roumanians have taken 1,800 prisoners, including 15 officers, and have captured 100 cars of war material at the depot at Cesimesh.

Allied Forces To Garrison Athens

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Anglo-French troops are believed to have been landed at Piraeus, with the intention of marching five miles northeast to Athens and garrisoning the Greek capital. No report of an actual landing has thus far been received, but London newspapers declared the arrival of transports. Undoubtedly this means that the Allies had decided to put an end to pro-German intrigues at Athens. The Foreign Office to-day still lacked confirmation of the reports of King Constantine's abdication, and was without further advices regarding the progress of the revolution in Northern Greece.

The landing of Allied troops at Piraeus indicates the determination of the Allies to settle all problems in Greece quickly before marching northward against the Germans and Bulgarians. With Italy attacking in Albania, the Allies are now exerting pressure on the Central Powers on six fronts. Since Roumania entered the war the Bulgarians have made no attempt to push further southward into Greece, contenting themselves with fortifying the lines already seized.

Revolution In Greece Spreading Rapidly

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Sept. 2.—The revolution in Greece is spreading rapidly throughout Thessaly and Epirus, said a wireless despatch to-day.

Martial law has been proclaimed at Athens and Piraeus, the despatch said. The condition of King Constantine, who is ill, is reported serious.

Germans In Africa In Full Retreat

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Sept. 2.—General Smuts, Commander-in-Chief of the British forces in German East Africa, reports under date of August 30 that the German forces in that colony are in full retreat. He announced the occupation of Mrogoro, the seat of the German Provisional Government, and said he believed the German military headquarters and Provisional Government had retired into the mountains.

The text of the statement regarding operations in German East Africa as given out by the British Official Press Bureau says:

"General Smuts reports that on August 30 the enemy forces were in full retreat east and west of the Uluguru mountains and south of Mrogoro. He believed the German military headquarters and Provisional Government had retired into the mountains.

"We occupied Mrogoro on the 26th. This is a most important town, and was formerly the seat of the Provisional Government."

Hermannstadt Is Evacuated By Austrians

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BERLIN, Sept. 2.—Hermannstadt, the former capital of Transylvania, and the towns of Sepsiszent and Gyorergy have been evacuated by the Austrians before the Roumanian advance, it was officially announced in a statement received from Vienna to-day.

RAILWAY STRIKE WILL NOT TAKE PLACE ON MONDAY

President Wilson Informed This Morning That Eight Hour Law Will Pass by an Overwhelming Majority.

DANGER IS AVERTED

Special to The Examiner:

LONG BRANCH, N.J., Sept. 2. — President Wilson was informed in telegrams from the Democratic Senators to-day that the eight-hour law for railway workers will pass the Senate by an overwhelming majority before night, averting the threatened railway strike.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2.—A message to President Wilson to-day from Henry Ford announced that his plant would shut down, Monday, in the event a strike is called by the Railway Brotherhoods.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—In view of the promising outlook regarding the railway strike, most of the big railroads have raised the embargo on perishable and other goods, and are accepting freight as usual to-day.

Advance on the Western Front

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Sept. 2.—The French and British forces have advanced on the Western front while the Russians are pursuing the Austrians and Germans in the East.

PTE. R. M. LINDSEY OF MOUNTED RIFLES KILLED IN ACTION

Another Peterboro Boy Has Given His Life for the Empire---Killed on August 17th Says Official Telgram---Barriefield Battalions on a Long Route March---Pte W. A. McAuliffe Wounded---To-day's General Military News.

Another Peterborough boy has made the supreme sacrifice at the front. This morning Mrs. Jas. Crouter, 499 Stewart street, received a telegram from the authorities at Ottawa stating that her son, No. 111589 Pte. Richard Manson Lindsey, Canadian Mounted Rifles, is officially reported killed in action on August 17th. Pte. Lindsey enlisted in Peterborough in January, 1915 with B squadron, 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles, and after training here and at Ottawa and Barriefield, went overseas with the 8th a year ago. He had been in the trenches for a considerable time. Pte. Lindsey was Canadian born, only twenty years of age and unmarried. Two of his brothers are also overseas, Gunner Dan Lindsey with the 4th Battery, C.F.A., and Pte. Ephriam Lindsey, who went over with the 39th Battalion, was wounded some time ago and is now convalescing in England. Mrs. Crouter's husband, Pte. aJs. Crouter, is with the Canadian Army Service Corps. She will have the sympathy of the community in her bereavement.

Word has been received that Pte. Leo Phelan, of Peterborough, who left Canada with the 80th Battalion, is one of a party of returning Canadian soldiers who sailed from England on the Metagama on August 25th.

The Kingston Whig says:

The three battalions of Barriefield Camp are on a route march to Parrot's Bay, about thirteen miles west of the city, and a few miles west of Collins Bay on the lake front. The start from the camp was made at 7.30 o'clock this (Friday) morning, with every man dressed in marching order, in shirt sleeves, complete with sweater coats rolled and carried on the back of the belt. The tents were not taken, but each man carried in his haversack the following: Washing kit, knife, fork, spoon, one pair of socks, one plate and mug. On the transports were the service dress jacket, one blanket and one ground sheet. Each battalion had three wagons, which carried the men's blankets, pioneer tools, twelve picks, and twenty-four shovels per battalion. No field kitchens were taken.

The School of Cookery and two cooks and one helper per company, proceeded to the bivouac ground on Thursday evening, and prepared the dinners so as to be ready for the troops on their arrival in bivouac. The battalion camp kettles were taken out with this party which left at 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The battalion had received orders to parade as strong as possible and every available man was to go on the march. The only exceptions were those attending the Infantry School, Signalling School and Bayonet Fighting and Physical Training School.

The troops will return to Barriefield Camp some time on Saturday.

NOT FIRST BIVOUAC.

Three years ago the 14th and 15th (Belleville) Regiments bivouaced at Parrot's Bay. The scheme then was to have these two regiments, after getting off the train at Ernestown, march towards Barriefield, and meet at some point with the 57th, which had been taken by train to Harrowsmith. It proved a most enjoyable outing and was the cause of the excellent spot being again chosen for the manoeuvres of the three battalions at Barriefield now.

The three battalions now bivouaced there will not carry out any such extensive scheme as the fifteen mile march. There will be outposts put out to-night, however, which will add to the instructional value of the scheme.

Mrs. McAuliffe of Emily township, received official word from Ottawa on Thursday that her stepson, Pte. William McAuliffe of the 46th Battalion, C.E.F., had been admitted in No. 13 General Hospital, Boulogne, on August 23 suffering from a gunshot wound in the back. Pte. McAuliffe, who enlisted in Regina, Sask., is a son of the late Leonard McAuliffe of Enniemore and has a brother, Pte. Joseph McAuliffe overseas with the 93rd Peterborough battalion.

Pte. Wm. Aldred of Nogie's Creek, who went overseas recently is reported dangerously ill with pneumatic at the Connaught Hospital, Aldershot. A message to this effect was received to-day.

Major H. A. Frost, well known in Peterborough, was a visitor at the armouries to-day. Major Frost went overseas as a chaplain with the 1st Canadian Division and has been with the troops in Egypt, at the Dardanelles and in France. While in the Mediterranean with one of the Canadian hospital units, he was closely associated with Dr. E. V. Frederick of Peterborough, who was on duty at Lemnos Island. Major Frost has seen many phases of the great world war, especially at Gallipoli.

Letter From England.

The following letter has been received by Mr. and Mrs. George Johnston, of Chemong Indian Village, from their son, Pte. Amos Johnston, who enlisted in the 93rd Battalion, and is now in England. Pte. Johnston, with about twenty-five other Indians from Chemong, heard the call of duty and will soon be in France fighting for his King and country.

England, August 11th, 1916.

Dear Parents,— Just a few lines to let you know that I am well, hoping you are all the same. We are all feeling good at present. I have seen many strange things here. Aeroplanes are flying around here like crows around Chemong. We came through tunnels a mile long and in all the country we came through we never saw a stone pile or a stone fence. It's all hedges and you seldom see a fence. There are a lot of small villages in this neighbourhood and we take a walk every Saturday afternoon. The time here is six hours different. When we are having our dinner you will be having your breakfast. We took a walk last Sunday and went into an old church sixteen hundred

REGULAR MEETING OF THE CITY COUNCIL

BOMBARDIER GERALD M. STENTON, 52nd Battery, C.F.A. and attached as signaller to headquarters staff, Petawawa camp. Bombardier Stenton before enlisting was chief clerk for the Dominion Express Co. His home is at 610 Reid street.

Bolivar Street Deputation Wanted to Know Why the Oil Tank Stopped at "Howard" Avenue—Water Service Promised the Northern Part of East City before September 16th.

THE BOQUE SIDING

Last evening a deputation from Bolivar Street waited upon the City Council and requested that steps be adopted to aleviate the dust nuisance, which was characterized by one member of the deputation as "terrible."

Mr. R. Morrison, as spokesman for the deputation, wanted to know why a part of Bolivar Street had been oiled and not the entire street to the boundary.

Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the Board of Works, in reply, said that no provision had been made to oil the entire street, and that the Board in order to meet the needs of the residents in various parts of the city for a more extended system of street oiling, had exceeded the appropriation for that particular work.

Subsequent discussion disclosed the fact that Bolivar Street had been oiled as far as Fire Chief Howard's residence. The point where the oil terminated was designated as "Howard" avenue by Ald. Stratton, much to the amusement of the Aldermen and the handful of spectators that hung over the benches in the gallery.

Ald. Duncan was of the opinion that an excessive amount of oil was distributed in East City, while Ald. Langford thought that the system might be made more general in scope. It was explained to the deputation that it was impossible to oil all the streets in the city, as the appropriation was insufficient for that purpose.

Ald. Edgar broke into the discussion with an appeal for Sherbrooke Street. This street, Ald. Edgar contended, had been deliberately neglected. This statement precipitated a heated discussion between Ald. Edgar and Ald. McIntyre. The latter reiterated his former statement, namely, that it was impossible to oil all the streets, and that first consideration must be given to the streets where the traffic was the heaviest. Mayor Duffus threw oil on the troubled waters by promising the deputation that something would be done to provide relief, even if it was only in the form of a watering cart or a "rain check," as suggested by Ald. Stratton.

Action Deferred.

Another report will have to be received from City Engineer Parsons and another Council meeting called before there is any hope of Mr. James Bogue getting a siding into his property on the north side of Dublin Street. Some of the Aldermen have an idea that a siding can be placed into this property without the necessity of crossing the street. The siding is primarily to serve the Peterborough Planing Mills, which at present is manufacturing shell boxes at the rate of six cars a week, and owing to lack of shipping facilities at or near the mill, are compelled to haul the product to the station, which is some considerable distance away. This means a corresponding delay in getting the shell boxes to the Allies, and, as Ald. Stratton was inclined to argue, tended to prolong the war. If the Bogue siding was constructed the company would have only a short haul of a part of a city block. A few nights ago a committee of the whole Council met and sanctioned the construction of this siding, and assured Mr. Bogue that he would receive permission to go ahead and have the siding put in. Last night the Council decided to ask the City Engineer to report upon the feasibility of constructing the siding without the necessity of crossing any of the city's streets. Then a meeting will be called some time next week to further consider the matter.

Parnell Street Sewer.

Ald. Dobbin wanted to know why the city was proceeding with the construction of a sewer on Parnell Street, especially as labour was so scarce and the city was endeavouring to follow out a policy of retrenchment. "Save the work for the boys who are at the front," suggested Ald. Dobbin.

Ald. Edgar reminded Ald. Dobbin that the sewer was very necessary. "I think," said Ald. Edgar, "that Ald. Dobbin should realize that the South End of the city is entitled to some of the privileges that have been enjoyed by Ald. Dobbin for a number of years." The discussion encompassed the outfall sewer and finally petered

MAN IN THE STREET IS REPRESENTED BY SIR EDWARD CARSON

A Formidable and Organized Opposition Has Gathered Around Him Says T. P. O'Conner in Discussing British Political Situation

FIGHTING IN COUPLES

(Copyright, 1916, Central News, By T. P. O'Connor.)

LONDON, Sept. 2.—All kinds of domestic difficulties are coming up in Parliament—whether we shall have a General Election; whether we shall have universal manhood suffrage; whether we shall have woman suffrage; and above all, of course, whether Iceland shall get Home Rule immediately.

There has gathered around Sir Edward Carson a formidable and an organized Opposition. Sir Edward Carson represents the man in the street to-day—irritable, violently anti-German violently anxious for stronger measures. Two committee, as everybody knows, have been formed for the purpose of forcing the hands of the Government to more vigorous action, committees the character and purpose of which will be gathered from the nickname of "Ginger" which has been applied to them both. Thus it is, that while there was no opposition in the early days of the Coalition, for all the men of influence and of previous experience as Ministers had been gathered into the Ministry, nowadays, however, there are several ex-Ministers who give weight and respectability to the new Opposition. A formidable fighter has recently entered the ranks in the person of Mr. Winston Churchill.

FIGHTING IN COUPLES.

Mr. Churchill was one of the men of dynamic enerby who longed for an opportunity of giving their services to the country, and it was generally supposed that he would have been appointed to the Ministry of Munitions when Mr. Lloyd George abandoned it for the War Office; but he was not appointed, and he has now given more than one indication that he and Sir Edward Carson are fighting in couples against the Government.

The Irish Party have 60 members who take part in every divison. They returned to Ireland to look after affairs there whene the settlement broke down. But they will be here in full numbers in the October sittings. On them probably will depend the fate of the Ministry, and Ministries generally are ready to do anything for those who command their existence. I should not, therefore, be surprised if in the October sittings we see a

PARENTS AND CHILDREN.

The Ontario Municipal Association tackled the question of the liability or obligation of children to support indigent parents, but did not pursue the subject to a conclusion. There may be doubts of the legal obligation but there are none of the moral liability of children towards parents. Only in rare cases do we ever find parents turning the cold shoulder to their children. We know from infinite instances of proof that a mother never loses interest in her children. Her love and solicitude follow them even to the foot of the scaffold. No filial unworthiness—no crime even will estrange the heart of a mother from her child.

It is a common saying with men and women of right moral build, that they cannot pay back the debt they owe to their parents, except by similar devotion to children of their own; and, happily, the world is fuller of more filial gratitude to parents than the world generally knows. Who of us does not have in his or her knowledge, cases of parents who have passed the stage of self-help, being the objects of the tenderest care and solicitude on the part of children—cases that make one think better of humanity. Per contra, who does not know of cases where children pay with black ingratitude and callous neglect, if not with overt unkindness, the care of the parents that sacrificed much to rear them, as children, in comfort? Cases like the latter incline one to wish for a law that would compel children to cherish and care for, and support, or help support, the parents that have cherished and comforted them, and perhaps thereby hastened the physical inability that makes such parents indigent.

The law recognizes the liability of parents to care for their children, to support their families, and, if invoked, compels such recognition. Why not then legislatively establish the obligation of children to take care of their parents, who in default of such care, are thrown upon the tender mercies of the state as represented by a municipality? Cases are not unknown where parents of children, in comfortable and even easy, or luxurious circumstances, are allowed to be maintained in charitable institutions, at the expense of the public upon whom the blood relationship imposes obligation. The question of the obligations of children to parents is one that will bear the consideration of all who have hearts to feel, and souls to sympathise. Even the sentiment of simple justice demands that the black ingratitude of neglect and unkindness to parents should be punished beneficently by compelling the ungrateful, by law, to give the support and care and comfort which their denatured hearts otherwise deny.

GIVE THE CHILDREN MUSIC.

September not only ushers in a new school year, but it also marks the re-opening of the music studios. School attendance is compulsory up to the age of fourteen, and it requires only the diligent and strict supervision of the truant officer, whoever he is, to equip practically every child with a common school education. In these times it should be unnecessary to discuss the importance of what might be termed a fair education, and to that end parents should strive, even with real sacrifice on their part, to afford their children a helpful start in life's race. More than ever should they be trained for the future citizenship which their older brothers are now safeguarding and preserving with their lives.

But parents have a secondary duty, and a most important one too. It concerns the musical training of their children. Their moral, social and physical development need not be considered here. The importance of these duties is self evident. The parents who neglect them are beyond an appeal for the consideration of the musical possibilities of their children. But to the others, fortunately an increasingly larger presentation of home builders, a few casual or cursory remarks may be of some value.

In the first place, the person utterly devoid of musical appreciation falls within the class of natural freaks. There may be such individuals, but Barnum overlooked them and there has been none discovered since his day. In the other direction the geniuses are exceedingly rare. Besides they may be trusted to give complete expression to their exceptional gifts. But the vast intermediate multitude comprises all those who accept the scale of potential musical talent from mediocrity to splendid capability.

Secondly, it is not imperative that every child should pursue a study of music to the extent or with the object of winning a degree. Merely the aim to cultivate and fertilize the latent gift may be regarded as sufficient, for the reason that it is none easily attained. And this should be attempted in early youth that it may be more fully developed in maturer years if the desire and ability assert themselves to that extent.

Hence it is important that parents who intend to provide music lessons for their children should realize that the lessons should be begun at an early age. It often happens that a boy or girl awakens, in the ordinary course of events, to an inward musical urge. They are then probably working. Should they be even a few years less advanced, the fact that younger children excel them, or that their school studies or industrial occupation hampers encouraging progress, this condition frequently proves such a disappointment and hindrance that their ambitions are short lived. It is therefore essential that music lessons should begin at an early and impressionable age.

The choice of a teacher usually presents a problem, and a guide to its solution is often accepted in the past results of this or that instructor. And in this respect it might be added that the labourer is worthy of his hire. The teacher of more than ordinary ability may be expected to charge a higher fee than those who have but limited talent for successful teaching. From an acquaintance with the most prominent teachers of music in Peterborough it may be said that parents may depend upon any of them for wise counsel in the outlining of a child's studies, and especially for deciding the age at which they should begin. As you consult the doctor regarding physical welfare, so should a successful professor of music be consulted before a child's musical training is undertaken.

The ground work counts in future enterprises. This is particularly true of vocal studies. But that branch of music is not singled out here. A general knowledge of music such as is taught under present day methods with instrumental lessons following closely, is most desirable for an average musical education. The future will take care of itself, and revealed talent further developed.

Returning to the fact that the gift of music is practically universal, reasons other than generalities might be given in support of this plea in behalf of children. You hear men sing church hymns or parlour songs who give evidence of an ability that was never fostered. Their tone and their attempts at harmony are frequently surprisingly good, but their knowledge of music is generally confined to the hymns they sing or to familiar songs. Musical comedy may often be risque, but the majority of the audience that crowds the house are attracted by the music. Yet, the Cherniavsky's for example, with their attractive programme of popular standard music draw only a corporal's guard. It may be safely said that among the musical comedy audience there are many hearers who would appreciate and enjoy the standard music had their taste been more finely tempered by an early training and development.

Reference might be made to the knowledge of music displayed by Old Countrymen by no means limiting them to Britons. But the culture of the old land has been developed with its age. When Canadian parents, and in this case Peterborough parents, realize that ours is but a young country, that our ideals are too engrossed and wrapped up with material things, or at any rate have been in the past, then will they begin to show a wider and more sympathetic interest in music, at the same time recognizing the happiness it will add as an accompaniment of life's work, a source of happiness beyond the purchase of gold.

A PLEA FOR INVESTIGATION OF PRICES

Why Shouldn't John Jones Have a Right to Protest and Find Out Why Just the Same as Business Man Can do Before Railway Commission?

In fairness to those who sell as well as to those who buy, there should be some sort of tribunal in Canada to control the prices of necessities. When the word "cost of" is used it is not in the belief that anyone should be vested with arbitrary powers by means of which prices could be lowered or advanced at the will of an appointed man or board. "Investigation" is a better word for expressing the idea.

To-day there is a coast to coast epidemic of advanced prices in the staple products, which after a man has a roof over his head, he must be able to possess before he can call his place of abode a home. In almost every city of Canada some foodstuff is being advanced in price. The necessities generally affected are:

MEAT.
BREAD.
MILK.
COAL.
FLOUR.
SUGAR.
FARM PRODUCE.

All the other little things—salt and pepper and flavoring extracts, and canned goods and pickles—are quietly slipping into the theatre where the well known drawl, "High Cost of Living," has its presentation, under the wing of the big fellows. Double prices and fifty per cent. increases are numerous if one examines and compares prices as quoted each month in the official Labor Gazette. One cent here and 25 cents there soon eat into the salary envelope, and while the public feels the pinch, the best it can do is to write to the daily papers, because there is no official representative for the public when advances are announced. One man may "holler" but the protest is informal and unorganized. "The public" is a name and little more.

The Advertiser does not know that there has been an unjust price-advancing. It has been slow to condemn in many cases because such investigating as a newspaper may do has often proven that prices were advanced because it was absolutely necessary. But this newspaper does know that the public has nothing but the word of the butcher or baker or the milkman or the coal dealer to accept in explanation of high prices. Not that these lines of business should be singled out; every line of "necessity" business, wholesale as well as retail, should be prepared to give the public the privilege of ascertaining that it is not being "soaked." All advances in the prices of foodstuffs should be controlled by public opinion. Let a competent commission be appointed and it would save much for the people, and at the same time put the official stamp of honest business upon the transactions of dealers. The businessman can go to the Railway Commission and protest against increases in freight tariffs—why can't John Jones and his wife have a chance to protest against the increase in the price of milk or beef or telephones or newspapers? And why should not those who sell be given the opportunity of proving the necessity for and the honesty of their transactions toward higher prices?—London Advertiser.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

"What a beautifully clean, tidy and attractive house you have!"

These word from a visitor fall like music upon the ears of the hostess and make her heart swell with excusable pride.

In like manner, when a visitor praises the neatness and beauty of our city, we citizens hear the commendation with pride; and we are impressed anew with the wisdom and duty of making our city as neat, clean and beautiful as possible.

The Imperial dictionary defines a weed as "a plant such as grows where it is not wanted, and is either of no use to man or injurious to crops."

We don't however, need a dictionary definition to help us recognize a weed. In childhood and manhood and age we have seen weeds plentifully in evidence in city and country, where they have done, and do, enough crop destruction every year to represent enough to feed man and beast several months of the year. Every year on some farms, weeds destroy or prevent enough crop value to pay the interest on the mortgage, which owes its existence largely to the carelessness that permits weeds to flourish, and the companion vice of unthrift, the twin parents of financial embarassment.

Weeds are a mystery of nature. Why they are permitted to grow we don't know unless it be to stimulate man's ingenuity and develop his industry to compass their destruction. Weeds are outlaws, subject to no vegetative law and defiant of the chief conditions under which beneficial vegetation fails. They defy dry weather and barren soils and develop a lusty crop independently of treatment and conditions that are fatal to useful plant life.

For instance, the city levelled the boulevards with good soil. Good grass seed—such as flourished where water conditions were provided and formed a good turf—was sown. The dry weather came and the grass seed didn't sprout, because there was no water. But the weed seeds that lurked in the apparently clean dressing soil sprouted and grew and flourished like a green bay tree, till in long stretches where water was not applied weeds grew one or two feet in height, in spite of drouth and objurgations.

In hundreds of gardens we see useful vegetation brown, parched, withered and dead, while amongst this ruin weeds a yard high stand dressed in living green, triumphant and defiant.

In many places on the new city boulevards where water was used we see long stretches of splendid turf grown from the same quality of seed that did not grow on unwatered stretches, but where the weeds are strong and lusty.

In the interests of the city beautiful all these stretches of weed lustiness should be replaced with velvetty grass.

The residents of Charlotte street, from Park to the boundary, are proud of their street boulevards, which match the neatness of their open lawns. But in many places, where no water has been used, there is a wilderness of weeds, that would have been replaced by grass if water had been applied and a little cutting practised.

These destroy the continuity of beauty and neatness, making the tidy portions like a jewel in a swine's snout.

The city with commendable enterprise levelled the boulevards on the paved streets and put them down to seed, which did not grow because of lack of watering, which the city might have easily provided.

With the use of oil on the streets, several watering tanks are idle. If one or more of these were put to use the trick could be easily turned.

Drive the wagon close to the curb, with the sprinkler on the boulevard side opened, and a tank of water would cover a considerable distance. If the boulevards were thus gone over two or three times at once, at intervals of a few days the seed would be well watered and grow.

Then with a little weed cutting we should give these boulevards, beauty for ashes, the garment of grass for slovenliness.

If something like this is not done all the work and expense, will have been worse than waste if the boulevards are allowed to be smothered with weeds. We expect weeds on a ragged earth boulevard, but a well-levelled, trimly curbed boulevard thus disfigured is a special abomination.

Not only on new boulevards, but on many streets, the city allows rank weeds to grow. The western extension of Hunter street is a fine weed preserve. At its opening from Walton street two thrifty burdock trees the size of a small hay cock, guard the entrance like lions conchant at the gate of a palace.

"What a beautiful city of clean, tidy streets you have!" could be made the remark extorted from visitors, if only a little intelligent interest were shown and only a little intelligent work done.

Tramp May Come to Peterboro

Lindsay, September 2.—A tramp in appearance and his own word of mouth, called on a certain lady in the east ward and requested that she put him up a lunch, as he was penniless, and was tramping his way to Orillia. This kind-hearted lady complied and sent him away with a large and dainty lunch.

He did not however go in the direction of Orillia, but struck off on King street.

Judge her surprise later on in the evening when in conversation with another resident of the same ward she learned that the same tramp had called and asked for grub, stating that he was on his way to Peterborough by the tie route. He was again accommodated, and it is believed that he secured several pocket lunches at several houses. Whether he is laying in a stock for the winter or is contemplating a trip to the west by the hog car express is not known, but at any rate he is well supplied.

1,000,000 FRANCS FOUND IN TRENCH

PARIS, September 2.—Bonds to the value of 1,000,000 francs were discovered in a cash box found in a trench on the Somme by Private Battala, the son of a Bordeaux contractor, and four comrades.

Their captain found among the papers a will bequeating $20,000 to whoever recovered the cash box. More than $4,000 therefore was given to each man.

ALL SCANDINAVIA FILLED WITH SPIES

English Correspondent Says There Are Swarms of German Agents in Norway and Sweden—Watch for British Fleet

WATERFRONT AT GOTHENBURG AND OTHER PLACES THE SCENE OF THEIR CHIEF ACTIVITIES.

When England really wakes up to the gravity of the war she will begin to consider the problem of spies in neutral lands. During more than a year I have been in the most important centres of all three Scandinavian States, and the question repeatedly put to me by Scandinavians friendly to England is:

"You watch German spies in England; do you watch them here?" Naturally, I could not answer, for British counter measures are not made public. But I do know from personal observation, from the records of police expulsions, and from revelations in the "Entente-friendly" press, that Germany has in Scandinavia and in Holland a most elaborate system of getting information; that no money is spared, and that Germany employs not mere vulgar adventurers who would sell secrets readily to either side, but smart men of her own nationality, often army or naval officers.

The Stockholm Aftonblad is at present publishing revelations on "the net work of spies about our land." This pro-German organ confines itself to alleged Russian or Entente espionage at Sweden's expense, and ignores the revelations of other organs (in particular the Danish press) about the supposed 7,000 German subjects, who specialise in espionage against the Entente. As most of these spies seem to interest themselves in naval matters, and might get vital information about British fleet movements it is to be hoped that our government keeps its eye on them.

It is a noteworthy fact that the large German floating population in this city, in Copenhagen and in Christiania, contains hundreds of healthy men of under 40 who ought to be fighting in Germany's armies, but who are let live abroad on the excuse that they are "trade experts." Germany has plenty of trade experts of over 40 years. The explanation usually given is that these are disguished officers. A few hours before I wrote this I saw in the lounge cafe of the Hotel Haglund no fewer than seven well dressed, smart looking Germans, none of whom were over 35. The strongly anti-German Berlingske Tidende of Copenhagen lately declared that scores of German officers in mufti crossed the Danish frontier at Kolding, and added that from their appearance they were naval officers.

The Germans who live at Stockholm Hernosand and other Baltic ports are supposed to watch the Russian fleet, but the majority who are settled in the summer resorts on the Skagerrak, north of here, and also in Christiania and Esbjerg, on the west Danish coast have only one function—that is to watch British movements. Of all the Swedish coasts that between Gothenburg and Christiania is the most important, and it is precisely there that one finds the most youthful Germans. Some of them admitted that they were officers, but explained that they were recruiting their health during the summer season. However, an Englishman of this city who was along the coast in March, when there is no season, says that he then met wandering Germans everywhere.

This Englishman, who is a solid Gothenburg merchant, assures us that the chief German methods are paying fishermen and sailors from the merchant vessels for news of what they had seen in the North Sea, and themselves parading as fishermen and merchant sailors. He told me of the case of a certain "Heckert," probably an assumed name, who was expelled from Fredrickstad, south of Christiania, because of his zeal to buy nets from fishermen he transgressed Norway's own defense rules. "Heckert" for months lived in Gothenburg under another assumed name. He was well supplied with money, and spent his whole time in down town eating houses, hobnobbing—he spoke Swedish—with the incoming sailors. The Norwegian authorities had no doubt that he was a spy, as well educated men do not choose such company without political causes. Another young clean shaven German, who was well-supplied with money, startled the bathing visitors at Marstrand, which is on an island and at the narrowest part of the Kattegat. He hired a powerful motor boat, made long trips to the north east, and was generally believed to be on the search for British submarines on the way south.

In the summer of 1915, when British submarines first showed activity in the Baltic, both Copenhagen and Elsinore, to the north, were centres of supposed German naval espionage. In August the Danish police expelled no less than a dozen. The Danish authorities then laid down the rule not to interfere with spies unless they either made their business too plain or spied against Denmark, and it was known for weeks that there was a German "Spionage-Zentral" in Copenhagen which collected news from all Scandinavian countries. Some of the expelled Germans were traced to Esbjerg and as that port is a vital item in Danish defense in case of a German raid on Jutland they were sent across the frontier. One of them later turned up in Christiania.

The Gothenburg authorities just now watch closely all foreigners, compelling them to register, and in particular keep their eyes on persons who frequent the Gota River port region. As however Gothenburg—once Sweden's most English town—is in an unfriendly mood toward England (the result of the post censorship and of steamer stoppages) no special zeal is shown against the Germans. All Englishmen are regarded with suspicion. The enormous steamer traffic of Gothenburg with North Sea ports, makes the city particularly favorable to German espionage; and this and the fact that the city is full [illegible] clines one to the thought that little happens in the North Sea without being at once communicated to Berlin.

Unquestionably it seems desirable to take measures against neutral fishing vessels and tramp steamers harboring German naval officers. The owners of these vessels in most cases are innocent of knowledge of what they are doing. But at present there is a serious dearth of seamen and any volunteer (German or other) who offers his services is sure to be given a job aboard.

Press on Roumania's Entrance Into War

"The Russian Drive."

Philadelphia Record: "The most important result of the Russian drive against the whole German and Austrian line is that Roumania has joined the Allies. The strategic value of the new member of the Entente is very considerable."

"Most Momentous Event."

Philadelphia Press: "Roumania's declaration of war against Austria involving a prompt responsive challenge from Berlin, is the most momentous event the changing fortunes of the stupendous conflict have produced since the intervention of Italy in May, 1915."

"Beginning of the End."

Philadelphia Inquirer: "By entering the war Roumania has expressed a conviction that the victory of the Entente Allies is assured and the example it has set is one that Greece may be expected soon to follow. It looks as though the conflict has come to the beginning of the end."

"The Central Powers."

Bridgeport Post: "It is needless to say that even the small force which Roumania can supply to the Entente cause will be an added strain of marked effect upon the already harassed Central Powers, particularly Austria and Bulgaria."

"An Open Road."

Hartford Courant: "Roumania's participation in the war gives to Russia an open road to the Bulgarian northern border and the opportunity to co-operate with the forces of the Allies in Greece in the Balkan campaign."

"The Entente Allies."

New York Globe: "Roumania's declaration of war thus expresses in a concrete way a belief arrived at after the most careful consideration of the facts, that the Entente Allies are deemed certain to win."

"Roumania's Reward."

New York World: "Roumania enters the war when the balance of advantage against risk is too tempting to resist. Her contingent reward is great, but her help is worth the price. The world's markets record at once that her act brings the great struggle nearer its end."

HOW FISH OVERCOME DAM OBSTACLES

Do you know that fish actually jump 100-foot dams in their migrations each spring to the headwaters of the rivers in which they spawn? asks Popular Science Monthly.

Of course this 100-foot jump is not made all in one leap, but in a number of short leaps of eight inches each. The feat is made possible by what is called a fish ladder.

This ladder must be placed in all river dams in which fish such as salmon swim up to the river heads to spawn. Fish will not spawn anywhere except in the still headwaters, and it is necessary that they arrive there with the least exertion. The government makes it obligatory that at least one fish ladder be built into every dam across such rivers.

Fish ladders, while they may be built of wood, stone or cocrete, according to the material of which the dam is constructed, are all alike in principle and consist of a trough which begins at water level on the low side of the dam and then extends upward in several zigzag steps to a point below the water level on the upside of the stream. Water enters at the top end and flows down and out at the bottom. Its flow, however, is not free like that in a sluice, but is retarded by means of cross-pieces at regular intervals in the trough.

CHINESE FOUND DEAD.

Simcoe, Sept. 1.—A Chinese, who has been identified as Julian Lee Duck of Port Dover, who took lodgings at the Battersby House here on Sunday night, slept in the mornings, and kept irregular hours, was found dead in his bed in his room last night by Proprietor Brady. There are some marks upon his chest and neck, as if inflicted by some blunt instrument. He was lying with his face downward and with his head over the edge of the bed. It is believed that he was demented.

Coroner Richardson found that the man had been dead 48 hours. An inquest will be opened.

NEW SPECIAL SERVICE BY G.N.W. TELEGRAPH CO.

A new special service, called the Day Letter, has just been announced by the Great North Western Telegraph Co. It is similar in some respects to the Night Letter, with which everyone is more or less familiar. The Day Letter will be handled by all G.N.W. and Western Union offices in Canada and the United States, some twenty-five thousand in number. The Day Letter is a deferred service subordinate to the immediate transmission and delivery of regular telegrams. Delivery of Day Letters will be made on the day of their date during regular office hours, providing sufficient time remains for transmission and delivery.

The Day Letter rate for fifty words or less is one and one-half times the rate on a ten word Day message. For example, if it costs fifty cents to send between two certain cities a regular telegram of ten words, a Day Letter of fifty words may be sent between the same places for seventy-five cents. The sender, however, is not obliged to limit his Day Letter to fifty words. Each additional ten words cost one-fifth the initial fifty word rate.

An interesting feature of the Day Letter is the use of message blanks printed in blue ink to quickly distinguish them from the "blacks" (Day Messages) and "reds" (Night Letters). Day Letters will be known and spoken of in the G.N.W. offices as "blues."

It would seem that the Day Letter is a service that will become extremely popular as it is both useful and inexpensive. The Day Letter is the fifth special form of reduced rate service to be inaugurated by the Great North Western Telegraph Co.

ALLEGED BURGLARS ARRESTED

Chatham, September 1.—As a sequel to the burglarious raid on Dresden during the early hours of yesterday morning, when several stores were robbed, the Chatham police late today arested Orville Ellis and John Smith, charging them with the burglary of the stores in Dresden, Glencoe and Chatham. Much of the stolen property, including two revolvers and some ammunition, it is said, was found on Smith.

A cheap floor stain is made by dissolving permanganate of potash in warm water, giving one or two coats to the boards, and when thoroughly dry polishing with beeswax and turpentine.

GOOD INDICATIONS OF POTATO YIELD IN THE NORTHWEST REPORTED

Universal Use of the Root, Discovered 400 Years Ago Makes Heavy Demand Upon The "Spud"—Eastern Ontario is Said to Have a Light Crop, While the West Will Even Up—By Chas. E. Compton.

There is no doubt in the minds of all householders that this year's potato crops will be, to a large extent, a governing factor of household expenses this winter. People are anxiously asking, "what is the price of bread, milk, beef, cheese, sugar and potatoes going to be this winter?"

That Virginian ground fruit—if the potato may be termed such, although adopted by the Emerald Isle many centuries ago—has become the daily, yes, tri-daily article of diet of millions. When Sir Walter Raleigh, in or about the year 1559, first presented the "spuds" to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, no one had any conception of the world-feeding qualities of the root.

But to-day one can hardly find a family in this country or in the United States where potatoes are not eaten every day. Bread has been referred to as "The Staff of Life," but from statements of many householders one is led to believe that potatoes are used so extensively, or nearly so, as bread.

Winter Prices.

The question then arises: "What price will potatoes command this winter?" Some localities in Ontario suffered very heavy rains in the spring and drought later, when a little moisture would have been beneficial. Consequently, farmers and gardeners experienced not a little difficulty in getting enough land planted.

While gloomy reports of a poor yield come from Eastern Ontario, I can most truthfully say that between Toronto and Vancouver I saw, along the lines of the Canadian Northern Railway, everywhere indications of a splendid potato crop. With the exception of the Parry Sound and Muskoka districts, the vines were very prolific. Even in wild and rugged Northern Ontario, where small plots between the hills and stumps are cultivated, I saw splendid potato patches that would even charm Pat's heart.

Wayside Gardens.

In New Ontario I noticed that several sectionmen had utilized the property of the C.N.R. and were growing their winter's supply by the railway tracks. A very good idea it seemed to me, and quite magnanimous of the railway company.

But, upon the prairies, I saw vines that I dont' think Ontario or the east ever produced. In Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta one might judge that there will be a good crop, if the frost does not come too early.

If you have ever seen the Ontario farmer worrying himself to death trying to catch, kill or poison his "millions" of potato bugs, then you can fully realize what it means to live in a country where the potato bug has never been, and I can tell you the potato growers there have no immediate desire to have those kind of visitors. They don't exist in the western provinces.

Wherever I could discern a potato patch in British Columbia, I could see that it was first class.

In such beautiful black, fertile land billions of bushels of potatoes could be grown on the prairies, but the great trouble lies in the fact that too many of the farmers only grow enough for themselves and families.

Don't Grow Enough.

A gentleman, who lived in Edmonton, told me that while the crop of "spuds" around that city was invariably bood the prevailing price was around $1.00.

Of course, one cannot judge from the present prices what the fall prices will be, and last winter's hold-up may not be regarded as a criterion either.

The Toronto Globe quotes new potatoes at $1.75 per bushel. The Calgary Herald reported recently new potatoes at $1.50 per bushel, and a recent issue of the New York World contained an ad—6 lbs. for 12c. Ottawa growers have been asking $1.80 per bushel. Cheaper in New York than in Canada, eh?

Mr. J. H. Grisdale, director of the Dominion Experiment Farm at Ottawa, was recently asked for his opinion upon the prospects for the coming crop. He stated that in the vicinity of Ottawa the crop would be rather light (judging from observations). The "farm" had about four acres under cultivation. From reports available, he understood there would be an average crop in the west.

THE JOURNEY HOME

BY CANADIAN OVERSEAS

There is a great basin on the south coast that harbours a fleet of ships almost unknown before the war. They are white painted, and round their sides is a broad, green stripe, broken at intervals with the Red Cross of mercy.

When war first burst forth there were few of these ships, but now there are many. This fleet of mercy carries its freight over the seas, away from the roar of the guns and the stutter of the metraillaise, to the quiet of the long, white hospital wards in England. All part of a wonderful organization.

Tommy Atkins climbs from the firing step and hops over the parapet, and under the wire in front. He hears a sound like an underground train coming through the tunnel before it reaches the station and there there is a crash that defies all description. Some one must have filled the tunnel up and the train has charged it. That is what Tommy Atkins thinks. In a twinkling of an eye he has changed his state.

Presently he is gathered in and ticketed, and taken to a place where they add cryptic initials to the red ticket tied to the second button of his tunic. It now reads "G. S. Head; S. Thigh and I. Arm." In the words of the doctor: Atkins has been collecting things. From now on he loses all power of volition. He is handled by many people like a very delicate and fragile piece of merchandise. He is loaded on to motor-ambulances, and taken off again, and put on to trains that hurry him to the sea, as if he were perishable goods. There he is put on board a hospital ship, and for twelve hours at least he has comparative peace.

These ships, originally, were never meant to carry anyone more sick than the usual cross-channel tripper, but brains and ingenuity have transformed them into floating hospitals, with the comforts and the conveniences of an infirmary on land. The saloon has been converted into a long ward and all the floor space is taken up by the swinging cots. In every corner of the boat there are beds.

The R.A.M.C. man looks upon all cases as "cots" and "sitters." The "sitters" are those who can sit and manage for themselves. The "cots" are the men who have to be fed and tended by the orderlies. One of these ships loaded 300 of both kinds in 35 minutes, recently.

"System" is the watchword of the medical service, and the very men who toil up the gang-ways with the stretchers have absorbed this system until they are machine-like in their movements.

Cot cases require a great deal more care than the others, and for this reason there are lights fitted in these ships to take the stretchers up and down from the lower decks. Doors have been widened to give free passage and the whole construction of the vessel has been altered.

From France to England it is a matter of 12 hours at the most. To some it is 12 hours of torture, but others are able to enjoy the trip over straining their eyes to catch the cliffs of Dover, or the rolling Sussex Downs. When the ship reaches the quay there is another invasion of stretcher-bearers and in an hour every wounded man is moved. They are carried down the long canvas-roofed gangways to the wharf and taken through a vast shed to a series of bays. These bays are built like a scene on a theatre stage, with no roof of their own and only three sides. On the one side there is a table piled with forms, and there a doctor sits through all the day, filling in forms and recording all that has to be recorded when a man comes in wounded. The bays are each filled with one class; in one there are cases where the wound is in the head; in another wounds in the limbs, and so on. Sometimes at the end of the bays there are a number of men in grey uniforms, silent and dazed, but receiving the same attention as the others. These are German prisoners who have been wounded and captured. They are sent to special hospitals, and for the most part are quiet and grateful for all that is done for them.

When the men are put in the bays, particulars are taken as to their native towns, etc., and whenever it is possible the wounded man is sent to the town from which he came, so that he can be near his friends and relations. When this is not possible he is sent to a hospital near his town. Sometimes there are many men of one regiment who have been enlisted in one county. When the number is sufficiently large to warrant it, the hospital train makes a special trip and takes them all the way home.

Opposite the sick bays are the trains. These, like the hospital ships, are permanent. They are never broken up and they have their crews and medical staff, their cooks and nurses. Each train is composed of five coaches and lettered from A. to E. In each coach there are twenty cots, and these are numbered from 1 to 100. Each coach is a ward on wheels, and the whole train is a complete hospital ready for any emergency, in the way of operations or dressings. There is even a bath.

The medical officer in charge of the train has his quarters in the front coach, not one of the ward coaches, but an additional one. He has a small sitting room, a bed room and a lavatory, all in suite. He has a telephone and can ring up the orderlies' room and the pharmacy car. There is an office, where a typewriter is busy.

In the orderlies' quarters there is a canary singing in a vain endeavour to down the roar of the train. There is a gramaphone and a library, as well. Some of these men have lived in these quarters for nearly two years and have travelled thousands of miles to all parts of Britain. There are two cooks on each train and meat rations can be cooked for 200 men on the gas fires.

There are linen cupboards and every time a train completes a journey the sheets and bedding are all changed. In cases where there is infection they are all sprayed with formalis and afterwards treated to a thorough disinfecting.

They are queer passengers, these men from the battlefields of France, and they are all very brave. You may stand in between long lines of cots occupied by men in the agonies of broken limbs and gasping wounds, but you hardly ever hear a murmur of pain. There is the inevitable cigarette stuck in the corner of the most tightly bandaged mouth, and each man holds tight to a calico bag. In this bag are all his most treasured belongings, and even if he had both arms bandaged and useless he would carry it in his teeth, rather than leave it in the custody of the storeman at the base.

All along the way shouts and cheers of children come in through the open door and windows, for these trains do not go fast.

All along the line, too, are notices, often crudely painted and mis-spelt, but none the less illustrative of the feelings of those who stay at home and see these long, white trains pass day after day.

"Well done, brave lads!" says a placard on the back fence of a small cottage, and as the train passes it the men read it, and wave a cheery acknowledgement to those who stand beside it. "Welcome to Blighty" says another.

At Waterloo station the last shift is made and the men are carried to the waiting ambulances and motor cars which take them to the hospitals. The marvellous organization has finished with them, but it goes on just the same, handling all these precious lives, bringing them back to be made sound again. It is a great and wonderful system.

MURDERED ITALIAN CAME TO MONTREAL ON MURDER BENT

MONTREAL, Sept. 2.— A grim reminder of a horrible tragedy was placed before the court yesterday when Frank Palasino was charged with the ghoulish crime of robbing Guiseppe D'Amore, who lay dead on the floor of a St. Lawrence Boulevard saloon with a bullet in his heart. Palasino, who faced Judge St. Cyr in arraignment, pleaded not guilty to theft and was remanded for hearing.

The deliberate murder by Pezza is now believed to be the culmination of bad blood between the gang and the dead man, who has a reputation in Philadelphia, from which city he came to Montreal. Italians who know the man and who are in touch with the underworld, but who will not be quoted, admit that the dead man had a shady reputation, and it was on this reputation that the men who brought him here depended for success in a venture which required more than the usual amount of nerve to carry out.

Came Here to Murder.

As to the "gang," it is common talk that for more than five years the gun-carrying element of the Italian colony have been slowly getting nearer to protection in their law-defying attitude with regard to carrying dangerous weapons, with a certain amount of "eye-shutting" by the authorities.

In this connection, D'Amore entered the annals of Montreal crime when he was hired, it is stated, to put some one out of the way —that some one making himself too active against the red light district habitues, male and female. He was in this city nearly two months when he fell out with the rest of the gang. Loaded with information which was given to him by his crime followers, he proved an obstacle in the way of the gang, which is admitted to be of large proportions and he is now believed to have been lured to his death on the principle that "Dead men tell no tales."

"If the man arrested for this murder will open his mouth and tell the truth there will follow one of the most sensational murder trials ever heard in a Montreal court house," declared an Italian who was a visitor at the court yesterday morning.

Twenty-five Italians were counted in the corridor at one time yesterday. The attention of the police was called to the large number, and a suggestion that they "whisk" the crowd for concealed weapons was not acted upon.

"We Shall Do Well to Take Von Hindenburg Seriously"

LONDON, Sept. 1.—The Times commenting on the promotion of Field Marshal von Hindenburg says:

"In her deadly peril Germany is unlikely to have chosen the new Chief merely to placate public feeling. We shall do well to take von Hindenburg seriously and to recognise that, though conditions are against him, he is no weakling. The glimpses we have had of him suggest a man with big and simple ideas, which often make for success in war."

TRUCK KILLS BABY; MOTHER IS DYING

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—After a runaway and driverless automobile truck had crushed her baby carriage holding her infant daughter, five months old, Mrs. George Berman, of No. 15 Fort Washington avenue, frantically held to the carriage handle and was dragged thirty feet. She suffered injuries which may be fatal. The baby was killed.

Mrs. Berman, about twenty-four years old, was wheeling her infant down the hill in Riverside Drive at 158th street when a truck of the United Electric Light and Power Company, which had been left without an attendant half a back up the hill began to move.

It was almost upon Mrs. Berman before she saw it. Then she tried to dodge it, but it zig-zagged across the pavement and seemd to pursue her. It hit the carriage and ground it beneath the front wheels. As the truck continued it dragged the smashed carriage and Mrs. Berman, who held to it, until it hit a retaining wall, when it stopped.

Mrs. Berman and her baby were sent to Washington Heights Hospital. There it was said the baby had been killed almost instantly and that in addition to cuts and bruises Mrs. Berman had suffered serious internal injuries. Her husband is a dress manufacturer.

Edward Highton, of No. 4,887 Arthur avenue, the Bronx, driver of the truck, who had left it to deliver electric light bulbs in an apartment house, was arrested on a charge of homicide.

Nearly Every Girl Can Make Herself Pretty and Attractive

SOME WHOLESOME TRUTHS EVERY GIRL SHOULD THINK ABOUT.

Probably you know just such a girl.

Perhaps she is sixteen — good to look at, and pretty— quite interesting because she reflects the graces and charm that give promise of happiness to herself and others. But she is not strong. The colour in her cheeks, once so rosy, has faded away —her eyes are listless—the buoyancy of spirit and vigour she once possessed are sadly lacking. Parents, friends, this girl needs Ferrozone— needs it that her blood may be renewed — needs it to restore the nerve force that growth, study and the development of her fresh youth have exhausted. This girl will become a queen with Ferrozone — which will restore her colour—bring back her old-time energy— give brightness to her eyes and vivacity to her spirits. In Ferrozone every girl finds strength—then she can do things. In Ferrozone there is endurance —that drives away morning tiredness and langour. For the girl or woman that wants to be happy, healthy, winning — who values rosy cheeks, laughing eyes and abundant good spirits, nothing can compare with Ferrozone. 50c. per box, or six for $2.50. Get it to-day from any dealer in medicine, or by mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

Roumanian Land Speculators Bought In Transylvania

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Miss Lovina Steward Smith, an American woman, who has written of Hungary and who lived many years in Budapest before her return to this country last month, said yesterday that while the mountain ranges between Roumania and the Hungarian plain stand in row after row, they are intersected by valleys and by numerous rivers, so that it is less of a military problem to effect a passage through them than it has been for the Russians to cross the Carpathians.

"The plan of defence against Roumania for the present war was mapped out by General Von Mackensen after the invasion of Serbia, and the passes at the Roumanian border are well fortified," she said. "But the armies which Austria-Hungary will be able to put into the field here will be of poorer calibre than those which have faced Russia and Italy so far in the war. The Hungarians, who are the best soldiers in Austria-Hungary, have suffered more heavily during the war than the soldiers of any nation except Serbia. In addition to the large proportion killed and wounded in battle, thousands were frozen in the Carpathian campaigns.

"All over Hungary you see men on crutches, both their feet having been lost. The new troops who will fight against Roumania will have to be largely the recruits from Bosnia, Herzegovina, and from other elements of the Slav population, which were not thoroughly sifted for recruits earlier in the war because they were not the highest type of fighting men.

"Shortly before I left Budapest there was a great agitation in the newspapers against the sale of Transylvania estates. Roumanian speculators were active in buying tracts of land, and these transactions convinced the public in Hungary more than anything else did, that Roumania would eventually be in the war. This has been dreaded more than the threat of intervention by Italy was, for Transylvania is one of the best provinces of Hungary."

COLORS PRESENTED TO WATERLOO BATT.

London, Ont., Sept. 1.—The presentation of colors to the 111th (South Waterloo) Battalion took place yesterday afternoon. The ceremony was made the occasion for the visit of more than a thousand citizens of Galt and vicinity, headed by Mayor A. M. Edwards. The colors were the gift of the Waterloo Chapter Daughters of the Empire, and the presentation was made by the Regent, Mrs. R. A. Briscoe. Right Rev. Bishop Williams consecrated the colors. Following the ceremony, Lt.-Col. J. D. Clarke, O. C., and the officers and men of the battalion, held a reception for friends from the home country.

CHARGED MAN ATE THE EVIDENCE

HERMAN HOROWITZ, SEIZED IN EXTORTION CASE, SAID TO HAVE SWALLOWED A MARKED $10 BILL.

New York, August 31.—Herman Horowits, who said he was a delegate of the Painters' Union, was arresetd by Detective Giery on a charge of extortion. On the way to the station it is alleged that Horowits seized a marked ten dollar bill which Giery was holding as evidence, and swallowed it.

The complaint against Horowitz, who is 38 years old and lives at Number 2116 Atlanboss painter, of No. 187 East 101st street. It is charged that Horowitz threatened to call a strike of painters employed by Wall at No. 215 West Ninety-eighth street, unless Wall paid him $10. Wall, it is said, told him to come back later on.

Wall complained to the police and Detective Giery was assigned to the case. It is alleged that Wall gave a marked $10 bill to Horowits. Afterward, it is said, Giery arrested Horowitz, and says that he found the bill in Horowitz's pocket.

As the detective and the prisoner were on the way to the police station it is alleged Horowitz engaged Giery in a fight and wrested the bill from the detective's hand. This done Horowitz swallowed the evidence while the detective struggled to save it. Then to jail without further trouble.

THE JOB COST TEN TIMES TOO MUCH

OTTAWA, Sept. 1.—Commissioner of Works Macallum has discovered a case where civic construction work, done under conditions hitherto permitted to exist, cost ten times more than it should cost. Out of $136 spent only $26 was for productive labor, the balance being for overhead expenses.

This is a case where the overhead cost of a piece of civic work being done by two day laborers, consisted of the wages of one foreman, one watchman, one yardman, one bricklayer, one waterboy, and one teamster.

The commissioner is remedying this condition. There have been many cases where foremen have been drawing pay to superintend the work of only two laborers. In future, no foreman is to have fewer than six or eight laborers under him, according to instructions sent to all the foremen by the commissioner to-day.

If necessary, the small jobs are to be held over, but the commissioner proposes that in such small works one foreman shall have charge of several gangs.

Mr. Macallum is also making an improvement in the inspection system. It has been found that city inspectors, acting in good faith, have made reports based on statements made to them by mothers. In future, the inspectors are not to sign any reports until they have personal knowledge of the subject being reported on.

Frivolous Shows Draw Complaint of Smith-Dorrien

London, August 31.—General Sir H. L. Smith-Dorrien wrote in this morning's newspapers a protest against the tone of certain theatrical performances, "I am convinced," he said, "that our gallant sailors and soldiers themselves would be the first to admit that if they were given their choice they would prefer performances which while cheerful and inspiring, appealed to the best side of their patriotic natures and not exhibitions of scantily dressed girls and songs of a doubtful character. The whole nation's heart is at last set on winning this great war, and an important fact undoubtedly is the cleanliness of mind and nobility of purpose of our heroes on sea and land, and it seems entirely unnecessary and certainly wrong to put into their heads demoralising thoughts such as they must obtain from many performances now appearing on the stage."

The evening papers contain interviews with various managers of the houses where revues have been given, expressing agreement with General Smith-Dorrien. Oswald Stoll, the veteran vaudeville manager, said:

"Some time ago a new kind of theatrical director entered the field of amusement with a revue of the type to which such remarks as those of General Smith-Dorrien might apply, their vogue was very brief owing to the prompt and drastic, though unobtrusive action taken by the Lord Chamberlain. In this action I am sure he would admit that he had the support, sympathy and assistance of the managers. It may be that General Smith-Dorrien's remarks have reference to what happened during this period, and he will be glad to learn that the action of the Lord Chamberlain long since remedied the evil of which he now complains."

The Daily Chronicle says: "Women and middle aged and elderly men are now the mainstay of places of amusement at home and it is their business to see to it that these places shall not handicap these young men who are so generously sacrificing themselves in battle for the sake of their country. Everybody knows the kind of performance of which General Smith-Dorrien is thinking. It may not deserve his ultimate epithets, but it is disgusting, flippant, unconsidered and inconsiderate."

out. Ald. McIntyre assured the Council that only necessary work was being undertaken, and that more than one street in the South End of the city was badly in need of sewerage facilities. The outfall sewer will be completed and ready for operation in three or four weeks.

A Dry Belt.

The Utilities Commission will be reminded of the Council's wish to have the water service extended to the northern portion of East City for fire protection and other purposes. "We must get it in before September the sixteenth," admonished Ald. Stratton. The service has been long promised to Auburn, and the Council will make another effort to have the work done.

Additional Hydrants.

Two new hydrants will be placed in the West End of the city. One will be located at the corner of London and Donegal Streets and the other at the corner of Smith and Donegal Streets. Both will be connected with the new water main that is being laid in that section of the city. The hydrants cost the city at the rate of twenty-seven dollars a year each, which represents the revenue that is collected by the Utilities Commission. A report will be made as to the need of a hydrant at the corner of George and Princess Streets.

The Incinerator.

Ald. Saunders, as chairman of the Property Committee, reported that present conditions at the incinerator were very satisfactory. Mayor Duffus wanted to know if it were necessary to employ two men all the time. Ald. Saunders said that it required two men most of the time, and that one man had intimated that he would not stay unless he was provided with an assistant. Ald. Saunders was advised to take an occasional look around the plant and see how things were running.

Vote of Appreciation.

The Council expressed its appreciation of the action of Mr. James Kendry in supplying sufficient gravel to enable repairs to be made to the Douro Road from Smith Street north. Both Mr. Kendry and the city officials were commended for the success that had attended their efforts to improve this piece of road. A vote of appreciation was moved by Ald. Stratton, seconded by Ald. McIntyre, and unanimously endorsed by the Council.

MONDAY HOLIDAY HAS MANY OUTINGS

Monday is the last holiday of summer. If the weather man is in a felicitous mood there will likely be a numerous exodus of which the Toronto Exhibition will attract the usual large crowd.

The steamer Stoney Lake is running a special trip to Hobley Falls, leaving the George Street Wharf at 7.45 o'clock.

Lansdowne Lodge, S.O.E., are running an excursion to Harwood with the Geneva and Rainbow to handle its crowd.

Rev. Father Meagher is holding an excursion at Lakefield Exhibition grounds.

These are some of the prospective outings apart from the pleasures of Stoney Lake and Chemong, and the other lesser attractions that offer for the day's enjoyment.

GERMAN PLOTTER HAS ESCAPED

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 2. — Lieut. Robert Fay, the former German army officer, who was sentenced to eight years in the Federal prison here for conspiring against the United States in connection with a long series of bomb plots in New York, has escaped. He got away in company with William Knobloch, another prisoner, and both are still at liberty.

Lieut. Fay was one of the chief workers in the illegal German activities directed against munition exports from this country to the Entente Allies, which were unearthed when, on Oct. 24, 1915, secret service men with detectives from New York and New Jersey, swooped down upon Fay and his companions while they were experimenting with explosives in the Palisades, near Weehawken.

PTE. R. M. LINDSEY, Peterborough boy with Canadian Mounted Rifles, who is officially reported killed in action on August 17th.

Rev. Mr. Pogue Home Again

Rev. Robert Pogue of St. Paul's Church has returned from his vacation, and will occupy his pulpit at both services to-morrow.

A RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE

The City Council has placed on record its deep regret at the loss sustained by Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., in the death of his wife, who was a daughter of a former Chief Magistrate of this city. Mr. Moore himself has been actively identified with local municipal interests, and at the present time is a member of the Peterborough Utilities Commission, and the Peterborough City Trust.

A similar resolution was adopted at last night's meeting of the Council on behalf of Alderman Saunders, whose mother passed away since the last Council meeting.

Closing Exercises of King Edward Playground

The closing exercises of the King Edward playground on Wednesday afternoon, Aug. 30th, brought a wonderfully successful season to an end.

The girls, under the direction of Miss Dora Smith, supervisor, played a number of singing games: "Here Comes the King a-riding," "The Princess was so beautiful," "Did you ever see a Lassie?" "Lads and Lassies out a-walking," etc. The dancing games are always enjoyed and are very pretty to watch. A few were: "Sally went to the cabbage patch," "Come, let's be joyful," etc. Two graceful dances were: "Oats, peas and barley" and "In summer."

A feature enjoyed both by the children and the grown-up was the illustrated story, "The Three Bears," related and acted by the children.

A very pretty display of industrial work in birchback, cross-stitch, hemstitching, etc., was shown on a large screen, nailed to a tree, where all could see and admire it.

The boys' exercises were under the direction of Mr. Meserve and Mr. Roper, of the Y.M.C.A., and the usual sports, dear to a boy's heart, were indulged in.

The absence of Mr. Tillotson, the popular supervisor, was greatly regretted by both children and parents. Mr. Tillotson was obliged to leave a week ago to begin his duties as director of athletics at an important high school in Pittsburg.

It was gratifying to hear from many of the parents present that this playground has been a boon to the children of the district, and the hope was expressed that both supervisors might be able to continue next summer the work so well begun this year.

Seventy adult visitors, many of them parents, signed the visitors' book during the afternoon, and at least 650 children were present.

Over 500 regular attendants of the playground were given a long promised ice cream treat.

During the afternoon Mayor Duffus addressed the gathering, expressing his great interest in the work of the supervised playgrounds, and promising to do anything in his power to help the movement for more playgrounds.

A report of the closing of the Central School playground will appear early next week.

CASUALTIES AMONG DUCKS WERE LIGHT

September Morn Reverberated Along The Marshes With Rattle of Shot Guns

That the duck season opened yesterday with all the regular features was the information imparted by Capt. Harris and "Al" Young of the Geneva and other Rice Lake visitors this morning. From all accounts the number of hunters was as large as usual, especially in the lower feeding grounds; ducks appeared to be scarcer than last year and they were certainly no tamer. Mr. Ed. Young bagged six ducks in Riddell's bay, and "Al" had five to his credit. Some of the Gore's Landing boys ran more to mud hens, some getting as many as forty of them. A summary of the present conditions is that the ducks are sufficiently numerous if you can get within range of them. The Labour Day shoot is likely to be a big one, both below the city and above Chemong. Every shot gun that has been rusting throughout the summer will likely be oiled up tonight or to-morrow—whisper it not—to contribute to the September morn fusilade.

Naiad Towed 15,000 Feet of Cheese Box Logs From the Lakes

Mr. William Thompson's launch "Naiad," in charge of W. White, has towed a raft of elm logs from the Upper Lakes for Mr. Ernie Mann. There were some 15,000 feet in the float, and by a process of arithmetic it could be determined how many cheese boxes can be manufactured from this supply. The logs were, of course, towed through the canal.

WILL DANCE THE "TWO-TWO"

Coming Winter's Dance Say the United States Teachers

CHICAGO, Sept. 2.—If the prophecy of the dancing masters at the Blackstone Hotel comes true, everybody will be dancing the "two-two" this winter. The "two-two" is the dance adopted by the American National Association of Dancing Masters as its very own.

The "two-two" is danced to a syncopated rhythm. It is more a matter of new rhythm than of new steps and it is adaptable to almost any step that is now a part of ballroom dancing. The music is much the same as that used for the fox trot, except that it is a little more syncopated.

In dancing it, the man starts of with the left foot, making a long step to the count of —2, with a slight balance at the end of the step to give it the full time (Fig. 1); then a quick step with the right foot to the count of 3 (Fig. 2); then shift the balance to the right foot, draw the left up to it, count 4 (Fig. 3), making the count (1—2, 3, 4.)

The dancing masters believe it will be the most popular dance in a decade.

SWEDE APPARENTLY FEARS SEPT. IDES.

Three 'toots' in a week are a sure indication that Isaacson, the Swede, is counting the days until the 16th. And these are only the occasions on which he was arrested. It may be that he got away with a few sprees that didn't come to the attention of the police. This morning he paid $5.00 for being drunk aat the corner of Charlotte and George streets. At his present rate Isaacson is apparently determined to blow whatever money he has over the saloon bar and through police court fines.

Sunny Jim Wilson, is a blacklister, but that doesn't prevent him from obtaining liquor. He was drunk again yesterday, sad to relate, and remanded this morning until Sept. 8th.

A woman who is on the blacklist, was gathered in on Aylmer street yesterday afternoon. She had several bottles of beer, a cargo of whiskey and a black eye. She appears on the 8th with Sunny Jim.

"In time of trial," said the lecturer, "what brings us the greatest comfort?" "An acquittal," responded a low person who should never have been allowed to enter the hall.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Municipal Circles —Items of General Interest

A by-law authorizing the expenditure of twelve hundred dollars for the installation of an improved system of ventilation at the Collegiate Institute, was passed at last night's meeting of the City Council.

Voted Four Times.

The Council voted four times on the report of the Fire, Water and Light Committee. Each time a vote was taken one of the aldermen would get up and precipitate a discussion. According to parliamentary rules a measure that is once voted on and carried eliminates further discussion.

Light on Elm Street.

Mr. James J. Hickey appeared before the Council with a request for electric lighting service on Elm street. The Council assured Mr. Hickey that the matter was in the hands of the Utilities Commission and that the service would be installed as quickly as conditions would permit. The labour situation is responsible for much of the delay in matters of this kind.

Repairs on Reid Street.

According to Alderman Saunders, Reid street between London and Dublin street is badly in need of repairs. The matter will be looked into by the Board of Works Department.

Lights on Hunter Street.

Alderman Weir made an appeal for a couple of lights on the Hunter street bridge. Some ladies claim to have been insulted while crossing the connecting link between the Centre Ward and East City.

Northern Relief.

The matter of making a grant for the relief of the fire sufferers in Northern Ontario was brought up at last night's Council meeting. A resolution was passed authorizing as liberal a grant as possible. Mayor Duffus was of the opinion that the matter should be taken up by the Government. Some municipalities make a grant and others don't.

MR. SUNDAY SEES OPPOSITION HERE

EVANGELIST SAYS 'HIGH BROW' CRITICISM IN NEW YORK IS ATTEMPTING TO KILL HIS STYLE OF PREACHING.

Ocean Grove, N.J., Aug. 31.—Mr. "Billy" Sunday is getting ready for New York, he told a big audience in the auditorium here and he proposes to "battle to the last ditch there against the organized movement of high brow criticism designed to put my style of preaching out of business." He declared that he had learned of a movement to offset his kind of evangelism, and he asked the congregation to help him combat it.

Mr. Sunday seems to be having a hard time arousing enthusiasm here. His description of God's act in applying spittle to clay to heal the blind man did not help matters. Before he had finished this display members of the choir just back of him interrupted.

"Wait until I finish," he said, but when he had finished it was plain that the congregation was displeased.

Homer Rodeheaver, Mr. Sunday's choir leader, chided the auditorium congregation on the small amount of the collections yesterday. The 20,000 who attended the meetings during the day contributed $1200. There were several "trail-hitters."

new development of that most uncertain of all British problems—the Irish question.

THE "WHIPS."

There is one most ancient and most important institution which threatens to be thrown out of business by the war. Everybody knows the word "Whip" in our Parliamentary proceedings. The origin of the word is hard to trace; but I have a strong impression that it came from the days of Sir Robert Walpole who was one of the first of the really Parliamentary Ministers; who was also a great sportsman, and who would naturally apply to the proceedings and personages of the House of Commons a figure of speech drawn from the hunting field. Just as the whip on the hunting field keeps the hounds together, so the Parliamentary whip keeps watch and ward over the supporters of the Ministry. When you enter the lobby of the House of Commons your eye is caught by two short benches which are just inside the door through which every member has to enter the House—unless he be a Minister who has a special private entrance of his own. On these benches hit the Whips. It is their point of vantage, for they are able to tell who comes and who goes. They have a very strong organization behind them to help in this work. You see round the inner lobby by a corps of clerks with printed lists of the members of the House; and on these lists is checked off the name of every member as he comes and as he goes. There are besides two large offices with several rooms in which the Whips of the two great parties do their work. All kinds of machinery contrived to keep a close watch on the goings and comings and even on the resorts of the members. Most of them are on the telephone; and those who are really conscientious leave the telephone number of the place they are going to during the dinner hour. In short, no head of a military staff has means more complete for organizing and mobilizing forces than these men who are responsible for the attendance of members; for it is the attendance of members which decides the fate of bills and of Ministries.

A WATCHFUL EYE.

All this went on quite smoothly in the days of peace and of a Liberal Ministry; but with the Coalition Government an entire change came over the scene. The Tory whips used to confront the Liberals in the old days; one set of the two benches belonged to them, the other to the other side; and each whip addressed only the members of his own party. Personally, the whips were very civil to each other; but their civility did not prevent them from keeping a watchful eye on each other. These are tricks in the trade of the whips as in other trades. One of them, of course, is to keep studiously from the knowledge of the other the exact amount of their forces. There is a well-known story of the two old whips of predisturbance days who were always trying to outwit each other. One was George Glyn—later Lord Wolverton, a great banker— and the other day a genial but reactionary old Irishman called Colonel Taylor. One day after a great and narrow division the two were strolling in a friendly walk over Westminster Bridge. "Well," said the Liberal whip, "one of my men was dying in bed." "Ah," said Colonel Taylor, pointing to a funeral that was passing, "one of my men is in that coffin."

NOW CHANGED.

All this, of course, now changed; the Liberal whip in the old days always had the Tory whip opposite to him; nowadays you often see the "door," as the whips' department is summarily described, kept in turn by a Tory or a Liberal whip. It is sometimes startling to see an incorrigible and unteachable but charming old Irish Tory like Viscount Valentia humbly ask the narrowest Radical to come back after dinner so as to preserve the Government from a snap division; and it is equally a contradiction of all former conditions to see a strong Radical like Mr. Geoffrey Howard appeal to a good old Tory squire to come back and help the Government.

The Coalition in fact, like an earthquake, is so transforming the whole face of the political world that it is almost impossible to trace the old landmarks.

POWERFUL ARGUMENT.

While, thus, the task of the whips has been made comparatively easier than it was before, it has become in other respects much more difficult. A division has hitherto been regarded by the ordinary member of Parliament as the most sacred of his duties. The constituencies have also held the same opinion. Whenever a member came before a constituency for re-election his political opponents always looked up the record of his divisions and if it should turn out to be bad, it was used as a very powerful argument against his re-election. As a rule, the member of Parliament performs this duty, accordingly, with great conscientiousness; but there have been extraordinary exceptions. The House of Commons, consisting of so large a body of men as 670, is really more of a mob than of a deliberative assembly, and in such a gathering there must be all sorts and conditions of men. Things were worse when I first entered parliament than they are now, for at that time there was no means by which you could get rid of certain members, as no member of Parliament is allowed to resign; he must accept an office of profit under the Crown, and the usual form, as everybody knows, is that he accepts the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds, an office at one time which had duties, and emoluments, but has now become a mere name. There was one man whom a member of Parliament became insane within a short time after his entry to the House, and being insane his signature to any document could not be accepted; with the result that for many years, while the member was locked up in an asylum, the constituency had to remain unrepresented. New provisions were made which prevented the recurrence of that state of things; but there are idle and selfish men in every large body, and plenty of men get into Parliament and fail to take much further notice of the assembly. I remember meeting a young member of Parliament of aristocratic family in a public park; he had not put his foot in the Chamber for two or three years. He asked me with a smile if the old ship was still going! But this, as I have said, is exceptional. I have known men travel three or four days, sometimes a week on end, in order to record a vote. Sometimes it was quite common in the old days for a man in the middle of a cure at Carlsbad or Marienbad to rush off at his whip's appeal. I have seen men frequently brought into the House on chairs, because they were too ill to come to vote; and some of them have then had to be wheeled back to the nursing home, and some died within a few hours of this last effort to discharge their duties, on account of the excitement.

It is to me a subject of constant wonder and admiration to see a member of men with large fortunes, comfortable homes and great businesses, who travel regularly every week-end, backwards and forward to their cities rather than lose a single division. I remember during the Home Rule struggle that a member confined to bed during an important by-election in his own constituency, wrote to me that he would come up to cast a vote for Home Rule even though he had to be brought there on a stretcher.

PROCEDURE HAS CHANGED.

The Coalition Ministry has changed all this. In the first place nobody now can be got to realize that the Ministry is ever in danger. They take it for granted that as their opponents are few and far between, and as the main bulk of the rank and file of both parties are equally interested in maintaining the Government in power, a division that will put them out of office must be regarded as a creation or a bogey of the active imagination of whips. People, besides, have got accustomed to the much saner and healthier hours which the Coalition and the war have brought into the House of Commons. During the first six years I was a member of the House I was always quite satisfied if I got to bed at 4 o'clock. Nowadays it is rarely that the House sits beyond eight or nine. In old days the dining rooms of the House of Commons used to contain a fair number of men; nowadays most men think it a grievance if they cannot take dinner at home. This relaxation of habit and of discipline has come simultaneously with a growing lack of confidence in the Government. I do not propose to discuss whether this lack of confidence is well founded or not. Any Ministry in war time that does not bring big and prompt victories becomes discredited. An unsuccessful battle or a bad defeat in the field has more influence on the votes of the Chamber now than a speech or any political consideration, and these are things that after all Ministers cannot control. It may be that the turn of the tide which has come on all the fronts may help to restore the prestige of the Ministers within the next month or two, but for the moment undoubtedly their stock is very low. They are held accountable for any little mishap or any grievance. Conscription, of course, has brought a plentiful crop of these grievances, because it is impossible to toothcomb a whole nation without inflicting many grievances and committing many mistakes.

For instance, numberless cases of men hopelessly unfit by the state of their health for active service have been dragged from their work and undergone great suffering. Sometimes a man is summoned away from the seaside or the country, where he is staying with his wife and children, only to be told when he reports himself to the military authorities that it is a mistake and what is wanted is an other man of the same name!

This brings me back to the Whips' department. They find it now almost impossible to get members of Parliament back to the old habits of punctuality and discipline. Members will insist on going home to dinner and equally insist on not returning. Attendance at the House of Commons, after 8 or 9, is going down to vanishing point. There is scarcely a night between nine and ten, when the House sits so late, that the Government could not be defeated.

Interesting Features At Toronto Exhibition

GREAT BISCUIT DISPLAY.

"Biscuit for Every Taste."

When you are talking of things good to eat, tasty, delicious, and satisfying, you naturally come around to the proverb "A Biscuit for Every Taste," and, of course, everybody at once thinks then of the greatest biscuits in the world—Christie, Brown & Company, Toronto.

In the Manufacturers' Building, and on the main aisle, may be seen the exhibit of Christie, Brown and Company, this year, and in the windows of their miniature store are shown samples of every size and shape of biscuit known, as well as cakes and puddings, done up in dainty packages.

Those in charge of the display are courteous, and while you are visiting the world's great annual fair, do not fail to drop in, and see the biscuit exhibit. You will never forget the variety, and always after your pantry will be well supplied with delicate biscuits.

Just because you have heard the words "Christie's Biscuits" all your life do not allow that to stop you from seeing and learning.

HONEST MERCHANDIZING.

When a merchant weighs your purchase on a TOLEDO SCALE you are sure of Honest Weight, as there are No Springs or other contrivances to cause incorrect weight.

The Exhibits in the Manufacturers' Building and also in the Machinery Hall have again demonstrated their superiority over all others. More Toledo Scales are built in Canada by Canadian workmen than all other computing scales companies combined.

MEALS AT EXHIBITION

Thompson's Quick Lunch and Dining Hall are proving as popular as in the past years. Bird's Dining Hall will not be open this year, but will be back again after the war. In the meantime, they recommend their many patrons to patronise Thompson's until they return. Thompson has five places. Remember the name —Thompson.

"TROJAN" ELECTRIC WASHER.

Every housewife is interested in the exhibit of "Trojan" Electric Washers, shown in the Industrial Building by McDonald and Wilson of 12 Queen Street, East, Toronto. The "Trojan" demonstration proves that an average family wash can be done with practically no work and at an expense of about one cent for electricity. No longer need wash-day upset the whole house and tire out the housekeeper. Anyone unable to get to the Exhibition to see the demonstration can get full information and illustrated literature by writing to McDonald and Wilson, the manufacturers.

One of the most popular resorts on the ground is the Independent Order of Foresters headquarters, where they have erected a magnificent tent, beautifully furnished and decorated with palms and flowers, and where every comfort is offered to the many Foresters, friends and visitors whom they will receive during the two weeks of the Fair. This will be a much sought-after spot, as there are so very few places of rest.

When visiting the tent you will be received by G. A. Mitchell, A.S.C.R., assisted by the two able Deputy Supreme Chief Rangers, Brothers Fellman and Harvey Lloyd. A most attractive calendar has been prepared for distribution, and several other novelties will be given to all visitors. It will be well worth while for the many admirers of this great Order to make a call at this tent and learn more about the great Fraternal work the I.O.F. are doing, and to listen to the stories they tell with reference to caring for the orphans—the little children who have lost their mothers and fathers, and also the great work they are doing in their sanatoriums in treating their members who are afflicted with tuberculosis.

NEWCOMBE PIANOS.

Standing out among the piano exhibits of the Exhibition of 1916 are those of the Newcombe Piano Company, Ltd., in the Manufacturers' Building. This firm supplied a piano to the late Queen Victoria, but still more indicative of their standing in the trade is the fact that they hold medals won in open competition in New Orleans in 1884 and 1885, in London, Eng., in 1886, in Chicago in 1893, in Paris in 1900, and in Jamestown, Va., 1907. Their claim to consideration is that they put the same workmanship and finish into the run of the pianos as in the prize-winners. They have the only piano in Canada equipped with the patent tension rods at the back, and are also showing the latest Player-piano known to the trade.

Anyone unable to visit the Exhibition should write to Head Office of the Newcombe Piano Co., at 359 Yonge street, Toronto, for illustrated catalogues of pianos and players, or call upon the nearest representative of this old established company.

HAIR NEEDS AT THE PEMBER STORE.

Exhibition visitors will find, at the Pember Store, 129 Yonge street, Transformations of excellent quality and design; "La Natural" with side or centre part; Pompadours, Waves, and Switches of supreme excellence; and all at reasonable prices.

TOUPEES FOR MEN.

The Toupee made by W. T. Pember for men who wish to renew their youth and protect their health are the closest indications of the natural that can be produced. Light in weight, reasonable prices, and perfect satisfaction. W. T. Pember, 129 Yonge Street, Toronto.

WOUNDED SOLDIER SENTENCED TO JAIL

ATTORNEY-GENERAL AUTHORIZES LIBERATION THAT HE MAY ATTEND RECEPTION.

The "boys" in a western Ontario city were apparently exceedingly good to a war-scarred returned soldier, with the result that the latter as the result of his imbibing too freely landed himself in court and was sentenced to thirty days in jail. Last night a reception was held in the city in the honor of returned soldiers and before the ceremony thoughts fastened on the unfortunate victim who was doing "time" while the band was playing outside. Accordingly an effort was set on foot to have the prisoner, who had valorously served his country, released, and the Attorney-General who was communicated with without any hesitation took the humane view and authorised the soldier's liberation.

GERMANS USING PEWTER FOR MOSING OF SHELLS

LT. R. C. EDMUNDS BRINGS INTERESTING SOUVENIRS TO HUNTSVILLE.

Huntsville, Sept. 1.—Lt. R. C. Edmunds is here from the front. He has brought with him an interesting series of battle front souvenirs, including a German steel helmet, gas respirator and an assortment of shell parts. A significant feature of the display is the new pewter-nosed shell, which the Lieutenant says was being freely used by the Germans when he left France. It was taking the place of the steel and brass nosed shells and is evidently the result of necessary economy in the use of the harder and more precious metals.

Lieut. Edmunds is a Huntsville boy who gave up a position at the Ottawa Mint to enlist as a private. His promotion was earned in the trenches. He was wounded in eight places by shrapnel and is home on furlough. Mrs. Edmunds accompanies him.

CHAPLAIN MAJOR DAVIDSON'S FAREWELL GREETING TO MEN OF THE 93RD BATTALION

The following is a copy of the "farewell greeting" to each of the officers, non-coms., and men of the 93rd Battalion," sent by Chaplain Major Davidson on the occasion of his leaving the battalion pursuant to his appointment as chaplain to the Ontario Military Hospital, Orpington, Kent. It is worth reproducing as an evidence of Rev. Canon Davidson's sense of responsibility of his office and of his interest in the soldiers, individually. Its injunctions and teachings can also be read and heeded by us at home, who take an interest in our soldier lads in their time of stress and trial, at a time when the immanent menace of death invests spiritual interests with a solemn significance.

My Comrades:

In view of approaching removal from you as your Chaplain I take this means of saying a few farewell words on important matters, which come straight from my heart and which will, I hope, reach yours.

As soldiers we loyally, though regretfully, accept calls which seem likely to break up for the present our close comradeship as fellow members of the 93rd, the distinctive Regiment of our beloved home city of Peterborough. We have given ourselves up to serve the Empire and we therefore give unquestioning obedience to all orders considered necessary to promote its welfare. But, remember, that wherever we may be we shall still be representative Peterborough men and Canadians with the honour of our home and country to maintain and the support of our home people behind us. Let us see to it that up to the very end of the campaign we all measure up to these and other responsibilities.

This calls not only for efficiency in drill and musketry, but quite as much for the systematic practical application of Religion for the healthy development of our character and manhood.

The new and great experience through which we are passing will tend to degrade and brutalise us unless we set ourselves steadily to live God's kind of life and to be Christians and gentlemen. We are called out at 20th Century Knights, not only to fight well, but also to live clean, healthy, self-respecting lives.

To this end make a strong determined stand against three sins by which Satan would enfeeble and destroy the bodies, minds and souls of soldiers—Impurity, Drunkenness and Profanity. Do not laugh at or speak lightly of these degrading and defiling habits through which the deluded victims become coarse and are apt gradualy to lose their health, manhood and Religion. If men could see the real nature and the terrible results of these sins, especially immorality, they would shrink from them with horror and loathing.

This ought not to be hard for you members of the 93rd after the splendid start which you have made as upright, sober and moral men. Remember your home city where near your lines women were always safe day or night and drunkenness was almost unknown. Remember your mothers, your sisters, your wives and your honour! In the face of far stronger temptations now than have ever threatened you before prove your manhood and your Religion. Whatever others may do, keep yourself up and stand for the right so that you may return made and not marred by this campaign.

And there may be times when you ought good humoredly but firmly to object to the thoughtless defiling of your tent by filth or profanity. You have the right to decent surroundings and should stand up for it as an act of duty—to others as well as yourself. All Officers and N.C.O.'s have a great responsibility here.

But religion does not only deal with healthful warnings and prohibitions, but also with privileged duties towards God and man. From your life and actions you testify that you are a loyal soldier of the King. Is there a loyal soldier of the King. Is there anything distinctive about you showing that you are also a loyal soldier of God? Are you obeying His orders and in any kind of daily communion with Him?

Face this great matter and think out for yourself how you can get His forgiving love and use His divine power which are surely necessary in this strange, rough life of ours in camp and field. Get in your prayers sometime and somewhere each day. Read even a few verses from your New Testament, as many of you pledged yourselves to do.

Throw your hearts into all Services, and especially into the Saviour's Own Service of Holy Communion, which you can do very simply, just because the Lord asks you and all men to remember Him in this way. Even if you have not done this before, do it now, at this crisis in your life.

We may try to put away thoughts of the future, but there it is, daily coming nearer. In that time of strain and stress little will be possible. Now is the precious opportunity for some sane preparation. To "Get Right with God," and be ready for Him, either in His Communion Service and life here or in the next world (into which we may step so suddenly) three great central things are necessary—Repentance and Faith towards God, and forgiving Love towards man. Get yourself now into these lines of life with desires set towards God, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. It will perhaps be easiest to think of, and speak to the Saviour Jesus Christ. Who is "the Way, the Truth and the Life." Get His blessed Form before you, dying on the Cross and now living in glory. Tell Him of your desires and your gratitude for His love. Simply believe that His saving power is being brought to bear upon you, and in that power step out in faith to live better His kind of life, yielding yourself up to Him Who has bought you with His own Blood and has a rightful claim on your loyal, loving allegiance.

These are great Life-subjects, and perhaps you will look over them again at your leisure and see to what extent you can practically apply them.

In conclusion I would urge you to cultivate personal relations with Chaplains, either your own or any one who may be near you. Take them into your confidence. Use their services. Tell them about yourself, and give them a chance to help you. A doctor has little chance to cure the bodies of his patients unless they inform him of their symptoms.

Be sure to write home, if only a card, at least once a week, and sometimes to your own clergyman. Have you made a Will? This sensible provision won't make you die any sooner.

I look forward to some future opportunity of meeting you again, and would be thankful if you would take the trouble to write to me or otherwise let me know your opinion concerning the subjects dealt with in this letter.

Hoping that, though separated, we shall still think often of one another as comrades and friends, and assuring you of my unfailing interest in your welfare.

Yours Faithfully,
J. C. Davidson.

General Dragomiroff Nearly Lost His Legs

Doctors may err, even in the stillness of the sick room. How much more, then, are they likely to make mistakes in the uproar of the battle-field. That this is so is shown by the experience of the famous Russian General Dragomiroff, who once narrowly escaping losing both legs. He commanded a division during the Russo-Turkish war, and fell in the fighting at the Shipka Pass, wounded in several places. He was carried unconscious to a field hospital, and came to himself just as the doctors were about to amputate both legs.

Dragomiroff said he would rather take his chances of dying. Off they persisted. Then he drew a revolver and swore he would blow out the brains of the first man who tried to use a lancet on him. He had his way, but for over a week he held that revolver tightly clenched in his hand, fearing that the surgeons would yet play a trick on him. At night he made his servant stand on guard armed with a rifle. He recovered after a few weeks' illness, and the only permanent ill-effect was a slight limp. Needless to say, he afterwards regarded the army surgeon as one of the soldier's worst foes.

MISS MASARYK STILL PRISONER IN PRAGUE

Daughter of American Has Not Been Released as Reported, Her Father Says

LONDON, Sept. 2.—In spite of Baron Zwiedineck's assertions, Miss Masaryk, whose mother was a New Yorker, is still in prison in Prague. She has been there since last November, but no formal charges have been preferred against her, and no date has been set for her trial. Her imprisonment, according to her friends, is part of the policy of repression and terrorism adopted by the Austrian Government toward the Bohemians.

The captive's father, Professor Thomas G. Masaryk, is one of the most stalwart champions of Bohemian nationality, and for years was a Deputy in the Austrian Parliament. He incurred the enmity of Vienna by his attacks on the treatment of the Southern Slavs, and at the Friedjung trial of December, 1909, exposed the forgeries of the Austro-Hungarian Embassy in Belgrade upon which Count Aehrenthal, the Austrian Foreign Minister, based the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Dr. Masaryk married the daughter of Rodolphe Garrigue, the founder of the Germania Trust Company of New York, and Mrs. Masaryk is still living in Prague. The professor held for years the chair of philosophy at the Czech University in that city, but found it advisable to flee in the early months of the war. He is now at the head of the School of Slavonic Studies in the University of London.

"The only reason I can imagine why my daughter should be arrested," the professor said yesterday, "was because she sent me a few books from my library while I was in Switzerland."

"Were there any political books among them?"

"Only those of a standard and philosophical character. There were no revolutionary works."

"Has Miss Masaryk taken part in any political propaganda?"

"Absolutely not. She was a history teacher in what you might term a high school, and her only activity out side of that was in humanitarian work. No charge has ever been filed against her, and in spite of what Zwiedineck may say, we have no idea when her trial will be. She has been imprisoned according to the regular Austrian policy of terrorism."

"Has anything been done to Mrs. Masaryk?"

"No. She is American-born."

Professor Masaryk described the Bohemians as quite prepared to separate from Austria-Hungary. They are a Slav race and thoroughly Slav in sympathy, and the professor suggested that this might partly explain the huge number of prisoners the Russian armies have captured. There are already Bohemian legions fighting for the French and Russians.

Serious Consequences Of Rabid Dog's Bite

St. Thomas, September 2.—George Dynes, blacksmith, of Southwold Station, is in a critical condition here as the result of a bite several weeks ago from a dog said to have been suffering from rabies.

Dynes was given the Pasteur treatment at Toronto, and after returning home, his arm began to swell. It is now stony hard. In an interview to-day with a London specialist Dynes was told that he may have to have his arm amputated to prevent the spread of the disease over his entire body.

Lawn Bowling Tournament Has Reached the Finals

Another Tournament Will Commence on Monday, September 11th—Draw Will Be Posted in the Club House

Maynecord Wins Singles Competition.

The tournament for the singles contest was finished last night, Maynecord winning out. Score: Maynecord 13, McCusker 9.

The Club is putting on a great tournament, to begin on September 11. All the members of the Club will be entered and the draw will be posted in the Club House on Tuesday next.

The contesting rinks will be formed from a jumble draw. All names irrespective of rank will be mixed and drawn to form rinks.

In all the previous contests this season there has been only one prize allotted to each contest, so that only the winning rink won a trophy.

This time there will be prizes for the first and second primaries, and also for the first, second and third consolation winners. Each member of the first five rinks will be presented with prizes.

The annual banquet will be held at the Empress Hotel on the second Thursday in October.

On that occasion all the prizes will be presented to the winners, including the season's regular tournaments and also the big Fall tournament on Sept. 11.

Japanese Coaling Girls Replenish Ships' Bunkers

An interesting sight in the harbour of Nagasaki, Japan, is the coaling, done entirely by girls. Big coal barges bear down upon a ship as it approaches the shore, and as soon as it comes to anchor a rough ladder is placed between the vessel and the foremost barge. On each rung a girl takes her place. Men in the barge quickly shovel the coal into shallow baskets holding half a bushel each, to the sound of a monotonous chant, and these baskets then pass from hand to hand up the living ladder with marvellous celerity. Each girl seizes one and swings it straight up in front of her, above her head, where it is caught by the next girl.

Down a second ladder, likewise packed with girls, the empty baskets pass in similar manner back into the barge to be refilled. Barge after barge is emptied in this way. The monotonous chanting never ceases; the living elevator goes on hour after hour, with its never-ending stream of baskets, until the last bunker is full, when the ladders disappear as if by magic and the ship is ready to proceed on her voyage.

A big mail steamer will "bunker" 2,300 tons of coal in six and a half hours, an average of 353 3-4 tons per hour—an almost incredible record.

years old. A graveyard is right beside it and we saw tombstones one hundred and fifty years old, and a lot of other things I'll write about next time as I haven't much time this evening, the sun is down and it is getting dark.

Dear mother, as the twilight falls I always think of you and wonder how the old folks are so far away from me. I wonder how the old place looks since duty called me away, and how my sisters are getting on and my little brother, my thoughts are often on them. I expect they are growing fine. Tell them when I have a little more time I will drop them a card. And dear old dad. My dear old man, how I would like to grip his hand. And I sometimes dream I am back again in the far off dear home-land. Remember me to my working mates, to chums of my school-boy days, and just a word to all old friends in my home so far away. I think I will close Cheer up. I shall be home again if the good Lord is willing. If not, in heaven we will meet, as I am doing my best to serve Him. God be with you till we meet again. Good-bye and kisses to all.

The Kingston Whig says: Of the many interesting things about Fort Henry Internment Camp one is the fact that one prisoner has really gone back to the primitive man stage. He is the head gardener and is always puttering away in his little garden. The German "kultur" is manifested by his not having shaved since being captured and by his wearing only a swimming trunk during the summer. His body and legs and arms are tanned almost black, and his chest is covered by a jet black beard. He digs in the garden, and now never hesitates in forcing a spade into the ground by the pressure of his bare foot. The case is rather an interesting one, as the fellow is quite sane and is simply an "open air enthusiast."

THE FLEECING OF MORRISON

Paid $94,000 to Search for $25,000 Worth of Stolen Bonds.

CHICAGO, Sept. 1.—One instance of the alleged fleecing of Edward W. Morrison, recluse millionaire, out of hundreds of thousands of dollars was revealed by Morrison himself on the witness stand before Federal Judge Landis yesterday. Morrison admitted he had paid nearly $94,000 to a man named Douglas, whose first name he didn't know, to go to Europe and search for $25,000 worth of bonds supposedly from Morrison.

Morrison said John Sommers, a jeweller, who is supposed to have been the aged millionaire's companion on entertainment trips, introduced him to Douglas. Judge Landis summoned Sommers into court to explain.
